Garage doors that have heretofore been carelessly closed at night, have been provided with strong padlocks.

CONVICT SHOT AS ANOTHER RESISTS

Riots at Ft. Madison Result in Death of One Convict and Injury to Guard.

Fort Madison, Ia., Sept. 22.—Trouble in the Iowa state penitentiary early Wednesday resulted in the death of an inmate, George G. Bruce, No. 10820, and the serious injury of Deputy Warden James S. Taylor.

At 6:55 o'clock Inmate Hunter, No. 10961, refused to work, and Deputy Warden Taylor ordered Guard W. G Enderle to put the man in solitary confinement.

The guard took the convict to the door of the hole, and when reaching for his keys the prisoner grabbed the guard's cane and rushed at him (Enderle). Guard Jim Lowe came on the scene at this moment and Enderle told him to get the deputy. Lowe went for the deputy, who came at once.

Another inmate, Will Johnson, colored, No. 11087, evidently had witnessed the trouble from the chapel, and as Deputy Taylor came up to Guard Enderle and his charge he jumped at the deputy, striking him over the left eye and nose with a heavy "2x2" square oak club about four feet in length. Guard Enderle at once shot at the negro, Johnson, but missed him, the shot striking and killing Convict George W Bruce, who was in a tent 15 feet away

George Bruce, No. 10820, the dead convict, was sent to the penitentiary from Hardin county to serve a 10-year sentence for larceny

Will Johnson, colored, No. 11087, is serving a 30-year sentence for murderous assault on a guard at Anamosa at a time when he was serving a five-year larceny term. His correct name is Humphrey Alexander a Georgia negro.

NEAL JONES NOW MANAGING EDITOR OF NEW YORK PAPER

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 22 Twelve years ago Neal Jones took a position as reporter on the Des Moines Register and Leader staff, after having served an apprenticeship in newspaper work during his university course at Iowa City and as editor of the Muscatine News-Tribune.

Tuesday he stopped in Des Moines for a day's visit. He is on his way to New York city to become managing editor of the New York Tribune.

Mr Jones made a name for himself on the Register and Leader by his clever feature stories. After leaving this newspaper, he worked for the Capital and the News, and then became city clerk of Des Moines, but the inclination toward journalism was stronger than politics.

Mr Jones went from Des Moines to the Cleveland Press, and later became managing editor of the Omaha Daily News He resigns his position with the latter paper to go to New York.

As managing editor of the Tribune he will be in direct charge of all editorial departments except the editorial page Gil Harrison, of Sioux City is the father of Mrs. Jones.

WEATHER FAVORABLE FOR CORN MATURING

Local Damage Done to Crops in Lowlands Only—Canning Factories Rush Orders.

Des Moines, Sept. 21—The week was favorable for rushing the corn crop toward maturity. The temperature was considerably below the normal on the first day, but since then dry, warm weather has prevailed. The frost on the 11th did considerable damage in the northeastern counties, but the first estimates as to the extent of damage were evidently overdrawn.

There is no doubt, however but what the damage was severe in certain localities, especially along streams and in many low places, but damage was prevented in some of the river and creek valleys by fog, which prevailed on that morning. There was little or no injury on uplands, and while 30 or 40 per cent of the corn in the northeastern counties was frosted, not more than 5 per cent of it will be unmerchantable. The frost also did some damage to late potatoes, garden truck, buckwheat and beans. Silo filling has begun and some corn has been cut for fodder

Canning factories are running to full capacity on sweet corn, which is yielding about three tons per acre. Rapid progress is being made in preparing ground for fall wheat and some wheat has been sown Fall varieties of apples are being harvested with fairly good yields More rain would be beneficial for pastures and to keep the ground in condition for plowing

HOME OF GILBERT MAYOR IS ENTERED BY BURGLARS

Ames, Ia, Sept 21—A series of three robberies has thrown a burglar scare into the town of Gilbert, near here Shortly after midnight three homes, including the residence of John Hansman mayor of the village, were entered, though little loot was taken When the masked burglar entered the home of a merchant, who had in the room $200, his business receipts for Saturday, loud screams from his wife frightened away the intruder, who escaped in an automobile. In one of the homes the only article taken by the burglar was a wedding ring In the other he secured a purse containing $3.

As President Sought Peace.

...e evidence of Count Von Bern...'s personal activities in connec... with German propaganda here ...the date of President Wilson's ...ress to congress, January 22, re... his appeal to the warring na... to enter into peace negotiations. ...the same time, the president was ...ing congress, apparently, Count ...Bernstorff was appealing to his government for fund with which to influence congressional action.

It was not the first time, apparently, that Count Von Bernstorff had sought to influence congressional action, the manner in which the money used for this purpose was expended the previous instance and the individuals carrying out the propaganda though not disclosed.

They presumed at the state department today, officials of the department of justice who have had under investigation for more than three years has been conducting a secret service of German activities in this country.

Reports Lead to Count.

Records of the department today are overflowing with reports from hundreds of agents concerning German intrigues here many of which led to the German embassy and some of which resulted in the recall at President Wilson's request of Captains Boy Ed and Von Papen, the German naval and military attaches.

Up to this time Boy Ed and Von Papen had appeared to be the master minds of German propaganda here. Intimations that German plots and intrigues were directed not by them but by Count von Bernstorff with the full approval of Berlin, heretofore had been met by officials with silence. For months past however, there have been many indications that the American government had established Bernstorff's direct connection with much of the German secret work conducted here, and that there was ample basis for a request for his recall months before the diplomatic break with Germany.

Supervised Spies' Work.

Up to the time of Boy Ed's and Von Papen's recall Von Bernstorff apparently, for diplomatic reasons had sought to remain clear personally of connections with the great volume of pro-German activities conducted here by his attaches. From disclosures concerning Boy Ed's and Von Papen's manifold activities officials apparently obtained the impression that Von Bernstorff, in most instances, had left the conduct of German propaganda in the hands of his subordinates with only casual supervision of their activities if any.

Intimations have been more or less frequent, however at trials and other proceedings instituted against pro German agents in this country that von Bernstorff, had at least a general knowledge of the work they were conducting. In most instances this knowledge would appear to be only of a general nature. In a few cases leads pointing toward his personal knowledge of specific instances of German violations of American neutrality were not publicly developed. The government's purpose in not following these leads with public disclosure was to permit of closer examination into the ambassador's actual participation in them.

Peace Societies Suspected.

The suggestion was made that by "organization" the ambassador might have meant any one of the different so-called peace societies that were active at that time but it was learned that statement officials do not know what the ambassador did mean. It was assumed, however that he referred to an organization he had set up, although officials were inclined to believe that the method of influencing was the using of pacifists to rake out the chestnuts rather than to any direct subordination of congressmen.

At least one of the most active organizations flooded Washington with telegrams just prior to the war and during the days immediately following the break in relations, calculated to influence congressmen to vote against any measure looking to war with Germany. It always has been assumed that Teutonic agents were largely responsible for these activities.

Secretary Lansing adhered to his determination not to discuss the latest disclosure and refused to reveal the manner in which the message to Berlin came into the hand of the government. While the United States was one of the neutrals, certain privileges had been extended to the German embassy in the transmission of messages, but only after their contents had been made known.

Sent In Irregular Way.

"No this was not one that passed through this government's channels of communication," was the smiling reply of an official at the state department when it was suggested that Ambassador Bernstorff might have added to his duplicity the irony of using the United States as a transmitter of the message. It is known that the message reached Berlin but whether the German foreign office ever was able to get a reply to America is not known. It was indicated that it came into possession of the state department some time after it was sent perhaps after the break in relations and possibly after the declaration of war. It was pointed out that knowledge of the ambassador's action at the time it was taken would have precipitated more immediate action, but the suggestion was answered by the intimation that the mass of evidence being gathered then was of such a character that it might not have been considered necessary or opportune to give undue importance then to a knowledge of the ambassador's duplicity.

Reference to "former occasions" on which the ambassador had asked for and used money in influencing congress is in line with other evidence now in possession of the state department, showing the extent to which the German government had gone in building up an organization for propaganda and espionage.

Little surprise over the disclosures was manifested at the capital.

"In view of the fact that charges of large expenditures of money in German propaganda have not been denied," said Senator Reed, "this new evidence is cumulative. The money evidently was spent in propaganda."

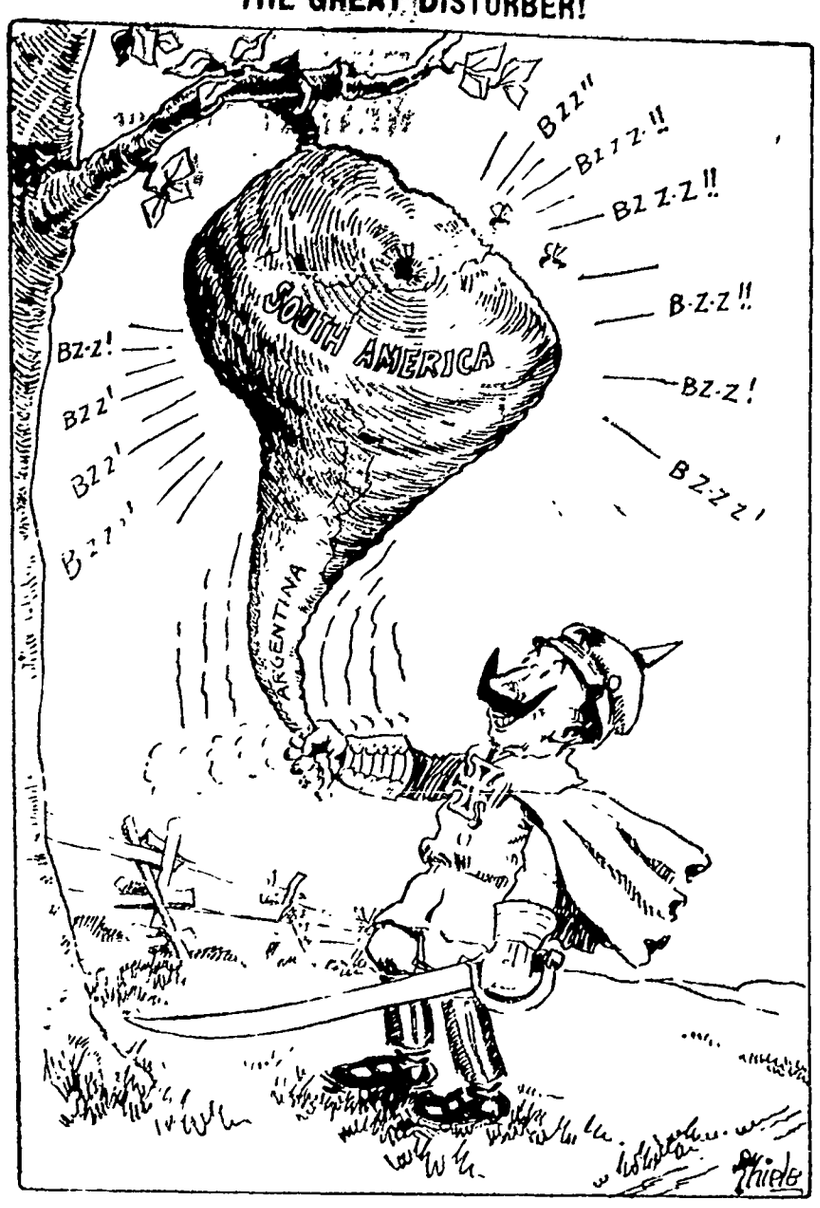
RUSS WOMEN TROOPS ATTACK COMMANDER

Riot Follows When They Resent Acts of Heroine Butchkareff, Who Organized Them.

Petrograd Thursday Sept 20—A small riot occurred today in the ranks of the woman's battalion drilling at Moscow and it resulted in an attack by the girls upon Vera Butchkareff the twice-wounded girl officer who initiated the woman suffrage soldier organizations. According to the Birse Gazette an infantryman rescued Commander Butchkareff after some rough handling from the infuriated girls who resented some acts of their leader not exactly defined.

As a result of the affair most of the girls will be sent home and only 250 will be permitted to go to the front.

THE GREAT DISTURBER!



KELLY MAY HAVE IMAGINED CRIME

Alienist Testifies Minister Was Mentally Unbalanced and Might Fail to Differentiate.

Red Oak Ia Sept 22 Evidence showing that Rev Lyn George J Kelly is a paranoiac and might imagine that he committed such a crime as the Villisca ax murders was produced in the murder trial at Red Oak today.

Dr A W Fitzsimmons, of Omaha, an alienist is now on the stand for the defense. Dr Fitzsimmons treated Kelly a year after the Villisca tragedy at which time the minister was attending the theological seminary in Omaha. The alienist said a paranoiac might not be able to discriminate between an act which he had himself committed and one attributed to him by others.

On cross examination, the doctor admitted that a paranoiac might labor under the delusion that he had a mission to perform. He admitted that such persons have been known to believe they heard voices and commands.

Heard No Conversation.

The defense scored a point today when Charles Pontle, Burlington conductor on the train which conveyed Kelly from Villisca to Macedonia on the morning of the murder, testified he heard no discussion of the Villisca tragedy in the coaches. He did not remember of seeing Kelly on the train and declared he heard no loud or excitable talking sufficient to attract his attention to any particular person.

Two witnesses for the state, who claim to have been on that train on the morning of June 10, 1912, Mr and Mrs H Simons, testified Kelly was talking loudly about the ax murder.

The defense points out that had Kelly been talking of the tragedy, the conductor would have either observed him, or would have heard the news when it was repeated by passengers.

The defense claims the conversation took place one week later. The conductor said he did not hear of the murder until that afternoon.

Just before adjournment, the defense called the first of a number of witnesses who are prepared to tell of seeing Albert Jones, son of ex-Senator F F Jones, and Bert McCall driving south from Villisca at high speed early on the morning of June 10.

Calls for Outline.

Before the first witness, Frank Archer jr, of Omaha was permitted to testify, the court announced the defense must present a written outline of such evidence to permit an intelligent ruling on its relevancy. Archer says he will testify that about 5 a m. on the morning of June 10, he met Albert Jones and Bert McCall on a road north of Villisca with a bulky object covered over with a blanket.

Detective Wilkerson, who has been investigating the ax murders for three years, has always contended that the ax man was spirited away from the Charnel house in an automobile.

The court room was jammed to capacity today. Examination of witnesses was conducted by Judge Sutton, during the early stages, while Attorney W E Mitchell was closeted with Mrs. Kelly and Detective Wilkerson in an ante-room.

John Montgomery, father of Mrs. Joe Moore, testified that his daughter had always kept the bacon supply in a closet of the room in which the Stillinger girls were found.

Question of Bacon.

On the morning of the murder, a small piece of bacon, wrapped in a flour sack was found at the foot of the bed upon which was found the corpses of the Stillinger girls.

The state has contended that Kelly got this bacon from a refrigerator and expects to produce witnesses to show that at every place where Kelly has been incarcerated he has secreted bits of meat in his cell.

Two witnesses testified that the blood spots on the left limb of the oldest Stillinger girl, appeared to be underneath the skin and was, "the kind of a spot which could be found on any dead body."

The state has contended the spot in question was a blood smear caused by the murderer seizing his victim and has claimed this points to the fact that the ax man was a sexual pervert.

SLACKER AID CUTS THROAT

Enid, Okla., Sept. 22—The story of the organization of the "Jones family," its affiliation with the Working Class union and I. W. W. and connections through a Chicago office with German agents, was told here late yesterday at the trial of 11 members of the "Jones family" from Pottawatomie and Cleveland counties by a witness named Holmes who claimed to have been present as a government agent at the organization's first meeting.

At this meeting, Holmes said, the American flag was torn to shreds and called a "filthy rag."

While waiting to testify as the next witness, J C. Hayshod, about 60 years old attempted to commit suicide by slashing his throat. Bystanders overpowered him but not until he had succeeded in partially severing his jugular vein.

AMERICAN ENGINEERS ATTACKED BY GERMANS

Regiment Taking Supplies to French Fired Upon by Airmen With Machine Guns.

By the Associated Press.

American Training Camp in France, (Thursday), Sept. 20.—By day and night the men of the American regiment of engineers which has taken over an important line of strategic railways, are putting tons upon tons of ammunition and other supplies to the French army units operating against the Germans.

Within the past few nights a heavy train of supplies, hurrying toward the front, was attacked by several enemy planes. None of the bombs came dangerously close, but every time the fire box of the engine was opened for stoking, the planes swooped down upon the train and spattered it with steel jacketed bullets.

The fire got so hot that eventually the train was stopped, the crew taking refuge beneath the engine. Relating their experience afterward, these trainmen rather "swanked" about it over their inexperienced brothers.

CARDINAL MERCIER HOOTED; RIOTS FOLLOW

Amsterdam, Sept, 22 —According to the Handelsblad, while Cardinal Mercier, the primate of Belgium, was going to the cathedral at Antwerp in full pontifical dress last Sunday he was hooted and hissed by a group of Flemish and anti-French agitators which was in the crowd cheering him. A riot resulted and the police interfered with drawn swords. Later as the cardinal was leaving the cathedral, rioting again broke out. Stones were thrown and sticks were used.

BAVARIAN KING SENDS JEWELS OUT FOR SALE

Amsterdam, Sept. 20.—The king of Bavaria has sent pearls to the value of 500,000 marks to neutral countries for sale, according to the Berlin Anzeiger.

GREEDY FLAG MAKERS EXTORT HUGE PROFITS

Washington, Sept. 22.—Twenty leading flag makers in different parts of the country were formally charged by the federal trade commission today with making exorbitant profits out of American patriotism by concerted illegal action to raise flag prices.

ENGINEERS TAKE OVER LINE.

By the Associated Press.

American Training Camp in France, Sept. 21—An American regiment of engineers has taken over an important line of French strategic railways. While they have not yet been under shell fire, the Germans have attempted to bomb the trains. The regiment is entirely under the French and is handling supplies of ammunition to French units.

HUGE GERMAN LOSSES IN FLANDERS REVEALED

By the Associated Press.

Grand Headquarters of the French Army in France, Sept. 22.—Thirty-five German divisions have been engaged in the fighting in Flanders during the course of the six weeks from July 18 to August 9 eight of which are still in the front line. Nineteen have been withdrawn and now are undergoing reformation in rest camps, the other eight being assigned to defend quiet sectors along the fighting front and elsewhere.

The average duration of the occupation of front trenches by German divisions before their withdrawal is only eight days, in which time the casualties became so heavy that their retirement is compulsory. During a similar period of the Somme battle a year ago, 34 German divisions were engaged, 22 of which were withdrawn as a consequence of casualties after 12 days' fighting. During the Verdun fighting, which began on August 20, general divisions, including reserve divisions, were withdrawn after fighting from a minimum of two days to a maximum of four days. Eight of these divisions were regarded as exhausted. Six new divisions which replaced them, now occupy the line.

KAISER VISITS PEEVISH ALLY

German Ruler Goes to Confer With Bulgars, Who Demand Aid, But Decline to Give It.

London, Sept. 22.—A dispatch from Berne, Switzerland, received today by the British admiralty through the wireless press says:

"Emperor William has passed through Budapest, Hungary, on his way to Sofia, the Bulgarian capital. It is believed to be the emperor's intention to try to smooth over difficulties which have arisen between Bulgaria and Germany.

"Germany and Austria have demanded military aid which Bulgaria has refused. On the other hand Bulgaria has asked similar aid which the central powers have refused."

FIX PRICE OF COPPER FOR ALLIES AND PUBLIC

Washington, D. C., Sept. 22.—Copper prices have been fixed at 23½ cents a pound, about 3 cents lower than the prevailing market, by agreement between the government and leading copper producers, effective for four months.

Sales to the government, the public and the allies will be at this price, f. o. b. New York, and producers agreed not to reduce wages now paid in the industry. They also pledged themselves to maintain maximum production and to prevent copper from falling into the hands of speculators.

CANADIAN PARLIAMENT CLOSES LONG SESSION

Ottawa, Sept. 22.—The last session of the 12th parliament of Canada ended when the governor general, the Duke of Devonshire, gave assent to legislation enacted and declared parliament prorogued.

The session has lasted eight months, during which many important matters have been decided. To meet the expense of Canadian war operations $350,000,000 was voted. Conscription was enacted to provide 100,000 reinforcements for Canadian troops in the field.

WOMAN SHOOTS AT ATTACKING BURGLAR

Council Bluffs, Ia., Sept. 22.—Mrs. Tom Weatherhill, alone in her home with children, was attacked by burglar early this morning, as she investigated peculiar noises in living room, and had nearly all her clothing torn from her before she could fight her way back to bed and get revolver from under her pillow. He dived through open window by which he had entered, She took two shots at him but he escaped.

PHILADELPHIA MAYOR NAMED IN DEATH PLOT

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 22.—Warrants charging conspiracy in connection with the killing yesterday of a policeman and the assault of two other men by alleged Jersey City "gunmen" in the republican factional contest in the Fifth ward, were sworn out for Mayor Thomas B. Smith, Police Lieut. David Bennett and Isaac Deutsch, candidate for select council, and opponent of James A. Carey, for the leadership of the ward.

BIG SPAN BOLTED INTO PLACE.

Quebec, Sept. 21.—The central span of the Quebec cantilever bridge was successfully bolted into place this afternoon, linking together the arms of the largest bridge of its kind in the world. The hoisting operation began last Monday and the span which weighs 5,000 tons was lifted by hydraulic jacks a distance of 150 feet from pontoons on the St. Lawrence river.

URGES CODE BE SET ASIDE.

Genova, Sept. 21—Several Swiss newspapers suggest that, in order to avoid a repetition of the Luxburg affair, the Swiss government, which has nothing to hide, shall abandon the secret diplomatic system and send its representatives openly. The newspapers advise that all governments, especially neutral, adopt this method during the war.

DINERS REMOVE BEEF FROM TUESDAY MENUS

New York, Sept. 21.—Roast beef, steaks, filet, mignon—in fact, all cuts or dishes made from beef—will be missing from the Tuesday menues of dining cars on railroad trains, beginning October 2, it was announced today. Wheat bread will not be available to patrons of dining cars unless it is specifically requested. This was taken to aid the government food administration.

AUSTRALIANS WIN YEAR'S BEST GAIN

British Hold All the Advances Made Yesterday and Increase Them by Further Local Attacks.

GERMANS TIRE OF DEATH

Counter Attacks Result Only in Adding to the Slaughter Caused by British Arms.

London, Sept. 22.—Artillery fire late in the day and airplanes enabled the British troops to anticipate further counter attacks. At night the enemy, exhausted, did not counter attack and the British were able to consolidate their positions.

By Associated Press.

British front in France and Belgium, Sept. 22.—Today from the newly acquired enemy stronghold, known as "Anzac," southwest of Zonnebeke, flutters the Australian banner, a symbol of the greatest victory which has marked British operations in the western theater in the past year, not excluding that at Messines. Southwest of Gheluvelt the Germans are holding a position which the British desired and today at 9 30 o'clock, Field Marshal Haig began a local attack here.

GAIN ON EIGHT-MILE FRONT.

By Associated Press.

Today found the British in Flanders holding all the valuable positions gained in their attack of yesterday, when they surged forward on an eight mile front on both sides of the Ypres-Menin road, penetrating the German lines more than a mile in places and capturing prisoners in excess of 2,000.

All reports emphasize the completness of the success the British troops achieved. They hold Veldhoek, Zevenkote and numerous strategically important farms and wooded tracts which had been heavily fortified by the Germans, but which were captured by the resistless British sweep.

Slaughter Stops Counter Blows.

Late yesterday the Germans began to counter attack, but every thrust was effectively dealt with by British guns, which wiped out the advancing lines of German infantry. The heavy casualties sustained in these fruitless attacks evidently impelled the German commander to order their cessation, for there were no repetitions of them during the night and the British were able to consolidate their newly won ground without disturbance.

In some sectors the British continued their offensive tactics during the evening. Local attacks, notably northeast of Langemarck, resulted in the clearing out of a number of strong points to which some German forces were clinging. Correspondents' dispatches today report the continuance of similar tactics at night, when the new line was considerably improved in strength.

Today's advices further announce the resumption of British attacks during this morning southwest of Gheluvelt, where a position desired by the British was still held by the Germans. This was assaulted by British forces, which advanced to the attack at 9:30 o'clock.

From none of the other fighting fronts were there indications in the morning's dispatches of operations of more than ordinary importance.

BERLIN ADMITS LOSSES.

Berlin, Sept. 22.—British troops at Passchendaele and Gheluvelt, on the Belgian front, at times yesterday pressed forward for a distance of more than two-thirds of a mile, says the official statement issued today by the German general staff. West of Passchendaele the British were pressed back by a counter attack. North of the Menin-Ypres road a portion of the terrain remained in the hands of the British.

The statement also says that after fluctuating fighting between Langemarck and Hollebeke, the British were able to advance for a depth of two-thirds of a mile.

TIGHTEN SQUEEZERS ON LENS.

Canadian Headquarters in France, Lens is unrelenting and the Germans are being literally squeezed out of the town. Posts have been pushed out into No Man's Land again in the region of St. Laurent and the ground, in defense of which the Germans fought fiercely a month ago, has been occupied by us almost without a struggle.

By the Associated Press.

British Headquarters in France, Sept. 22.—Pressure on the defenses of Thursday, Sept. 20.—The scene of the present British offensive includes one of the most important and strongest parts of the German line in this section and has been marked by some of the most bitter fighting of the war since the allies, seven weeks ago, began their drive which has become known as the battle of Flanders. The wooded elevations east and southeast of Ypres, among which are such dominating positions as Glencorse wood and Inverness copse, were the vital points and the Germans had made their defense here as nearly impregnable as they were able, being determined to retain them without regard to the cost. The battles of the past few weeks bear witness to the strength of the defenses at these points.

Fight Over Famous Ground.

The crucial sector may be said to begin with the ridge known as Anzac, which lies about a mile southwest of Zonnebeke. Southwest of Anzac is Nun's wood and just east of this is the famous forest known as Polygon wood. When the British, in August, fought their way forward to Polygon wood, they found Nun's wood so flooded that they were forced to go around it and the ground here still presents great difficulties to the movement of troops, because of the swampy condition. Nun's wood merges into Glencorse wood on the south and a little further down and astride the Ypres-Menin highway is Inverness copse, of undying fame. Between Glencourse wood and Inverness is an open stretch of solid ground of some 400 yards, and here the Germans had built great steel and concrete redoubts, whose machine guns dominated the southern part of Glencorse wood and the northern section of Inverness. Below Inverness are Dumbarton lakes and the ground about them is pitted with shell craters, which are filled with water. The paths and trenches here were wiped out by artillery fire and the shell holes are so close together that there are no spaces to walk around them.

Men owned the bodies of other men at one time in Iowa. But as a state her constitution gave all men liberty, the first such grant within the great Louisiana Purchase The last man imprisoned in Massachusetts on the charge of blasphemy led to Iowa his colony of Free thought and established "Salubria" upon the banks of the lower Des Moines. When agitation for the liberation of the slave grew toward overt acting it was an Iowa atmosphere in which the Dred Scott case throve and it was among friends in Iowa that John Brown matured his plan for Harper's Ferry Holland, to which the Pilgrims in 1608 fled for religious liberty only to soon set sail for Plymouth Rock, forbade a Dutch preacher in 1840 to teach his flock in terms he chose and it was to Iowa he led his people Pella, and all its off-shoots, was thus established In Germany there was small opportunity for 'True Inspiration" so Amana in Iowa was founded and remains today a monument of material thrift and heavenly guidance. When France was thought unsuited to experiment in pure social agriculture, Icaria, planted in Illinois and there wrecked on internal disunion rocks, removed to Iowa And other cults and causes springing from the care of men for their souls and bodies; for the exercise of thought and liberty; from the fixed systems of states in Europe and our older sister states, all found freedom here. And more—they found bounty from the hand of Nature for which they had besought the throne of Grace. And yet more—they found that bounty in every acre, through every law and on every hand. They found no need of special dispensation of the Divine, no license from any creed, nor grant from any potentate for them to worship, work or thrive. They only required the air, the grace, the soil of Iowa. And rendering unto Ceasar the things that are Ceasar's they commingled their thought with that of their fellow citizens; their fortunes and their liberties with those of every other soul, and made for us our state.

The answer to their prayers having arrived, in nearly every instance they abandoned the rules and constitutions for their political governance, adopted before they came, and took instead the rules of right and policy laid down in the constitution and laws of Iowa. Thus from the ordinances of all religions; from every forward looking European people and race; from the town and county systems of all America east and south; from every state in the Union came the best there was in peoples and in principles—have come the family and geographical names; the traditions and experience making for fairness and good in men, to form the people and the government of Iowa.

So in government of townships, towns, cities, counties, state, in legislative and municipal councils; in the courts and executive seats have been and still remain the elements inclining always toward the best. Nature's marvelous provisions, availed of by men like these, uniformly brought forward what is best in the progress of modern man.

Iowa fell athwart the pathway of the race at a most auspicious time. Famine had been a wraith in the thoughts of men both great and humble, from the day of Eden. Prior to our admission as a state in the American union no tribe or nation was safe against hunger beyond a single season. Soils might yield abundance and tribes grow fat, yet fellow tribes but a few degrees along the pathway of the sun remained in hunger. The Nile grew food for export to distant regions but reached their markets only with the speed of sail and hoof. And what Egypt was in the dawn, the Mississippi Valley is at the noon-tide of mankind—a very sea of golden grain, tapped by steam, electricity and by gasoline; the acre which employed the hand and brain and conservation methods of a man in 1846 has, through reaper, storage processes and quick transportation, become a full hundred acres in 1917.

In 1917 the variation of an inch of rain in the Argentine or of a degree of heat on the steppes of Asia are one thought combined in Iowa. Before tomorrow's information comes, the thoughts of men turn to preparation for sending food and in suspense wait to tip the horn of plenty. And more than once in our brief history have Iowa men and grain and money gone to the sick and stricken by steamship—nay, by wire, to take the place of death—gone to the ends of the earth more swiftly than in 1846 their diligent fathers could reach and return from the nearest frontier mill.

What is true of the love and charity of the thought and act of Iowa is no less true in trade and commerce. Perhaps the zeal for thrift has even swifter sail; has been and is "necessity" which in the old saw is "the mother of invention." Iowa today, with her great good heart, is most concerned with keeping the resources Nature gave us in trust; in establishing and equalizing rules of industry and transportation; in working out the quickest and easiest way to bring from the soil its fruits, and convey them to those who need; to deepening and polishing the natures of her sons and daughters, through her schools, libraries, churches and wholesome pastime places; to the amelioration of her people's needless burdens, relieving their pain and distress through public and private hospitals and resting places; to teaching the joy of recognition of the vast intangible resources of tradition and examples of honor and of valor, and the expression of this day's respect therefore in bronze, in book and song, to the keeping of the blessings of peace and prosperity among us, to exchanging with other commonwealths and peoples even to the remotest future times and distant places.

BETTER FARMING CONDITIONS

Iowa's prosperity and progress rests primarily on agriculture. The farm problem today is vastly different than it was twenty-five years ago. Then farming was merely a means of getting a living. Now it is a business, and the average farmer in Iowa has a larger capital invested in his plant than the average business man. He is entitled to a fair return on the capital invested, and to obtain this he must eliminate waste and increase production.

It is sad to record that our per acre yields in Iowa are actually less than they were twenty years ago. Our average in Iowa for corn is 35 bushels per acre, and yet a sixteen year old boy in Hardin County last year raised 112 bushels on an acre. The return from every acre of Iowa land can be doubled in seven or eight years, by the application of knowledge which is now available but which is not being put to use. Our dairy products amount annually to nearly one hundred million dollars, and only one-third of the Iowa cows are money makers We can double or treble that return by selling off the "boarders" and putting producers in their place. We can double or treble our income from hay by substituting alfalfa for timothy.

The quickest and most practical way to attain this result is by putting a County Agricultural Agent in every county in Iowa, so that by demonstrations and personal contact the best methods can be adjusted to the varying local conditions.

Iowa should have more intensive farming and less extensive farming. We need more farms; not bigger farms. Every year Iowa is losing hundreds of young men, driven to Canada or the semi-arid west in search of cheap land, who would remain here if it was demonstrated that forty acres in Iowa will produce as much as a quarter or half section in those overpainted Eldorados at the end of an advertising rainbow.

And development along these lines will lead us away from the terrible danger of universal farm tenantry.

Buying Now Is A Double Investment!

The automobile is recognized as one of the needs of the present day, and the buying of it is regularly an investment. Just now, with the costs of raw material becoming higher and higher there can be no question but that in the future automobiles must sell at higher prices. For this reason it is evident that to buy your new car now will prove to be a double investment.

Recreation Afforded By Automobiles Means Health and Greater Efficiency

The value of recreation is now ignored by no one. With added tasks thrown upon your shoulders in the present strenuous times you feel more keenly the need of the best of recreation. The recreation afforded by the automobile is at once the most complete and invigorating, combining the joy of the out-of-doors, the companionship of family and friends and healthful country air.

SELECT SEED CORN BEFORE FROST COMES

Insurance for Next Year's Corn Crop Lies in Field Selection of Seed Now.

Because the season is from two to three weeks late, the seed corn situation in Iowa is likely to be unusually serious this year. Indeed, in case of an early frost, Iowa faces a duplication of the unfavorable corn year in 1915 which left many a farmer without a single ear of good seed in his crib, says R. K. Bliss, head of the agricultural extension department at Iowa State college.

Next year's corn crop insurance lies in the field selection of corn now before the frost gets it because there is very little old corn on hand. Iowa must have 1,500,000 bushels of first class seed to plant her usual 10,000,000 corn acres next spring. Allowing for sorting and replanting and a moderate surplus 4,000,000 bushels should be selected this fall.

There's no doubt about the advantage of selecting seed corn. Experiments conducted at Iowa State college show that an acre of corn planted with seed that has been selected early, well dried, stored and tested, produces an average of 7 to 8 bushels more than an acre planted with seed selected haphazard. It is estimated that 50% of the farmers in Iowa thus carefully select their seed corn. If the other 50% did likewise it would mean an increase of 40,000,000 bushels in Iowa's corn crop. General conditions make it reasonably certain that Iowa farmers will be doing both the patriotic and the profitable to increase their corn yield next year.

State Wide Campaign Is Planned.

Because the situation demands immediate action the agricultural extension department at Iowa State college, in co-operation with the U. S. Department of Agriculture, has marshaled the 32 county agents and an additional body of 27 trained men, some of them the best known corn growers in Iowa, for a seed corn campaign that will reach every part of the state. The state has been divided into 27 districts and each special man assigned to a district. Through farmers' meetings, the schools, county agents, councils of defense and all other possible effective channels these men will urge and work for seed corn selection. They stand at the service of every farmer in Iowa, to help him select, dry and store his seed corn for next year.

"Four million bushels selected," has been set as the slogan of the campaign in order that this state may have enough for sorting and replanting and also help supply other states next year if the call should come.

Farmers themselves declare that a similar campaign waged by the department two years ago was responsible for at least a two bushel increase on every corn acre in Iowa. This means a 20,000,000 bushel increase, which with corn worth 90 cents as it was at that time, meant a saving of some $18,000,000 that can be credited to the campaign.

The "Best Way" to Select Seed.

There is just one "best way" to select seed corn, the seed selection agents are preaching, and that is to go into the field after the corn is well dented and pick at least twice enough seed from the standing stalks to plant the corn acreage next year. This would require that 30 to 40 ears of seed corn be selected for every acre to be planted.

Briefly the program of selection being advocated is this:

Gather seed corn right now before frost has a chance to touch it.

A convenient way to gather it is in a grain sack in the end of which has been placed a hoop to keep it open. This can be strapped over the shoulder. Or an easy way to gather it is in a home made cart.

Select ears from strong, vigorous stalks.

Select ears that grow at a medium height on the stalks.

Select from stalks that are growing under average conditions.

Pick early to medium maturing ears.

Pick ears with medium length shank.

Pick ears that stand neither too erect nor too drooping.

Pick ears with well filled butts and tips.

String ears on twine, using "double string method" or on wire, using common woven wire seed corn hanger. Allow no ears to touch. Hang in dry, well ventilated place such as a cellar with furnace, attic or store room, if dry and well ventilated. Freezing weakens or kills the corn.

Community Storage Houses.

Many farmers, especially renters who do not have suitable places to dry and store corn, hesitate to select seed early or even save it at all. Because of the critical situation this fall the extension people are advising community storage of seed corn.

It is suggested that farmers' clubs, commercial clubs or other organizations secure storage buildings and bear the expense of rent, heat and repairs or guarantee the expense and charge each farmer storage according to the bushels held.

Seed corn agents will be at work in every county and they can be secured to inspect buildings and assist with plans. Any help that can be rendered will be given upon application to the agricultural extension department, Iowa State college. Ames.

"We will say good by, then, for the present," added the admiral, with a touch of irony. "We shall, perhaps, be forced again to call upon you."

A second time Hausmann bowed.

When Miss Vard entered her stateroom, that day, to brush her hair before going to lunch, her nostrils were assaulted by a most unpleasant odor, and, when a cursory inspection of the room failed to disclose its cause, she summoned the steward and asked him to investigate. An hour later, a white capped official approached Mr. Vard, who was looking vainly through the collection of books in the library for something he cared to read, and informed him, with many apologies, that it would be necessary for him to change his stateroom. Just what was wrong with No. 514 it was impossible to say, but it could not be denied that there was a bad odor there, whose source had not been discovered and the only alternative seemed to be to shut it up until the end of the voyage and then to overhaul it thoroughly.

"Very well," said Vard. "I have no objection to changing. But I cannot understand how a cubicle with floor, ceiling and walls of steel, could so suddenly become insanitary."

"It is a mystery to us also, sir, and one which we shall look into very thoroughly. We regret it extremely."

"Not at all," said Vard, somewhat astonished that so much should be made of the matter. "Have the steward change our baggage to the new quarters, and then come and show me where they are, and let us forget all about it."

"It is most kind of you to take it so good naturedly," protested the officer. "The embarrassing thing to us is that, as there is no vacant stateroom in the second cabin, we shall have to transfer you to the first."

Vard looked at him.

"And you expect me to pay the difference?" he asked.

"Oh no, not at all," the other hastily assured him. "We had not thought of such a thing! But we feared you might have some objection to first class, and that the change would inconvenience you still more."

Vard smiled grimly.

"As a matter of fact, I have an objection to first class," he said, "but it is largely that of wasting money for which I have a better use. The people one sees there also do not appeal to me. I fear most of them are idle fools. But perhaps the library is better selected."

"Oh it is much larger than this," the officer agreed. "I may take it, then, that you consent?"

"Certainly. We can't stay in a stateroom that smells as ours does."

"Then," said the other, "if you will inform your daughter, I will myself conduct you to your new quarters."

So Miss Vard was summoned, their steward was loaded with baggage, and after a glance around No. 514 to assure herself that nothing had been overlooked, Miss Vard found herself following her father and the white capped German along a narrow passage, past a steel door that was unlocked for them, and up the companion way to a very handsome suite opening on the upper promenade. It consisted of two bedrooms and a sitting room, and Kasia, as she glanced about it, could not repress an exclamation of surprise.

"Are we to stay here?" she asked.

"Yes, madame," and the official smiled. "It is the only thing we have to offer. I am glad that it pleases you. It will help you to forget the inconvenience of changing." And, having waited until the steward had deposited his burden, he motioned him out before him, bowed and withdrew.

Kasia made a quick tour of the room, admiring its elegant furnishings, glanced into the bedrooms, and then came back to her father.

"I don't understand it!" she said. "Why should they give us all this?"

Her father regarded her in some surprise.

"Why, my dear," he said, "you have heard the explanation. I do not for a moment imagine that the steamship company would have been so generous if there had been any way to avoid it!"

"No, I suppose not!" Kasia agreed, and set herself to arrange their belongings—it was almost like fitting up a flat! "This suit case is very heavy, father," she adder, after a moment. "Will you put it in your room?"

"Of course," and Vard lifted it, started for the bedroom, and then turned and placed it on the little table which stood between the windows. "I will have a look at it, first," he said, loosened the straps, took a key from a flapped compartment of his pocketbook and put it in the lock. "One would scarcely believe, Kasia," he added, with a smile, "that this little bag contains the destiny of the world!"

"No," she said, and came and stood beside him, one arm about him, her head against his shoulder.

He turned the key and raised the lid. Then he put aside some articles of clothing and lifted from beneath them an oblong box, open at the ends. One saw, on looking closer, that the sides of the box were of glass, partially covered on both sides with tin foil; and peering in at the open end, one perceived a vague maze of wires and pinions.

Vard gazed at it for some moments without speaking.

"There it is, Kasia," he said at last, "the wonder worker, which, properly tuned and and connected with its batteries, generates a force which puts an end to armies and to fleets. With it in the world, there can be no more war—and if there is no more war, there is the end of kings and tyrants. It is a great thought, is it not, my daughter?"

"A great thought!" she echoed, but her voice was shaking, and she shivered a little and drew closer to him. "And yet, father, think what an awful force it would be if it fell into unscrupulous hands! It is that which makes me tremble sometimes!"

"You do not fear me, Kasia?" he asked reproachfully.

"No, father; of course not!"

He replaced the mechanism, covered it carefully with clothing, closed the lid, locked it, and returned the key to his pocket. Then he carried the bag to his bedroom and slipped it under the bed. At last he came back to his daughter.

"I will not deny, Kasia," he said, "that I have been tempted, more than once. Not by the prospect of wealth or power—those cannot tempt me: but by the thought that, after subduing the world, I might remould it nearer to the heart's desire.' And yet how vain to fancy that I or any man possesses the wisdom to do that! No; that cannot be. Each nation must shape its own destiny, as friends and brothers. It is for me to strike the swords from their hands!"

But still Kasia trembled and a shadow lay across her face.

"What is it you fear?" her father asked, looking at her.

"It seems too great a destiny!" she answered, with quivering lips. "There is so great a risk! Suppose some one should steal that instrument * * *"

"That would do no harm. I can make another—100 others! That is my purpose. The whole world must know of it—must possess it. Every nation must know that, the instant it marches to war, it risks annihilation. I see no danger there."

"But suppose," Kasia persisted, "that the man who stole it should kill you—what then? Oh, I have thought of it, father, so much, so closely, all through the night! We must run no risk like that."

Vard took a rapid turn up and down the room. He was deeply perturbed. At last he paused beside her.

"You are right, Kasia," he said. "I do not believe there is any danger—yet we must run no risk like that! Well, it is easy to avoid it! Wait!"

He disappeared into his bedroom, and Kasia heard him pulling out the bag and opening it. Then the lock snapped again, the bag was pushed back under the bed, and her father rejoined her. He held in his hand a little case of polished steel. Within it were three filament like wires wound peculiarly around a series of tiny pins.

"Here it is," he said, "the very heart of the mechanism. Without this it is useless. Without this, it is merely a transformer. It can do no one any harm—can betray no secret."

Kasia took the little box and looked at it.

"Is this difficult to make, father?" she asked.

"It took me eight years to make that one; but I can make another in two days, or perhaps three."

"You are sure of that?"

"Oh, yes," and he smiled. "It is very intricate, yet very simple when one has the clue. Every convolution of those filaments is photographed on my brain. I can close my eyes and see them winding in and out."

The girl hesitated, the little box still in her hand.

"Then it would be safe to destroy this?" she asked, at last.

"Safe? Yes! That is my meaning! Let us destroy it!"

Still a moment she paused, then she closed her hand.

"Yes," she agreed; "let us destroy it."

Her father nodded his head indifferently. With him the moment of tension had passed.

"Drop it into the sea," he said. "That will end it. Now, I think, I shall go and examine the books in the library."

He went out and closed the door; but Kasia stood for a long time without moving, staring at the little box of polished metal. After all, if he should not reproduce it; if there should be some convolution he had missed, some accidental conjunction he was not aware of! If to destroy it now would be to destroy it forever! Better that, of course, than run the other risk! But was there no other way? Perhaps, perhaps * * *

A WORD OF WARNING.

Wherefore it happened that Dan Webster, searching promenade and saloon and library, that afternoon, mounting to the boat deck, descending to the lower deck, peeping into every nook and corner where passengers of the second class were permitted to penetrate, looked in vain for Kasia Vard. Nor was her father anywhere to be seen. At last, perceiving the curious glances shot in his direction, and having stumbled for the third time over the same outstretched pair of feet, he mounted gloomily to the boat deck and sat down to think it out.

The weather continued fine and the sea smooth, so that it was absurd to suppose that either of them was ill; and that they should keep to their stateroom on such an afternoon for any other reason or even for that one, was more absurd still. Perhaps, if they were working * * *

The thought brought him sudden relief. That explained it! They had some work they were doing together. Perhaps Kasia acted as her father's secretary, and even now was writing to his dictation. She had said that he was engaged in some gigantic project, the nature of which Dan understood but dimly—a plan for the disarmament of the world or something like that. As he remembered them here in the cold light of day, her words of the night before seemed more than a little fantastic; but perhaps he had not understood, or perhaps she had spoken figuratively. "The nations of the world in the hollow of his hand"—that, of course, was figurative. And, equally of course, Vard's plan would come to nothing. But it would be interesting to know more of it.

He must have a talk with Vard before the voyage ended. A story like that would make good copy, and a little newspaper propaganda would help the thing along. Meanwhile, there was nothing to do but wait until Miss Vard should choose to reappear. He cast his mind back over the story she had told him—ye gods! what a feature that would make, told just as she had told it, simply and earnestly and without embellishment. Perhaps he could persuade her to write it for the Record. He could picture the shining face of Craftsman, the Sunday editor, as he read it!

Some one, crossing the deck unperceived by him, sat down beside him. He turned quickly, but it was only Chevrial.

"Ah, M. Webster," said the Frenchman, smiling, "you were among the day dreams; and they were not of me. That is apparent from the look with which you regard me!"

Dan flushed a little, and then he laughed. There was no resisting Chevrial's genial humor.

"No," he admitted; "they were of some one quite different."

"Nevertheless, until 'that some one' appears, I trust that I am welcome!"

"Indeed you are. I'm glad you came!"

Dan spoke warmly, and his companion, with a little satisfied nod, settled back into the seat. They had seen very little of each other since the moment of meeting. Dan had gone to bed the previous night before his room mate appeared, and had not even heard him come in. This morning, when he arose, Chevrial was sleeping calmly, and Dan had gathered his clothes together as noiselessly as he could and stolen away to the bathroom. They had passed each other once or twice on the promenade, and had nodded but had not spoken—and then Dan remembered suddenly the flare of light from the nearby bench the night before, as he and Kasia rose to go below. Chevrial smiled again as he met his glance.

"You are thinking of last night?" he said. "Yes? It is concerning that I wish first to speak to you. When I sat down yonder I was not conscious that this bench was occupied. You and the young lady were speaking in very low tones, and the bench itself was in shadow. It was only when she raised her voice that I realized I was hearing what was not intended for me. I was just about to go, when she stopped abruptly, and a moment later you went down together. It was then that you noticed me. I struck the match in order that you might see that it was I, and so have no uneasiness."

Dan stared at his companion in astonishment.

"Uneasiness?" he repeated. "But why should I have any uneasiness?"

"Not on your own account, of course, but on the young lady's account."

"But I don't see why, even for her, I should be uneasy," said Dan perplexedly.

"My dear sir," and Chevrial dropped his voice and spoke very earnestly, "there are always spies on these big boats—this is a most productive field for them—German spies, French spies, English spies, listening to each word, watching each gesture. Suppose one of them had chanced to hear what I did * * *"

Dan stared a moment longer, then he burst into laugh.

"Oh, come, M. Chevrial," he protested. "You don't really believe that?"

"Believe what?"

"About the spies."

Chevrial's face grew a little grim.

"I am not one to offer advice where it is not desired," he said; "but I assure you, M. Webster, that what I have told you is true, and furthermore had any one of three or four persons who are on this boat heard what I heard, that girl and her father would have been under espionage for the remainder of their lives."

It was easy to see that Chevrial spoke in deadly earnest, and, in spite of himself, Dan was impressed and sobered.

"I beg your pardon," he said; "perhaps you are right, but to an American the very idea of such a system is laughable—it savors to much of cheap melodrama. But why should the story Miss Vard told me interest any one?"

"My dear sir," answered Chevrial, drily, "when a girl goes about boasting that her father is more powerful than the czar or kaiser! Suppose she had stopped there, any hearer would have concluded that he was an anarchist, and therefore to be watched. But she went further: she asserted that he can blow up forts and destroy armies! That he can wreck battleships. Why, M. Webster, it is only four days since La Liberte, the greatest of French battleships, was destroyed in the harbor of Toulon by an agency not yet determined!"

Dan had turned a little pale.

"But you don't imagine," he stammered; "surely you don't * * *"

Chevrial flipped away his cigaret ash negligently.

"That La Libert was destroyed by this man? Absurd! But, nevertheless, it is a bad time to make such boasts."

"I can see that," agreed Dan. "I will speak to Miss Vard."

"I would do so, by all means. She seems a most interesting girl, and I should regret to see her involved in an unpleasant situation. Or her father," Chevrial added.

"A most interesting enthusiast!"

"You have talked with him?"

Two scientists in Europe have decided that the human brain is radioactive and emits a faint glow under certain conditions.

The Man in the Dugout

From the London Daily Mail.

"I've got an awfully good suggestion, old chap," said the young lieutenant, with the restless eyes to his friend as they sat in the dugout by the light of a flaring tin lamp.

"So have I. Had one just now when a big spider fell plop into my coffee. Tell us yours. Have another dose?"

The other extended his hand for the steaming draught and pulled his chair—a soap box—to the table—two soap boxes.

"Don't know if you'll understand——"

"Thanks; I'll try very hard."

"——but I feel as though I were caught in a web. Funny you should mention spiders. Look here, you've seen a lot of seagulls wheeling and swerving over rocks at the edge of the coast?"

"Have I not! And don't I wish I could see them at this moment!"

"Well, can you imagine what it would be like if the curves of their flight became visible and remained in the air—what a network of lines it would be? That's what is happening to me; I see the track left by every moving thing. All those shells that come over leave lines—the atmosphere is full of them. And I'm caught in this maze as though it was a tough, horrible web spun by some enormous spider. I can't break through."

The listener sipped his coffee and regarded the other man gravely over the brim of the mug.

"Feel off color, old man?" he asked.

"No; I'm all right, I think, except for that. You see, it bothers me, rather. Whenever a car passes by it leaves a line, and that drifts across my face and gets mixed with the others. And there are little thin threads, odd bits, thousands of 'em—they come at every movement of your hand—and the web thickens." He brushed his hand across his face with a quick motion as if to clear his vision.

"Steady, old boy," said the owner of the dugout. "You'll have an attack of nerves if you're not careful, and you're giving me the jumps. Have a cigaret and take it easy for an hour."

The web thickened day by day until, bewildered, he consulted the doctor; and the doctor, almost as bewildered, sent him home to England for a good rest.

One sunny morning he was walking along a street at though half blind, perfectly able to see with his bodily eyes, yet the web seemed to be weaving itself across his mind, confusing his thoughts, hambering his whole life. People, he noticed, were looking at the sky; he also gazed upward mechanically.

Across that sunlit summer heaven a fleet of airplanes was sailing, calmly, soundlessly, deliberately. A charming spectacle, he thought, and how excellently they kept their battle formation! Then a sound so familiar abroad, so strange in London, gave him a sudden thrill—the rumble of gunfire and the velvety pop-pop-pop of bursting shrapnel; and looking more steadily he perceived dozens of tiny woolly smoke balls softly uncurling against the blue.

So this was one of the "air raids" his friends had written about! Oblivious, indeed half contemptuous of possible danger, he watched that deadly, damnable advance, so cool, so dignified, so unconcerned, watched the silvery threads that the slow planes spun in his brain drift down across his vision; felt them join the shroud that enclosed him. * * *

Crash after crash thundered nearer, and only then, so used was he to the noisy hazard of war, did he think of shelter. And as he moved to a doorway there was a terrific explosion, a vivid flame and he was thrown violently down and almost stunned.

In less than a minute he was helping in the work of rescue, comforting frightened children, caring for the wounded. But at the back of his mind was a sense of elation, of profound gladness, of peace. For the web was broken, torn into floating tatters; his mind was clear, his vision free, his long agony of oppression past.

Eager for an Education.

From the Portland Oregonian.

Seattle, Wash.—Intent upon securing an education in American colleges, two Filipino girls ran away from their native homes and traveled third class to the United States on a Japanese steamship, landing in Seattle a short time ago.

Senorita Cordero and Senorita Orosa are their names. Miss Cordero was denied admission to the state university, but is studying English in high school and hopes to advance far enough soon so that she may take the entrance examination.

On the campus the girls present a strange appearance, for they have not forsaken their native costume. Their dresses are of native material and have long trains attached which are pinned up while on the street, but are allowed to hang when in the house or class room.

Miss Orosa has entered the pharmacy college as a special student and plans after completing her course to return to Baawan, in the islands, and start a pharmacy of her own.

Raincoats for Lambs.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

The greatest obstacle which stands in the way of providing very young or new born lambs with artificial coats or blankets to protect them from sudden changes in temperature or from storms until their own coats are heavy enough to serve the purpose, is the fact that the covering material is likely to destroy the lamb odor by which the mother recognizes her offspring.

A blanket has been invented which leaves enough of the lamb's neck and body exposed to satisfy the mother as to the lamb's identity, and at the same time covers the vital portions of the body snugly. It is composed of a waterproof outer canvas, with a soft woolen lining. Four elastic loops fasten it on.

Stumbling Block to Despotism.

Abraham Lincoln.

The assertion that all men were created equal was of no practical use in effecting our separation from Great Britain, and it was placed in the declaration not for that but for future use. Its authors meant it to be—as, thank God, it is now proving itself—a stumbling block to all those who in after times might seek to turn a free people back into the hateful paths of despotism. They knew the proneness of prosperity to breed tyrants, and they meant, when such should reappear in this fair land and commence their vocation, they should find left for them at least one hard nut to crack.

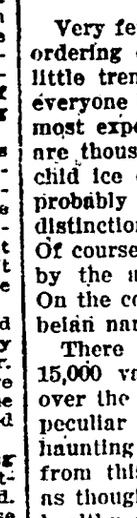
Men that have come from Europe themselves, or whose ancestors have come hither and settled here, finding themselves our equals in all thing * * * can not carry themselves back into that glorious epoch and make themselves feel that they are part of us, but when they look through that old Declaration of Independence * * * then they feel that that moral sentiment taught in that day evidences their relation to those men, that it is the father of all moral principle in them, and that they have a right to claim it as though they were blood of the blood and flesh of the flesh of the men who wrote that declaration, and so they are. That is the electric cord in that declaration that links the hearts of patriotic and liberty loving men together, that will link those patriotic hearts as long as the love of freedom exists in the minds of men throughout the world.

If that declaration is not the truth, let us get the statute book in which we find it and tear it out!

They did not mean to declare all men equal in all respects. * * * They meant to set up a standard maximum for free society which should be familiar to all, constantly looked to, constantly labored for, and, even though never perfectly attained, constantly approximated, and thereby constantly spreading and deepening its influence and augmenting the happiness and value of life to all people of all colors, everywhere.

PAIN? NOT A BIT! LIFT YOUR CORNS OR CALLUSES

No humbug! Apply few drops, then just lift them away with fingers.



This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown, at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a few drops two directly upon any tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so shriveled that you can lift it off with fingers and all, with the skin.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation, not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or after.

This drug doesn't eat the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right off. It is no humbug; it works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn between the toes, as well as those painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never bites or inflames. If your druggist hasn't any freezone yet, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.—adv.

ORCHID ICE CREAM COMES

It Does Not Bear That Aristocratic Title but Goes by the Very Plebeian Name of Vanilla.

Very few of us would ever think of ordering orchid ice cream without a little tremor of the pocketbook, for everyone knows that the orchid is the most expensive of flowers. But there are thousands of persons who eat ice cream daily. Although probably have not been aware of the distinction, it is none the less true. Of course the ice cream is not flavored by the aristocratic name of orchid. On the contrary, it bears the very plebeian name of vanilla.

There are said to be no less than 15,000 varieties of orchid scattered over the earth. All of them have a peculiar artificial beauty and a haunting odor that seems far removed from this flower which looks and smells as though it were a product of the most healthy condition in nature. Of all these 15,000 varieties, only one has practical value, and that is the one from which vanilla comes. This orchid grows abundantly in South and Central America, and has been transplanted to other tropical countries where it is now flourishing.

Waited Eighteen Years for Her

Talk about the returning exile and how he feels his heart beat when he returns to his native shore after a long, long sojourn in a foreign land. Here's Frederick Rockwood, Islander by birth and a resident of Bogota, Colombia, for 18 years as newspaper correspondent and agent.

He landed in this country a few days ago, perfectly tickled to death, as the girls say, to get back to the States. But did he fall down and kiss the shores or offer burnt sacrifices?

He did not.

He had been longing for a good sized dish of corned beef and cabbage since he went to Colombia eighteen years ago. He had been saving up his corned beef hash appetite all these years, and when he landed the first thing he did was to go to a restaurant and order five portions of his favorite food.—Ed Goodwin in Washington Star.

Handling Mr. Wilson's Mail.

From the Boston Post

President Wilson's mail bag is the largest in the world Thousands of letters arrive daily, and every one of any importance must have the individual attention of America's first citizen Of course, the president is not able to read all his correspondence himself. This difficulty is overcome by a carefully developed system by which the contents of the White House mail bag of any importance are laid before Mr Wilson each day.

The work of selection falls upon a corps of confidential clerks, who open the letters and give them a first reading Then they are carefully sorted. Many of them are simply recommendations for office These, after courteous acknowledgment, are referred to the proper departments and placed on file until the matter can be taken up for consideration

Hundreds of the missives are purely formal, or contain impossible requests These are immediately answered by the staff, and signed by one of the president's assistant secretaries

Such communications as the president ought to see are clearly briefed that is a slip is pinned at the top of each letter and on this is a typewritten synopsis of its contents, telling who the writer is and what he has to present Frequently the president is sufficiently interested by the brief to cause him to read the whole letter. Sometimes the communication is referred to a cabinet officer, in which case the slip is retained at the White House and filed

Requests for charity are continually pouring in Those however are sent to a different department which goes fully into each case before replying

When a large number of persons write on the same subject the letters are bunched and the brief at the top gives the names of those who present one argument, and on another list is given the names of the persons who offer a different view

Labor and Patriotism.

From the Spokane Wash Spokesman Review

Before the state council of defense at Seattle Wednesday representatives of organized labor made the statement which was regarded as significant by the council, that they did not want the eight hour day if that meant a crippling of the lumber industry

The best way to find out whether the eight-hour day would cripple an industry is through arbitration It is obviously to no one's interest but the kaiser's to set up crippling conditions in the productive industries of the country Manufacturers employes and the general public all have a common interest here All will profit from sustained production all would suffer from industrial paralysis

Broadly speaking, this is not the time to hold rigidly to an eight-hour day in the great productive industries of the nation Production needs stimulation and if more lumber, more cereals, more live stock and other essential products can be produced under the 10-hour day than under an eight-hour day labor should gird itself for the extra effort But for that extra war and the economy it must compel effort it should have adequate compensation It must not be expected, in a patriotic spirit, to put forth that increased exertion merely to put fatter profits into the pockets of the employers

Vested in the Whole People

From the Grand Rapids Press

In his series of articles on the new Russia now appearing in the Press Charles Edward Russell points out the interesting fact that lawyers and politicians so popular for public office holding positions in this country are an unknown quantity in the government of the new democracy Men and women of Russia standing on an equal franchise basis have elected a legislative body of 520 members wholly from the toilers and producers of the nation farmers and workers of the factories After looking it over Mr Russell gives it as his opinion that it is the most remarkable legislative body in the world and, as it looks to me the most significant the most satisfactory and admirable

Mr Russell's prediction that the new Russia will show the world something of a highly constructive and effective character in the constitution that is being drafted is easy of belief The students of government were not idle during the long years that Russia was under the yoke of autocracy and the innumerable defects of its governing system spurred them to the search for the ideal democracy a dream then but now nearer a reality It is significant therefore that the country's first legislative body created as it was in the midst of confusion and war still is the keynote of the spirit in which the new Russian government is being moulded Those who compose the producing power of the land are the lawmakers and the law administrators and they are making good, according to Mr Russell even in the face of terrible odds.

Let's Do It Like Men!

From the St Paul Pioneer-Press

Americans must stop whining about the war. We have undertaken a man's job let us tighten our belts and go to it like men.

America is not going to starve, nor go broke, nor lose all its young men its cities are not going to be sacked, nor blown up by U-boats, nor destroyed by airships

We have been driven into the war It was unavoidable, inevitable just part of the everlasting struggle between kings on one hand, and liberty loving peoples on on the other. Let us muzzle the croaker and prophet of evil, trample upon the speculator; jail the traitor

What we most need is divine courage and the faith which will remove mountains. Send our fighting men forth with stout hearts as well as strong arms Germans have shown what solidarity and courage can do in a sinister cause. Let us show how much more these weapons can do for us in a cause that is holy

America is again face to face with stern sacrifice, that barbarism may not triumph and that popular government may not perish from this earth Let us do it boldly with an indomitable spirit like that of '76.

Denmark Pawned Orkney Islands.

From Pearson's Magazine.

The Orkney Islands do not really belong to Great Britain in the sense that they were ever ceded by treaty or acquired by conquest. They were simply transferred by Denmark to Scotland in 1468, in pledge for the payment of the dowry of the princess of Denmark, who was married to James III, King of Scotland. In the deed of transfer, which is still in existence it is specially mentioned that Denmark shall have the right to redeem them at any future time by paying the original amount of the dowry with interest to date

There is no likelihood, however, that Denmark will ever attempt to exercise her right of redemption, because 60,000 florins, the original amount of the dowry plus compound interest for 448 years, would amount to perhaps £1,000,000,000,000, and that is a bit more than the islands are worth.

An Apt Pupil.

A New York lawyer had in his employ an office boy who was addicted to the bad habit of telling in other offices what happened in that of his employer. The lawyer found it necessary to discharge him, but, thinking to restrain him from a similar fault in the future, he counseled the boy, on his departure, in this wise

"Tommy, you must never hear anything that is said in the office. Do what you are told, but turn a deaf ear to conversation that does not include you."

This struck the boss as such a happy inspiration that, to the end that his stenographer might learn the same lesson, he turned to her and said:

"Miss Jones, did you hear what I said to Tommy?"

"No, sir," she returned promptly.

Wants Congress to Get Busy.

First Lieut. J. L. Ruyavitz, M. O. T. C., Company Seven, Fort Riley, Kan., writing to the Duncombe, Ia., Tribune, among many interesting things, says:

"If anybody thinks that our government is slow in getting there, they ought to be out here for a while and watch the hustle. Every move has been figured out as the shortest and quickest possible way to get a thing done, and you can bet they work overtime to make things move along at high speed. The only drawback we have is in congress, and this can be remedied if the various organizations in the community will petition their congressmen to support certain measures of importance now before the House, and at the same time urge them to get a wiggle on themselves and get busy

PATRIOT MOTHER OF GERMAN DESCENT OFFERS SONS ON DEMOCRACY'S ALTAR

Mrs Clem H Strickland of Houston, Texas, though herself of pure German descent, has offered five of her six sons on the altar of liberty and democracy. She urged them to go to war, that the country of her forefathers might forever be freed from the brutal tyranny of its present rulers Her remaining boy is too young to go, but he also will volunteer if he reaches the age of nineteen before the war ends.

Business and War.

Some Observations on War Effects Which Business Men Should Remember

By Samuel J. Bloomingdale.

Prosperity follows in the wake of war The more terrible the war the more prodigious the prosperity This is the evidence of history as we shall see upon examination

De Toqueville was I believe the first European commentator on political affairs to observe the stimulating effect of war on civil enterprises He however got cause and effect mixed for he attributed the cause of national prosperity that follows a war, to the war itself which is as absurd as to say that good proceeds from evil

In the common sense of the world there can be no doubt that war is the positive evil For the phenomena of prosperity following in the wake of the war we must look to other spiritual forces

Prosperity follows not only after war but springs into view with a great bound almost instantly with the conflict This applies to every part of a country at war except that part which is in the immediate theater of military operations

War involves the destruction of wealth that is of stored up labor and a rapid and unprecedented consumption of products of immediate labor that must be met or paid for later in the form of taxes When an individual suffers a greater material loss or has in anticipation a loss of capital, income or resources, he will make every effort to stave off the loss to lessen its volume and if possible try to cover himself completely, not being satisfied then he will make such efforts as he can to make his position more sound and solid than it was before the specter of loss loomed on his horizon

The Psychology of Repair.

So, too, does the collective sense of a whole people bestir itself, guided by the more foresighted and able minds of the nation, in the face of war, to repair the ravages, both immediate and in prospect, that war is known to cause. This then is the psychology, if one may so define it, of prosperity springing into life on the heels of war New and towering necessities arise. They must be met They generally are met and great probable necessities looming in anticipation are also met, so that a new enhanced prosperity gets under way that lasts long after the period of conflict There can be nothing more true in economics than that necessity is the mother of invention Invention meets need and the satisfaction of needs, that is production gives rise to prosperity

For proof from history, let us take the United States during the war of rebellion. The effect of this war on business, on the manner of life and on every force that motivates human action was an advancement in a single decade that otherwise might not have been wrought in a century

Illustrated by United States.

The United States of 1860 was by comparison a great overgrown, provincial territory The United States of April 15, 1865, north and south included, was a great nation, mentally and physically An immense revolution had taken place in the minds of all the people it permeated every walk of life. In five years the entire manhood of the nation had jumped a century

In 1861 there was no such thing as one railroad being able to run its cars on the tracks of another railroad The track gauges differed everywhere. Products and passengers had to be loaded, unloaded and reloaded Before the war was half over while English investors were buying southern bonds, cock sure that the south would be ultimately victorious, before the most long headed, practical men could have any possible way of forecasting the result, while the north was still suffering great defeats and Lincoln was calling for more volunteers, the railroad mileage for the country had increased tremendously Double tracks had replaced single tracks and the roads were everywhere standardized so that the cars from one company could pass over the tracks of another company, the nation's problem of the distribution of men and commodities thus made tremendous strides.

It was at this time that machinery was first introduced in agriculture—the harvester and reaper to do the work of many men and even then surplus crops were rotting on the ground Of course, before the middle period of conflict, the cotton crop was an exception, for by that time the northern blockade had become successful

During the civil war there were great advances made in steam navigation. The war marked the end of the "clipper ship." The modern steel ship came into existence at this time and steam navigation as we now think of it became fairly launched, changing forever the economic fare of the world.

The modern factory system also made tremendous advances. For instance, it was during this time that the modern ready made clothing originated. Woolen mills, cotton mills, and machine shops of every kind were going up all over the country, and inventors brought into existence industries new to the world.

It was the prosperity of the Mississippi valley extending from the northern reaches to the Louisiana delta that necessitated Grant's going down the river and laying siege to Vicksburg

It was the extraordinary prosperity of Louisiana that necessitated Butler's occupation of New Orleans and Farragut's going up the river It was the tremendous agricultural prosperity of Georgia and those parts of the south below the immediate theater of war that prompted Sherman's march from the west to the sea The economic advance of the United States during the half decade, the decade, and the decade and a half following '60, was so tremendous that it cannot be told in ordinary words and it would hardly do to use the adjectives necessary to imply it.

In the past just as now, it was stated a million times 'There will be a tremendous shortage of food We will be starving before winter' And yet there was no such shortage. All through the war American crops of every kind had increased in most unprecedented quantities and we were exporting to Europe in amounts that never before had been thought of or thought possible.

Thrifty School Children.

From the New York World.

Interesting figures showing the earning capacity of school children in vacation and after hours' employment are contained in a report issued by the national bureau of education. From an investigation of the cases of 14,391 children of the sixth, seventh and eighth grades in 11 states, it is estimated that a total of about $60,000,000 is earned annually from casual labor by school children of both sexes, mainly in such occupations as housework and messenger, delivery and personal service. Because of the strict labor laws, only a negligible percentage do vacation work in factories, mills and mines.

This is a surprisingly large income to be derived from the intermittent work of children it exceeds the wage payments of large industries and would nearly pay the interest on an issue of Liberty bonds. That school children possess this earning power is no doubt one of the reasons why they are eager to leave school, though the bureau ascribes the main cause to "dissatisfaction." That is an old complaint of schoolboys; that it exists today indicates only that they have not changed their nature. A satisfied schoolboy is an unattainable ideal, yet the bureau aspires to it in its suggestion of "vitalizing" school work by a change of method and providing "remunerative employment for children while attending school."

Why worry about remunerative employment for school children when they have already provided it for themselves to the extent of $60,000,000 a year? As respects vitalizing school work, to increase its appeal to the pupil, have not the school children of this generation been pampered enough as it is? If a new order of things is desired in the American system of public school education, the experiment might be tried of running it for the benefit of parents.

"Unmanifest Destiny."

From the Chicago Post

To what new fates, my country, far
And unforeseen of foe or friend,
Beneath what unexpected star,
Compelled to what unchosen end,

Across the sea that knows no beach,
The Admiral of Nations guides
Thy blind, obedient keels to reach
The harbor where thy future rides!

The guns that spoke at Lexington
Knew not that God was planning then
The trumpet word of Jefferson
To bugle forth the rights of men.

To them that wept and cursed Bull Run,
What was it but despair and shame?
Who saw behind the cloud the sun?
Who knew that God was in the flame?

Had not defeat upon defeat,
Disaster on disaster come,
The slave's emancipated feet
Had never marched behind the drum.

There is a Hand that bends our deeds
To mightier issues than we planned;
To, mightier issues than we planned;
Each son that triumphs, each that bleeds,
My country, serves Its dark command.

I do not know beneath what sky
Nor on what seas shall be thy fate;
I only know it shall be high,
I only know it shall be great.

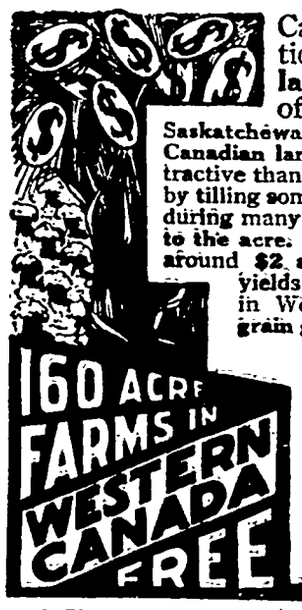
Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil



Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. An Iowa Case

W. H. Simmons, Forest City, Iowa, says: "My back pained as though it were being pulled apart. Often sharp, knifelike pains darted through me, making me almost helpless. Mornings I could hardly get out of bed and to stoop took all my strength. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills did me so much good that I kept on. I took four boxes in all and since then my back has never bothered me."

SIOUX CITY PTG. CO., NO. 30—1917.

Makes Heavy, Healthy Hogs

from skinny little shoats. Builds fat, bone and muscle. Better than corn for fattening. One man says: "15 sacks saved 150 bushels of corn." Another says: "Shoats gained 2½ pounds a day." Everyone is highly pleased with the excellent results. Makes more gain in two weeks than grain alone makes in three.

Come in and order a ton. Then watch how your pigs thrive on it—how they grow and fatten. There's money in it for you.

There were two auto wrecks Sunday. One occurred just this side of Clear Lake when driving at a high speed the back wheel broke down, throwing the car into the ditch and smashing it beyond repair. No one was seriously hurt. The other wreck occurred north of Emery when the driver rounded a turn too fast and went down a 12-foot embankment. The car was not damaged and we did not hear if anybody was hurt. Too much speed caused these wrecks. This should be a warning to others.

Frank J. Wenck, Popular Mayor of Klemme, Married

On a beautiful day of the week just past—one of those rare days of the early fall in September—when the world is filled with the beauty of life and inspired with the higher things in life; beautiful fall days that rival the freshest of spring days when the birds seek their mates; that one of our young men slipped quietly away from friends and business ties with only the object in view which marks the epoch in his life as the mile-stone of happiness.

A few brief days later the many friends of Mr. Frank J. Wenck were most pleasantly surprised to receive the announcement of his marriage to Miss Catherine A. Luchsinger. The happiest event in these two lives took place on last Thursday, September the twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred seventeen, at Des Moines, Iowa, at the hour of 2:00 p. m.

A more pleasant surprise could not have been formulated for Mr. Wenck has kept his friends in suspense for a long time, they were, indeed, happily surprised.

The Bride may need a few words of introduction as she may not be known to a great many of the Klemme people. She is a charming young lady, of Aberdeen, South Dakota. She is a graduate of the Nebraska Normal College at Wayne, Nebraska, and later taking post graduate work at Kearney Nebraska and also at the Cedar Rapids Business College, at which place she specialized in the Palmer method of Penmanship. She has instructed in the Public Schools of Columbus, Nebraska, Grand Island, Nebraska, and at Aberdeen, South Dakota, at the latter place she acted as Assistant in the Commercial Department and was Supervisor of Penmanship. She holds Degrees in her educational pursuits and is a very well educated young lady Mrs. Wenck possesses those desirable traits that go to make an ideal help-mate and home builder. She will be welcomed with warm hearts into the society of our little city.

Mr Wenck is very well known in this vicinity. He is a former Garner boy, having gone through the schools of Garner and later taking up further educational work along business lines at Toland's University, at Mason City, Iowa Frank came to this community about twelve years ago when he entered the State Savings Bank and was in it's employ for seven years, when he was called to Renwick, Iowa, as Cashier of the First National Bank. It was while in Renwick that Mr. Wenck met Miss Luchsinger and their little love affair began which gradually leads up to the present time and is united in this happy manner. Mr. Wenck was at Renwick three years, and again came back to Klemme and received the Cashiership of the State Savings Bank about two years ago. Frank is the "Prince of Good Fellows," an enterprising, energetic young man of sterling worth, capable in business, a warm hearted and sympathizing friend, a man that has found for himself the best in life and who will make an ideal husband for the young lady he has chosen as his life mate

Mr. Wenck is also the Mayor of our enterprising little city. He is always a Booster for Klemme and his election last spring was won by a large majority who selected him as a man who can be depended upon. A better man for the office cannot be found.

The Times joins with the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Wenck in wishing them happiness in abundance through-out their entire life; may their cup of life bubble o'er with happiness, prosperity and friendship.

They will make their future home in Klemme, Mr. Wenck having built an up-to-date modern home for his Bride. They will move into their new home as soon as it is completed and will "Be At Home" to their many friends.

THE RECEPTION IN HONOR OF MR. AND MRS. WENCK

On Monday Mr. Wenck returned to Klemme wth his Bride and at once his friends began preparations for a grand reception. Everything was kept very quiet and nothing out of the usual seemed to be taking place. Art McElmurray was "engineering the job" and was the busiest young man in Klemme that day. Everything was in readiness that evening.

To begin the program the Band, followed by a large crowd, stole noiselessly down to the residence of N. L. Palmer, where the Bride and Groom are at present staying until their house is completed. A couple of lively marches were rendered by the band when the happy couple appeared and were seated in a car and taken up through the street, showered all the way with confetti and followed by a cheering crowd of friends. They were then escorted to the Idle Hour Theatre where a long table, fifty feet in length, was set for the banquet. The orchestra, composed of three pieces by Miss Emerson, pianist, Mr. Reese, cornet and Mr. Spoor, violin, at once began playing some very good selections. After shaking hands with the happy couple and general visiting, the guests were seated to the table and were treated to a delightful luncheon. The tables were beautifully decorated with flowers of all kinds. After the luncheon everybody was given a wedding cigar. Chairs were pushed aside and upon a request the Groom gave a short talk which was received with much applause by the audience. Mr. Paul Griesemer then gave a very witty talk on the duties of the husband and also pleaded that Mrs. Wenck should be lenient with her husband and allow him a few of his "Bachelor Privileges." Another short talk was given by Mr. Mat Barry of Belmond, the topic of his speech being that there were a few "slackers" in Klemme. We do not mean war slackers, but he accused two gentlemen of being slackers for not getting married and quit the bachelor life. We will not mention the names of these gentlemen as we are of the impression that they will soon be resigning their position in the "Bachelor Club."

The company pushed aside chairs and spent the remainder of the evening visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Wenck and departed for home at a late hour. We could not get an accurate count, but we estimate that there were at least one hundred and fifty present at this reception. It is an event that will long remain in the hearts of those present. Here's three cheers for the Bride and Groom, may everlasting happiness be theirs!

RED CROSS ORGANIZED IN KLEMME

The ladies of Klemme and vicinity met at the Opera House last Friday afternoon for the purpose of organizing a Red Cross Society. The meeting was a success in every way and twenty-three members were enrolled.

Mrs. J. E. Wichman, Mrs. H. V. Reed and Mrs. C. E. Barnes of the Garner Red Cross were here to assist in the organizing of the society. Mrs. Wichman gave a talk on the purposes and benefits of the American Red Cross.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. O. E. Austin, Chairman; Mrs. W. F. Missman, Vice-Chairman; Mrs. C. W. Wiles, Treasurer and Mrs. A. R. White, Secretary.

The Klemme Red Cross hope to make this organization the largest of any in the state according to the population of this city.

The Ladies of the Red Cross appeal to the ladies of Klemme and vicinity to join the organization now. The country needs your help, you can do your bit by joining this organization and show your patriotism. A little of your time and work may be the means of saving the lives of some of our boys who are going away to fight our battles, and giving their lives, if need be, for their country.

Do your bit, join now.

RED CROSS MEETING

Next Wednesday at 2:00 P. M., the Red Cross will hold a meeting up over the Frank Gruetzmacher Store, which he kindly donated for their use. All members are requested to bring with them old linen such as bed sheets, pillow cases or old table cloths, which will be ripped up and made into bandages. Don't forget the time and the place. Be there.

Following is the peroration of a speech delivered in an intercollegiate oratorical contest in central Kentucky, 1896 "Standing upon the last decade of the grandest century ever measured by the flight of worlds, 'I dipt into the future as far as human eye could soe, saw the vision of the world and the wonder that would be'; saw the American continent united in the grandest confederacy ever formed; saw it the great sun of the solar system of nations around which all revolved, giving life and liberty to each and prosperity and happiness to all; saw its ports filled with the argosies of commerce; its brow blooming with the wreath of science; the breath of heaven blessing its flag, yet, in the vigor and buoyancy of youth, scorning pessimism and decay, marching ever onward to the accomplishment of its grand and glorious destiny.

A train of barges driven by motor traction recently reached the Regent's canal with loads of coal from the Midlands in England. These were the first motor barges to navigate the English canals for any distance, and the beginning of a development which the board of trade is watching with interest. In their journey of 150 miles from Cannock Chase to St George's wharf, King's Cross, the motor barges navigated seven different canals, and managed all the locks with ease leaving the horses on the towpath panting after them in vain. The motive power is a small motor driven by a mixture of paraffin and petrol This is fixed to the stern, and can be transferred from one barge to another in a few minutes.

Those who have made careful study of the nutritive properties of various grains and foods, agree that white corn is the most satisfactiry. It is also the cheapest. Figures quoted by the Literary Digest, show that one pound of cornmeal, hominy, or grits is equal in food value to one pound of wheat flour, one pound of rice, one and one-half pounds of cheese, two and three-quarter pounds of round steak, two dozen eggs, one half peck of potatoes, six pints of milk. "The south knows and appreciates the value of white corn for table use; why not the north the east and the west.?"

The war has shut off the European trade in firecrackers and fireworks generally out of Hong Kong, but the United States continues to take perhaps $250,000 worth of such goods out of the Hong-Kong field annually. The trade the last year has been hampered by high freights and particularly by a lack of service of sailing ships from Hong-Kong to New York Usually there are sailing ships on the berth in Hong-Kong, for the east coast of the United States, and because of the cheap freights and other advantages they offer they almost invariably carry a large quantity of firecrackers for the American market

Dr Tovokichi Iyenga director of East and West News Bureau says Japanese trade has reached the billion mark Her investments in bonds and notes of the entente powers total $300,000,000 Gold reserve in the bank of Japan and the government vaults amount to $400,000,000 Japan has cleared the oriental trade routes, but there is no chance of her sending troops to the battlefields To transport 1,000,000 Japanese soldiers, 1,000 ocean going ships of 4,000 tons each would be required Japan has only 70 ships of 5,000 tons or more

The mummy of a sacred cat from an Egyptian temple and a part of the private collection of Dr J William White, has been placed on exhibition in the Pennsylvania university museum. Mrs White has presented to the museum the entire collection of archaeological and ethnological subjects collected by Dr White in his world tours. The mummy of the cat is supposed to be from some temple and is in perfect condition, though it bears no marks which would serve to identify it with any particular temple.

The Somme battlefield is described as "a veritable junkman's paradise." Mountains of wine bottles are piled high along the roads and in the billets formerly occupied by German officers. These bottles are worth 25 to 30 cents each. Old iron, steel and lead are being permitted to rust, with no attempt to salvage it, because the advancing allies cannot spare the time and men. Thousands of miles of barbed wire are intact, not even rusted.

It is said the largest tree known, in thickness, is a partly decayed chestnut in Sicily, which is 60 feet across. The Mexican cypress and the oriental plane have reached 40 feet. This puts the California big tree and the baobob in the background, but the big tree is of greater bulk in compined height and girth and the baobob is thickest in relation to height

Baltimore, Md., has a new police officer called the anti noise policeman The Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises was founded in 1905 by Mrs Isaac H Rice since that time, public opinion has been in favor of compulsory noise elimination, although all cities have not been as progressive as Baltimore

The United States steamer Minneapolis recently carried the first cargo in 50 years up the Mississippi river to Minneapolis This trip marks the beginning of the general use of the river by Davenport, Rock Island and Moline factors in cooperation with the Mississippi Valley Waterways association.

The admiralty court awarded $332,750 for salving the steamer San Onofre, which got into difficulties in the ice fields of the north Atlantic in March, 1916 The steamer Ashtabula which assisted in the salvage was awarded $132,750, and the San Gregorio received $150,000.

In 1916 the United States exported drugs, chemicals and dyes amounting to $124,000,000, approximately $97,000,000 in excess of the previous year's exports.

FAIR PRICES FOR HOGS, IS DEMAND

Iowa War Emergency Committee Lays Matter Before Herbert C. Hoover.

Ames, Ia Sept 29.—Recommending that the price of hogs be established at the central markets in a fair relationship to the price of corn, a resolution framed by the state war emergency food committee, which met in Des Moines, was telegraphed yesterday to Herbert C Hoover.

"The war emergency food committee earnestly recommends that the price of hogs be established at the central markets in a fair relationship to the price of corn," reads the resolution. "We feel that a price sufficient to pay the cost of production is the only way to eliminate a pork famine during the next year."

LIMIT LIABILITY UNDER FEDERAL LAW

Railroad Employes Must Show They Are Actually Engaged in Interstate Work.

Marshalltown, Ia., Sept. 29.—A railroad employe is not entitled to the benefits of the federal employers' liability act unless he is actually engaged, at the time of his injury, on work or equipment connected directly with interstate traffic.

Such was the interpretation of the law as made in the district court here by Judge B. F. Cummings, and as it affects railroads and their employes is of general interest. The action at trial was one brought by William Burns, an employe of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad, who was injured here threo years ago while working on a locomotive. He brought suit against the railroad company for $5,000 damages for personal injury. The court held, however, that Burns had not shown that the locomotive on which he was injured, while helping repair it, had been stopped here for repairs while on an interstate run, and therefore was not entitled to recover under the federal liability act.

MAJOR GENERAL PLUMMER IS 62 YEARS OLD

Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Ia., Sept 29—Maj Gen E. H. Plummer, camp commandant, who celebrated his 62d birthday anniversary Monday, September 24, has observed previous birthday anniversaries in varied climes.

Last year General Plummer was in Nogales, Ariz., at his 61st birthday anniversary, the year before he was in Galveston, at the time of the big flood there.

September 24, 1914, found General Plummer as provost marshal general and acting mayor of Vera Cruz, during the American occupancy of that city.

In 1910 he was in the Philippines, in 1905 and 1906 at Fort Egbert, Alaska, 130 miles from the Arctic circle; in 1901, San Francisco, 1899-1900 in the Philippines, and in 1898 at home in New York city. That 1898 anniversary was the last he celebrated at home.

THESE MEN WILL FACE DESERTION CHARGES

Marshalltown, Ia., Sept. 29.—The first cases of alleged desertion from the new national army to be reported from this county were sent into the federal authorities by the local exemption board yesterday. The cases are those of James W. Clark, of this city and Clarence J Fiscus, of Clemons

Both of these young men were among the 90 ordered to Camp Dodge last week. Neither reported here for mobilization, although Fiscus wrote the board, saying that he would report in person at Des Moines for 'noncombative duty,' being a Friend and opposed to war. Clark's whereabouts were unknown until the police located him at Anamosa and placed him under arrest He is now in jail here awaiting an order for the disposition of his case

At the latter meeting it is expected to perfect the organization of the association to back the new movement and have the necessary funds subscribed. Banker S. S. Davenport, of Lester, and George Dunlap, county agent for Sioux county, are out making arrangements for the preliminary meetings.

IOWA WOMEN MEMBERS OF DEFENSE COUNCIL MEET

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 29 —The September meeting of the Iowa division of the woman's committee of the council of national defense, of which Mrs. Francis E. Whitley is the chairman, was held yesterday afternoon at the Hotel Chamberlain and was attended by about 100 representative Iowa and local women.

In addition to the district chairmen, as well as many of the county chairmen, a large number of the members of the executive board and committees of the Iowa Federation of Women's clubs were in attendance.

All of the officers including Mrs. Bessie Mansfield, of Burlington, first vice president, Mrs. H. W. Spaulding, of Grinnell, second vice president, Miss Catherine McKay, of Ames, secretary, and Mrs. John W. Watzek, of Davenport, were present.

NINE THOUSAND HORSES REQUIRED AT CAMP DODGE

Washington, D. C., Sept. 29.—Nine thousand horses and mules will be required at Camp Dodge. The war department so informed Representative Dowell.

Mr. Dowell will once more urge the department to establish a depot quartermaster at Des Moines and will point out that in view of the great number of horses to be maintained there it will mean a large saving to the government to buy grain and hay in Iowa, to say nothing of the advantages of such a depot in obtaining supplies for the troops themselves

METHODIST OF UPPER IOWA IN CONFERENCE

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 29.—The sixty-third annual conference of the M. E. church of the Upper Iowa conference opened here last evening with an address of welcome by President W. A Jessup, of the state university, after which the Rev. Mathew J. Trenery, of Chicago, a member of the Sunday school board gave an address on the work of the Sunday schools. This was followed by a lecture by the Rev. Ralph W. Keeler, speaking in the place of the Rev. D. D. Forsythe, who was unable to be present, on the subject of home missions

RETURNS TO PRISON FROM WIFE'S FUNERAL

Leo Perrin, Bank Defaulter, Is Permitted to Make Trip Without Guard.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Sept 29 --Leo Perrin was returned to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth today, following his trip to Eagle Grove, Ia., where he attended the funeral of his wife Monday.

Perrin, who is serving time in the federal prison for defaulting in the funds of the Cedar Rapids National bank, made the trip to and from the prison without guard.

According to relatives, Mrs Perrin died of a broken heart after grieving for more than a year over her husband's embezzlement. Perrin will be released shortly.

FORT DODGE MEN HELD FOR BIG SILK ROBBERY

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 28.—Three Fort Dodge men are under arrest, a woman in St. Paul, and another Fort Dodge man is under investigation, in connection with the big silk robbery in Fonda on the night of September 5 More arrests seem certain in the near future. Most of the silk has been recovered.

Those arrested are Jack, Kinney, who is in jail at Pocahontas, George Bloombery and Charles Sorenson, who are in jail here.

Silk dresses and coats valued at about $3,000 were taken from the Tolen store in Fonda on the night of September 5

ELKS' CONVENTION IN SESSION AT DUBUQUE

Dubuque, Ia., Sept. 28.—Several hundred Elks from all over Iowa are gathered here today for the annual state convention which was postponed from last June until this time. The feature of today's session is an outing at O'Meara's park, across the river in Wisconsin.

The women accompanying the visiting Elks are being entertained at the Elks' home by Dubuque women.

The main business session of the convention will be held tomorrow morning in the lodge rooms of the Elks' home

IOWA SOLDIERS DEPART FROM DES MOINES CAMP

Des Moines, Ia, Sept 28 —Vastly different from the entraining of the fighting Third was the departure of Battery F and the Iowa ammunition train

Many relatives and friends of the soldiers were present to bid them goodby, but there was no noisy demonstration as was given the Wild Rose regiment when it left for the east

The two divisions entrained at separate places and over different roads, the ammunition train pulling out shortly after 11 o'clock in two divisions. The battery left at about the same hour

CAMP DODGE—Army bread is one of the most popular items on the bill of fare served to members of the new national army gathered here. It made such a hit with one northwesterner that he thought the folks at home might like it, so he asked the camp baker for the recipe, and was told that it was made of one carload of flour, one-half ton of yeast 900 pounds of salt and 900 pounds of sugar The soldier is employing all his mathematical knowledge to reduce the recipe to family size

LEMARS—The prize winners in the exhibit of the boys' and girls' garden contest were Albert Baack, Marie Keenan, Clarence Schumacker, Huston Cunningham, Katherine Steffen, Kenneth Lawrence, Ronald Woodke, Naomi Langhout, Cloyd Bogenrief, Lucile Langhout, Edgar Mock, Irene Clark, Ruth Schumaker George Karl, Margaret Schueller, Jules Steffen, George Hotham, Lyle Remer, Edith Rees, Orton Parkinson, Mason Huxtable, Henry Schlesser, Lyle Schumacker and Estle Balley.

MARSHALTOWN—Rev. Merl N. Smith, a former well known Iowa pastor in the Methodist Episcopal church, will soon enter army Y. M. C. A. work at the Presidio, San Francisco. Rev. Mr. Smith now is pastor of a Methodist church at Pasadena, Cal The church has granted its pastor a year's leave of absence and he will enter the army camp October 7 He will become a secretary of religious work in the army Y. M. C A.

IOWA CITY—Announcement was made here of the selection of O. E. Klingaman, head of the state university's extension division, by the state board of education to act as educational director at the Des Moines cantonment In such capacity he will represent all the universities and colleges in the territory which Camp Dodge serves.

LEMARS—The September term of the Plymouth county district court is in session with Judge J. W. Anderson, of Onawa, presiding. The grand jury was drawn as follows: F. G. Meinert, Remsen, foreman; Frank Clarke, Elkton, John Cronin, America, Ben Fischer, Washington, G H Frenchs, Preston; M. Schuept, Fredonia, C. F. Werth, Stanton.

HAWARDEN—At a special city election held here at which women were permitted to cast their ballots the city voted $18,000 in bonds for the erection of a new city hall. The building also will be used for all community purposes The vote was 236 in favor of the new city building and 25 against it. Of the 66 women who voted on the issue 60 voted in favor of it

IOWA CITY—In order to enable the city employes to meet the high cost of living an ordinance was passed at an adjourned session of the city council at which the salaries of the fire department was raised from $60 per year to $300 per year each, while the monthly allowance of the police force was raised from $5 to $10 each. The city clerk was allowed $10 per month for stenographic work and the city attorney was given $200 for extra services rendered.

COUNCIL BLUFFS—Charging negligence, Mrs. Harry E. Welcher, of Creston, today brought suit in federal court here for the recovery of $200,000. Her husband was killed in the Creston railroad yards and plaintiff claims he was her sole support.

IDA GROVE—After 20 years on a farm and in the stock raising business Edward Hoffman will retire and move to Ida Grove, having purchased the residence of J. G Mehring, a retired business man of this city, who will move to California.

DES MOINES—It is not believed that the delay of the reporting of the remaining 18,000 drafted men still due at Camp Dodge will be over a few days past October 3, says Maj. M. A. Butler, construction quartermaster here. He says the cantonment will be completely ready for all the men very soon after that date.

LEMARS—A deal has been closed whereby C. C. Ban sold the Brunswick hotel to J. H. Hauber and Dr. G. P Mammen, the consideration being $10,000. A modern building probably will supplant the frame structure at present in use, as the corner is one of the most suitable in town for a hotel.

FIRST IOWA TO MOVE SOUTHWARD THURSDAY

Orders Received to Start for Deming—Ammunition Train Departs Today.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 27.—Col. E. J. Bartley, commanding the First Iowa, today received orders to start with that organization for Deming, N. M., Thursday. The order includes Company M, at Fort Des Moines, and will take a total of 1,093 Iowa guardsmen to the Thirty-fourth division.

Iowa ammunition train and Battery F are expected to leave today for Deming.

NEW YORK NEWSPAPERS HIGHLY PRAISE IOWA BOYS

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27.—New York newspapers give high praise to the Third Iowa troops in accounts of the review of the Rainbow division by Secretary Baker. Today's New York Times says.

"After Alabama came the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Infantry from Iowa, boys from the farms, the banks, the factories and the shops of that greatest of agricultural states. Lean and trained to the minute the westerners made a magnificent appearance as they came swinging down Clinton road. Col. E. R. Bennett was in command, and he looked proud, as he had a right to be, as he led his men past the secretary."

CHEROKEE GIRL IS RUN DOWN BY AUTO

Cherokee, Ia., Sept. 27.—Another tragedy occurred in Cherokee last evening resulting in the death of Romaine Richards, 12-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. R. Richards, residing at 324 East Cedar street. The little girl was run over by an auto driven by Gerald Clark, aged about 12 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Clark. Her injuries resulted in her death at 3:30 this morning. The Clark boy was driving his father's car. In the car with him were Ned Elfrank and Lowell Cobb, 12 and 13 years old. Near the Richards home the little Richards girl and her brother were about to cross the street when they saw the car coming. The Elfrank boy says that the girl started to cross and then went back, then, apparently thinking she could make it, started to cross again, the car having slacked up. The Clark boy not looking for her to try it again drove on. She was struck by the fender, the front of the car having been pulled away from her. In addition to other injuries her skull was fractured She was taken by her parents in the Clark car to the office of Dr. Merrick, but all efforts to save her life were of no avail.

EDITOR OF "FOOL KILLER" ARRESTED IN FORT DODGE

Fort Dodge Ia, Sept. 27.—D K. W. Mak, editor of the Fool Killer of Kansas City, was arrested here by federal authorities on the charge of violating the espionage act of June 6, 1917 He is in the county jail here. In his preliminary hearing he was bound over to the grand jury on bonds of $3,000, but he was unable to furnish bonds

The Fool Killer editor is officially charged with promoting insubordination and disloyalty Articles in his magazine are alleged to have ridiculed the president and ridiculed the conscription act. One article intimated that there would soon be a great change in the governments of the world and that the "old gentleman" at the White House might be found fleeing through the swamps of New Jersey dressed in women's clothing in imitation of an historic case. This might refer to either Jefferson Davis or Prince Metternich of Austria, both having had the experience.

Mak publishes his magazine in Kansas City, but he has made his headquarters in Fort Dodge since July 26.

"I write my articles here and mail them to Kansas City," said Mak to a reporter in the county jail this morning.

IOWA ATTENDANCE SHOWS NO DECREASE

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 27 —It became known today from reliable sources that the registration for the school year at the Iowa university is just 300 less students than last year at a corresponding date. No official figures are obtainable but the facts are that the fear of an unreasonable shrinkage this year on account of the war was unfounded.

Last year's registration showed more than 3,500 students, so that if the present ratio is kept up throughout the year about 3,200 may be expected. However, it is possible that this number may be increased by the return of a part of the 200 students who left the university last spring to enter farm work.

IOWA REGIMENT TO MOVE SOUTH THURSDAY

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 27.—Orders were received by Colonel Bartley here today to have the First Iowa in readiness to move to Deming, N. M., Thursday. None of the drafted men will go with them, although enough will be sent to bring the First and Second to war strength when it is determined how many are needed.

Twenty thousand, eight hundred drafted men, composing the first and second increments, are at Camp Dodge now. Maj Gen. E. H. Plummer, the commandant, is celebrating his 62nd birthday today.

The officers at Camp Dodge have declared war on bootleggers and gamblers who are said to be lurking in the woods adjacent to the cantonment.

NO MORE SOLDIERS TO CAMP DODGE FOR A TIME

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 27.—Gov. W L. Harding today received a telegram from the war department informing him that no more Iowa drafted men would be sent to the Camp Dodge cantonment until the camp was ready for them.

Similar telegrams, it was understood, were sent to the governors of other states sending men to Camp Dodge. The telegram received by Governor Harding follows:

"No more men will be sent to Camp Dodge from Iowa on October 3, because the camp is not ready for them. As soon as the camp is completed and ready for the men they will be sent on."

PROMINENT LEMARS MAN SUCCUMBS TO ILLNESS

LeMars, Ia., Sept. 27.—George E. Richardson, one of the prominent land owners of northwestern Iowa, died at his home in LeMars, Ia., Saturday morning and was buried Monday afternoon.

George Richardson was born in Massachusetts and came to LeMars in 1873, and has been one of the foremost men active in building up LeMars and northwestern Iowa.

Besides his widow he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Cond, of Hull, and one sister, Mrs. Clay, of Iowa Falls.

TRANSFER HAVNER CASE TO LOGAN

Matter of Indictment of Attorney General to Be Investigated There.

Red Oak, Sept. 29.—Attorney General Havner, under indictment in Montgomery county on a charge of "oppression in office," has been granted a change of venue to Harrison county The order was signed today by Judge W. D. Boies who presided at the ax murder trial

County Attorney Oscar Wentsrand who was in the court room did not resist.

In asking that the place of trial be fixed at some place other than Red Oak, the attorney general asserted in his petition, that it would be impossible for him to secure a fair and impartial trial in Montgomery county because of existing prejudice against him.

Attorney I M Parsons of Des Moines, will be Havner's lead council Other attorneys retained are R Robert Healy of Fort Dodge, and Lewis Mires of Corydon

Attorney General Havner was indicted by the Montgomery county grand jury on the opening day of the Kelly trial, September 4 He is alleged to have resorted to improper methods in his examination of Ora Mae Willard, in the grand jury room during the probe of the ax murder which resulted in a tacit exoneration of former Senator F F Jones and his son Albert The same men have been repeatedly accused by Detective Wilkerson of complicity in the Villisca slaughter

DEATH PENALTY FOR KORNILOFF

Those Who Forced Revolt by Blocking Discipline in Army Constitute Court Martial.

By United Press

Petrograd Sept 29 The court martial of General Kornilott will probably result in a tragedy

Kornilott is to be judged by those whose scheme of making the army subject to civilian control won him to revolt. Men under the domination of the old Russian council of workmen and soldiers will constitute the court martial to try the commander It is the influence that Kornilott soldier and fighter and the man unskilled in politics, feared

One of the main reasons why the general attempted to overcome Kerensky was the provisional government's appointment of certain civilians to represent the government at the front. These civilians had power greater than did Kornilott They very often supported the soldiers against the general These commissioners were all civilians and politicians The soldiers called them Kerensky's spies If army men were compelled to submit their plans to these civilians before a single move could be made

One of these commissioners was Kerensky's nephew who lived high and lorded it over the officers He too, always supported the soldiers against the officers and in that manner there was no discipline, a thing that Kornilott has insisted must be had if the armies are to be successful

Petrograd Sept 29 —Today the democratic congress held its first session this evening in the municipal theater, 1,200 delegates from all parts of Russia being in attendance All the members of the provisional government headed by Premier Kerensky were present Several members of the diplomatic corps occupied a special box

SAYS SEN. LAFOLLETTE CONDONES BABY MURDER

Racine, Wis. Sept 29—Colonel Roosevelt entered Senator LaFollette's home state last night and two big meetings applauded his criticisms of the senator's attitude toward the participation of America in the war

"I read a newspaper account of Senator LaFollette's St Paul speech in which his words condoned the sinking of the Lusitania with its 1,100 souls on board," said he. "Of those lost 59 were women with infants under 1 year of age and another 50 were under 2 years And I remember reading the Queenstown dispatches telling how these mothers were laid out at the morgue with their babies still in their arms as they had tried to shield and save them and a senator of the United States tries to condone this infamy"

EXPLAINS HOLLAND'S PART.

Washington, D. C. Sept. 28—The Netherlands minister, Chevalier Van Rappard, today presented an explanation, which the state department accepted, as satisfactory, of the references in the recently disclosed Von Igel papers to sales of ammunition by Germany to Holland.

The Netherlands minister's explanation declared the ammunition was part of that bought up in the United States by Germany at the beginning of the war in order to keep it from the allies, but that the Netherlands government finally decided not to buy any of it The munitions were later offered for sale and some were sold to governments.

Must Raise $14,000,000,000 By Bonds for War by July, McAdoo Declares to Bankers

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 29.—Vast over subscription of the $3,000,000,000 second Liberty loan was confidently predicted by Secretary McAdoo in an address here today before the American Bankers' association calling on the bankers to give the same patriotic support to the new bond issue that they gave to the first

Emphasizing the tremendous financial task ahead of the nation, Mr McAdoo pointed out that it would be necessary to raise between $13,000,000,000 and $14,000,000,000 by additional bond issues before June 30, 1918 This will not be easy, he said, but it can be done by everybody—banker business man and men and women in every walk of life—joining hands to see it through

"Fortunately," he added, "the resources of the national and state banks (including trust companies) of the United States are now $37,000,000,000 At the outbreak of the civil war the combined resources of the banks were estimated to be $1,500,000,000, and yet with these limited banking resources the union government raised $3,000,000,000 by bond sales. Upon the same basis we should now be able to raise $74,000,000,000 through government loans I am not suggesting that this may be done, I am only drawing a comparison"

TEUTONS MAKE BLOODY RECORD

Slaughter Unequaled in German Ranks Since First Battle of Ypres Results From Counter Attacks.

By United Press

London, Sept 29 No slaughter of Germans since the first battle of Ypres has been comparable to the great losses they have sustained during the last two or three days of battling with the British The Germans have made attacks in mass formation and their men have been mowed down like weeds before a mower by the machine gun and artillery fire of the British

By Associated Press

Efforts to break into the new ground won by the British in the renewal of the Flanders offensive Wednesday are being continued by the Germans Failing to shake the British line elsewhere they tried it out last night at Zonnebeke where the British have pushed far along the road to Roulers The British artillery and rifle fire broke up the efforts

Zonnebeke is an important point The present British position in the village places them within six miles of the important north and south railway line connecting Lille with Ostend on the coast, the cutting of which or its domination at even medium range artillery fire would seriously handicap the Germans in their Flanders operations.

In the Tower Hamlets and Polygon wood regions, toward the British right flank, the clearing up process which followed Wednesday's battle was carried out further last night and the Germans were driven from isolated positions to which strong parties of them were clinging

In the Argonne region on the French front, the Germans of the crown prince's forces made an attempt last night to break into the French lines attacking three times These assaults were all repulsed, the Germans sustaining heavy losses

On the Russian front the Russians are showing renewed aggressiveness In engagements with the Kurds detachment of Turkish forces have been driven back in the Rustagan, where the Russians today report the capture of the town of Ognotak 24 miles west of Meri Believed Unknown Dreadnaught Will Be Easily Floated, Official Announcement Says.

Washington Sept 29 - The navy department at noon today authorized an announcement that a battleship of the fleet is aground in home waters, but resting easily and probably will be floated soon

The department issued this statement

"The navy department has received an official report stating that a battleship of the United States navy is aground in home waters The ship is resting easily and it is expected that she will be floated without difficulty The newspapers are urgently requested not to print any information which might lead to the establishment of the identity or location of the stranded vessel

CAUSE OF UNREST IN WESTERN STATES SOUGHT

Washington D C, Sept 29 Members of the special commission headed by Secretary Wilson and appointed by the president to investigate labor unrest in the west today were completing final arrangements for the trip which will begin Monday Included in the itinerary are Arizona, California, Utah, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana Wyoming, Colorado and possibly New Mexico.

An intensive study of local conditions in each state, together with conference with governors manufacturers and labor leaders will reveal the basic causes, it is hoped of the industrial troubles which have impeded the nation's war program

AUGUST EXPORTS LOWERED.

New York, Sept 28.—Exports of merchandise at the port of New York fell more than $55,000,000 last month, as compared with August, 1916 Imports for August of the present year showed a gain of more than $14,000,000, as compared with August, 1916.

MILK MEN ASK CONTROL.

Washington, D. C., Sept 28.- Manufacturers of canned milk representing 95 per cent of the entire industry in the United States, in conference with the food administration, agreed to submit their business to the supervision of the food administration for the war and to forego war profits, either from the army and navy

BREAK DELAYED BY PRESIDENT

Irigoyen, Despite Action of His Congress, Insists Germany Has Adjusted Incident.

Buenos Aires, Sept 29 President Irigoyen is preparing a message in reply to the request made by congress that the diplomatic relations between Argentine and Germany be broken The president, it is understood, contends that it is impossible to break off relations with Germany because of the Count von Luxburg incident, the government considering this affair to have been adjusted by the German foreign office's explanation

KELLY JURY IN DISAGREEMENT

Discharged From Further Considering Case of Preacher Charged With Murder.

Red Oak, Ia., Sept. 28.—The jury in the trial of Rev Lyn George J. Kelly, charged with murder in connection with the Villisca ax slayings, was discharged by Judge Boies at 1:25 today for failure to agree on a verdict after deliberating since late Wednesday.

It was learned that 22 ballots were taken by the jury and that on a number of the later ballots 11 voted for acquittal and one for "not guilty because of insanity

Kelly It was stated will be returned at once to the county jail at Logan, Ia, where he will be held without bail pending further action in the case

H M Havner attorney general of Iowa, who was in personal charge of the prosecution said the state had no intention of requesting dismissal of the indictment against Kelly

Both Mr and Mrs Kelly were in the court room on both occasions, when the jury was called in today

It is rumored that a man, whom the defense sought to oust immediately after the panel was completed, is the one who has been "hanging" the jury.

Attorney General Havner left Red Oak for Des Moines at noon, without waiting to learn the outcome.

Before departing he said: "As far as the state is concerned, the indictment against Kelly will never be dismissed."

PERSHING REPORTS TWO DEAD, ONE HURT

First Lieut. Keating Wounded During Air Raid—Private Accidentally Killed.

Washington, Sept 29—The slight wounding of First Lieut. Howard F. Keating, of Philadelphia, medical corps, during an air raid on the night of September 24 was reported to the war department today by General Pershing.

The death of Private James Tracy, of Philadelphia, Company F, First engineers, as a result of "an accident in the line of duty," also was reported.

Another cablegram announced the death on September 24, from natural causes, of Sergt Pit Johnson, Twenty-eighth Infantry, of St Paul

CONFEREES RATIFY BIG WAR TAX MEASURE

Washington, Sept. 28—The war tax bill, increased to levy about $2,700,000,000, was today in the last stages of completion. Final drafting and printing of the conferees' agreement was in progress, with formal approval planned at a late afternoon meeting.

At the conclusion of the final conference Senator Simmons and Representative Kitchin, heading the respective conferees, planned to make public the results of two weeks' conference.

AUSTRIANS SHUT GATES

Geneva, Thursday, Sept. 27.—The Austrian frontier was closed yesterday. No telegrams or travelers or newspapers arrived in Switzerland today from Austria. Abbas Hilmi, former khedive of Egypt, however, received a special pass for Vienna. The ex-khedive, who has been living in Switzerland for several months, has decided to take up permanent residence in that city.

ELECTION FRAUDS INQUIRY ORDERED

Mitchel-Bennett Recount Reveals Crookedness in More Than 100 Precincts.

New York, Sept 29.—Discovery of evidence of "palpable fraud" in more than 100 election districts in connection with last week's republican primaries was announced today by District Attorney Edward Swann In 16 of these districts, he said, the election officials would be examined at once under subpoena

During the recount William M Bennett, former state senator, testifies to gain This afternoon his apparent majority had reached 492 votes over Mayor Mitchel, fusion candidate, who by the official returns won the republican nomination for mayor.

BOLSHEVIKI RULE WRECKS NATION

Russians Are Bent Only on "Reforms," Murder and Robbery, American Who Knows, Says.

Stockholm, Sept 29.—An American who has spent 10 years in European capitals and whose position compels him to take the viewpoint of the impartial observer, reached here today after six weeks in Petrograd and gives a pessimistic report of the fighting spirit in Russia and of political and industrial conditions there. He says:

"There is no fighting spirit except among the Cossacks and Caucasians, and that seems to be waning.

"The interior cities and villages are filled with Russian troops who refuse to go to the front. Young Russians of the better class are hunting the streets of Petrograd for men who are willing to become officers. Since the murder of officers by men has become a daily occupation, the most fervent patriots will not assume the risks of taking commissions

"Newspapers in Helsingfors carry daily accounts of murder of officers and civilians by soldiers, often accompanied by robbery The Bolsheviki are gaining the upper hand. I venture to predict their eventual supremacy. This means almost the elimination of Russia as a factor in the war

"The government's utter powerlessness was recently shown in connection with the exile of a number of 'dark forces.' The Bolsheviki took them from a train at Viborg, now are sending them back to Petrograd and the government does not dare to insist that its deportation order be carried out

"The Bolsheviki demonstration of joy over the fall of Riga held in front of the war office, was suffered by the government in silence.

"When Kornilloff issued his ultimatum the news was received with great joy by a great proportion of substantial citizens, and even men in the government departments told me of their secret hope that he would come to Petrograd"

YOUTH OF 22 HOLDS MAN SIZED JOB IN WAR

Washington, D C., Sept. 29.—He's only 22 years old—Senor Don Garcia Pelayo-Olay, but he's holding down a man sized job and getting away with it.

Senor Olay came to this country shortly after war was declared, to take charge of the relief work being conducted by the Spanish embassies and legations in belligerent European countries and the United States. His chief task is to establish connections between prisoners in war camps and war sufferers in the over run district and their more fortunate relatives in this country.

An idea of the amount of work being done by the relief branch of the Spanish embassy here can be obtained from the statement that in August alone more than $26,000, representing the remittances of 900 donors was dispatched to Polish war sufferers in Russian territory, occupied by Germany.

BOLSHEVIKI CHEER AS GERMANS MOVE UP BALTIC

Petrograd, Thursday, Sept. 29.—Premier Kerensky addressed the democratic congress at its first session today in the municipal theater.

M. Kerensky was interrupted frequently by shouts from one group and another which led at times to altercations lasting several minutes. At one point when the premier spoke of the refusal of the soldiers' and workmen's delegates of Helsingfors to oppose the reopening of the Finnish diet, although the government had forbidden, the Bolsheviki burst into loud cheers.

"Cheer, my friends if you will," said M. Kerensky when he was able to make himself heard. "But bear in mind that a German fleet is moving up the Baltic."

The delegates of the right jeered the Bolsheviki, asking them why they did not cheer the premier's remark, inasmuch as the Germans were their friends.

HOUSE COLLECTS U. S. DATA.

New York, Sept. 28.—Col. E. M. House, who has represented President Wilson unofficially on several missions, has admitted that he had been requested by the president to aid in collecting data to be presented at the peace conference at the close of the war.

No conference with representatives of governments now engaged in preparation of data are planned, Colonel House said.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE FAVORED.

Stockholm, Sept. 28.—Approximately 500,000 of the kingdom's popular vote was cast for and 250,000 against the proposal for a democratic revision of the Swedish constitution abolishing plural voting in municipalities and giving women the franchise.

BYRAM SUCCEEDS EARLING.

New York, Sept. 28.—H. E. Byram has been formally elected president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad company. A. J. Earling, who retired from the presidency, was elected chairman of the board of directors.

FIGHT ENLIVENS PROBE ORATORY ON HOUSE FLOOR

Heflin and Norton Clinch, Fall Over, and Wait for Someone to Separate Them.

NOT A BLOW IS STRUCK

Britten of Illinois, Draft Opponent Named by Heflin, Demands His Expulsion.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 29.—The row in the House over Representative Heflin's charges culminated today in a fight between Heflin and Representative Norton, his chief critic. Friends soon separated them.

The climax came at the end of a gusty session of the House which did not approve the action of the rules committee in refusing to begin investigation of Heflin's charges that certain congressmen acted suspiciously about the time Count von Bernstorff was asking his government to authorize the expenditure of $50,000 to influence congress.

Fall, But Fail to Strike.

Norton, who had led the attack on Heflin for his charges, had gone over to the democratic side to talk to Heflin The row broke out at once, the two men clinched and fell over a row of seats, while friends from both sides of the hall piled around and separated them before blows were struck.

"Did you ever say that I was disloyal?" Norton says he asked Heflin

"No," Heflin replied.

Norton then made some remark about his being as loyal as any one in the House, and Heflin told him to go away.

"You get on out of here," Heflin is reported to have said, starting to rise in his seat.

Surprised, No One Stops 'Em.

Norton stood still while Heflin sprang up and grasped Norton by the coat lapels. The two men grappled for a moment and then fell over with Norton on top.

Immediately the House was in an uproar. Speaker Clark, banged for order, while members leaped over seats and down aisles to reach the struggling men. The sergeant-at-arms hurriedly grasping the mace, his badge of authority, ran toward the combatants. Disorder reigned in the galleries where people rose from their seats and rushed to the rail to see into the pit of the House.

Friends separated the men without difficulty and led them to the cloak rooms. The only marks of combat showed on Norton's white collar and Heflin's usually immaculate white shirt front. Order was restored as quickly as it had been disturbed.

Before the fight, Congressman Britten had suggested Heflin be expelled from the House.

DENY ASHE STARVED HIMSELF TO DEATH

Doctors Say Heart and Lung Trouble Caused Demise of Sinn Feiner.

London, Sept. 29.—The death in Dublin on Wednesday of Thomas Ashe, a Sinn Fein leader, reported to have been due to voluntary starvation, has accentuated painfully the difficulties underlying the surface of Irish politics and Sinn Fein opinion is inflamed seriously Ashe's body, dressed in the uniform of the Irish volunteers, lies in state in a Dublin hospital and there may be a public funeral on Sunday. Other Sinn Fein leaders in the hospital prison are reported in a dangerous condition.

Professor McMeeney testified that the post mortem examination at which several other doctors were present, showed that Ashe did not die of hunger. The body was not emaciated and there was an abundance of food in the stomach. Death, he said, was due to syncope, arising partly from heart trouble and partly from an entire congestion of the lungs.

Dr. McKenna, a hospital surgeon, testified that Ashe told him after he had been feed forcibly on Tuesday that he had collapsed from a fit of coughing.

SOLDIERS' INSURANCE BILL MAY BE DELAYED

Washington, Sept. 29.—The soldiers' insurance bill is still lying in the Senate committee and the prospects today are it will be held over to the next session of congress. The civil rights bill which would render soldiers immune from liability for debt during their terms of service, is also being held in committee.

Indications are that final adjournment will be taken on October 10.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL REPORTED.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 28.—The civil rights bill to create a monatorium for soldiers and sailors was reintroduced in the House today, in revised form, for early action.

SEEK DRAFT SLACKERS ON DESERTION CHARGES

Washington, Sept. 28.—With a reward of $50 for the delivery of each deserter, the provost marshal generals' office today began a drive to round up at once all drafted men who have not reported to their local boards as directed, and all who have not reported to the adjutant generals of their respective states when ordered.

All such are considered deserters.

LLOYD-GEORGE SUES CRITICS.

London, Sept. 29.—David Lloyd-George, the premier, is commencing proceedings for libel against certain newspapers which announced that on the occasion of last Monday night's air raid the premier left London for his house at Walton Heath The fact is that the premier started for France that night

When her older brother allowed the kitten to fall from his knee Alice was deeply touched and told him to be careful or he would hurt the kitten. But mother told her a cat had nine lives, and so she need not fear. She meditated a moment and then replied: "Yes, but maybe this is the ninth life."

GOODELL NEWS

September 30th being the 44th birthday of Mr. Jess Gardner of Ventura, Iowa, the friends and relatives planned a surprise and went there with well filled baskets of good things to eat. A large birthday cake with candles on was quite a surprise, but when his sister, Mrs. Henry Maitland, presented him with a purse of money, that was a surprise indeed. Among the guests was Mrs. Will Beardsley of Chicago.

We ask all those indebted to us to please pay up before October 1st and settle up with us either by note or cash. We have to have money to pay debts. Do not fail to call and oblige.

CORN CAMPAIGN TIIRU SCHOOLS

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT PLANS MONSTER CAMPAIGN WITH EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

A campaign to insure the seed corn for Hancock County for 1918 has been launched by the County Superintendent of Schools, J. R. Baggs, with the help of L. T. Nutty of the Extension Department of Ames.

Mr. Nutty was in the county seat Saturday perfecting arrangements for the work.

It is the plan to work through the rural schools, interesting the boys and girls and through them the farmers in the importance of good seed picked early and properly stored if the 1918 crop is to be assured.

"There is no need of there being a shortage of seed for the coming spring," says Mr. Nutty in an interview Saturday. "If every farmer can be induced to go into the fields and select those ears which showed some maturity at the time of the recent frost. It may be necessary for some men to go to neighbors fields but for the most part farmers will find fairly well matured seed on their own farms."

Arrangements are being made to have township meetings of the rural schools having all the schools of the township get together where a seed corn talk will be given by one of the seed corn men.

Note the day and time of your township meeting and be there.

Parents as well as pupils are invited.

Corn raised by the boys will be judged in separate class.

SCHOOL NOTES

The Klemme school base ball team were over to Meservey last week Friday to play the Meservey school team. The scores were in favor of Meservey until the 4th inning when we ran in 6 scores, thereby tying with Meservey with a score of 11 to 11. It was agreed upon to play five innings, but after the fourth inning Meservey decided to retire from the field.

The High School gave a program in the grammar room last Monday. Only two visitors were present. We hope to have more visitors to witness the programs which will be given in the future, for a program is planned for the last Friday afternoon of every month.

Morningside Addition is a great improvement to this town but a good school is a better improvement, so help us a little financially and we will put Klemme and Klemme High on the map with the rest of the good ones.

Herold Ridder, one of our high school boys, is absent from school this week.

We have received a proclamation from the Governor of our State, setting aside Tuesday, October 9th, 1917, as "Fire Prevention Day."

Thirteen subscriptions to "Current Events" were recently sent in, for the members of the school. This shows that our pupils are wide awake and progressive.

The basket ball court has been finished and the boys began practice on Monday.

Five members were absent from the grammar room Monday.

It is reported that Fred Arnold is ill at this writing.

The baseball game with the Meservey school Friday was a batting contest, both teams being weak in fielding. It was the first game our boys have played and they were rather nervous. We have good material and with some hard practice and team work on a suitable diamond we should develop a winning team next spring. The game ended in a tie which will be played off some time during the week at home.

Over the Fence and Out.

At the Gibson county fair at Princeton there are places where the fences must be guarded to keep boys and others from swarming over and in, says the Indianapolis News. This year one of the amateur policemen appointed for a long strip of fence sat down in the shade and fell asleep. Ben Murphy, president of the association, chanced to see a long gangling youth climb the fence there. "You'll have to pay or get out," he told the youth. "Got no money; guess I'll get out," was the response. "No, on second thought," said Murphy, "I'll let you see it on condition. You go wake that policeman and tell him you climbed in over the fence."

Shucks, then he'll throw me out."

"I'll anyway," said the president, "you'd get to stay."

Long Boy did as bidden. "I climbed over the fence," he told the aroused policeman.

"What!" exclaimed that individual, "then right out you go."

He dragged the youth toward a gate, but the youngster yelled lustily to Mr. Murphy, and he came up.

"I'm putting this hoodlum out," explained the policeman. "He climbed the fence."

"He says he did," snapped back the association head, "but I told him to stay and have appointed him to keep you awake. Turn him loose."

Long Boy saw the fair, but no more, as he had got over the fence that day.

"Oh, yes; last night for some time. He has great ideas — too great, I fear, to be practicable."

"Then you don't believe * * *"

"That he can destroy armies and all that?" and Chevrial laughed lightly. "My dear M. Webster, do you?"

"No," said Dan, slowly, "I don't suppose I do. It's too much to believe—without proof!"

"Assuredly," agreed his companion; "no one would believe it without proof—absolute proof." Then he leaned closer. "To me he made no such absurd claim, but from the way he talked—from his grandiose ideas, his strange philosophy, his fabulous hopes for humanity—I formed the opinion that the man is mad—not wholly mad, you understand, but touched, in one corner of the brain, by a wild hallucination. His daughter, naturally, believes in him. She is a most attractive girl. Polish women are always attractive, at least when they are young. There is, in their faces, in their eyes, an appearance of tragedy, of mystery, which piques the imagination. And they are all great patriots—it is born in the blood—oh, far greater patriots than the men. I have traveled in Poland," he added, seeing Dan's glance; "my business sometimes calls me there."

"And is there really such oppression as Miss Vard described?"

"I do not know what she told you—it was only at the end she raised her voice, but she could not exaggerate the sufferings of her people. They are little better than slaves. All careers are closed to them, and over them constantly is the shadow of Siberia."

"You mean they are banished sometimes?"

"They are banished often for one year, two years, three years. And they are compelled to walk to and from the place of banishment. It takes a year sometimes. I knew a man who returned home one day to find a Cossack attacking his daughter. There was a struggle, and the Cossack shot the man in the leg. The wound festered and the leg was amputated, then the man was exiled to the mines at Yakutsk. It was I know not how many thousand miles—it took him two years to walk there on his wooden leg, walking, walking every day."

Dan felt a strange weakness running through his veins.

"But is there no way to put an end to such things?" he asked.

Chevrial rolled himself another cigaret.

"Poland has no friends," he answered. "She has been forgotten. The Poles themselves have come to be regarded as fools, as charlatans, as irresponsible children. France was supposed to be the friend of Poland; Napoleon promised to reconstitute her, and the Poles fought by thousands in his armies and won many victories for him. Then came the campaign of Russia and ended all that. Today, Poland is remembered in France only by a proverb, 'Saoul comme un Polonais,' 'Drunk as a Pole.' It is so we think of them, when we think of them at all, which is not often. This disdain, this forgetfulness, has been carefully fostered by Germany and Russia. No one thinks it worth while to interfere. Besides, Poland's lot is that of every conquered country. In Alsace-Lorraine it is just the same."

"Oh, surely not!" Dan protested. "Germany, at least, has no Siberia!"

"No, she has no Siberia," Chevrial agreed, "but neither has she a sense of humor, and that is worse! The very worst trait in a conqueror, M. Webster, believe me, is an absence of the sense of humor! And Germany has the strongest prisons in the world. Her system of espial is even more minute and irritating than that of Russia. As in Poland, the people of Alsace and Lorraine may not speak their native tongue nor study the history of their fatherland. Nothing escapes suspicion. It is reported that at a certain cafe the accounts are kept in French; the cafe is thereupon visited, the books confiscated, and a fine imposed. A certain gentleman goes to Nancy on the 14th of July, which happens to be the date of the French national fete; he is reported as suspect and his premises are visited and searched. The police, passing the house of a notary one evening, hear some one singing the Marseillaise; they demand admittance and arrest the notary, although it was a phonograph which had been singing the song. This is adjudged a very serious case."

"Do you mean to tell me," Dan demanded, "that such things actually occur?"

The ghost of a smile flitted across Chevrial's lips.

"Not those precise cases, perhaps," he said; "but cases very like them—cases not a whit less ridiculous. And can you wonder that Germany finds Alsace and Lorraine restless? Do you wonder that our hearts ache for our compatriots? Do you wonder that we dream of the day when we may remove those mouring wreaths from the statue of Strasbourg in the Place de la Concord?"

He fell silent a moment, then shrugged his shoulders resignedly.

"But I grow too serious," he continued. "Perhaps, some day, Poland will be freed, Alsace-Lorraine returned to France; yes," and here he glanced at Dan with a dry smile, "and the people of the Philippines given their independence. Indeed, this M. Vard believes that day to be close at hand. Let us hope so. Which reminds me that I have today seen neither him nor his daughter."

"Nor have I," Dan admitted. "I thought perhaps they had some work to do, and so had not come on deck."

"They may be there now," said Chevrial, and led the way to the forward end of the boat deck, where, leaning against the rail, they could look down upon the promenade below.

Every one was on deck, walking up and down, revelling in the fresh air, with its tang of salt, and in the soft sunshine; but, though Dan and Chevrial stood for some time looking down, neither Miss Vard nor her father passed. Then Chevrial, whose attention had wandered, uttered a little exclamation, and caught Dan by the arm.

"See there!" he said.

He was pointing forward to the first class promenade, which was also crowded, and Dan following the direction of his gesture, saw, amid the crowd, a white haired man and dark haired girl walking side by side, deep in talk. He looked again, scarcely able to believe his eyes; but there was no mistaking them—they were Miss Vard and her father.

He drew a deep breath of wonder and perplexity. How came they among the first class passengers? But perhaps they had merely been to see the purser, and were now on their way back. No; they had passed the gang way. In another moment, they turned back along the other side of the promenade and were lost to sight.

Only then did Dan look up. He found Chevrial smiling sardonically.

"But what does it mean?" he asked.

Chevrial pursed his lips.

"I do not know," he answered, with a little shrug, "unless some one beside myself heard Miss Vard's story, last night, and has caused her to be placed where she may be more easily kept under surveillance. Oh, there was some story trumped up, depend upon it, so that she would not suspect. No doubt she will also be given the opportunity to make certain friends among her new shipmates, in whom she may also confide. It will be delicately done; oh, so delicately!"

It might have occurred to Dan that M. Chevrial seemed, for a wine merchant, surprisingly familiar with affairs of state and the methods of the secret service; but, for the moment, his whole mind was concentrated on Miss Vard's danger.

"I must warn her," he breathed.

"I believe it would be wise," said Chevrial, in the same tone. "She should make friends with no one—confide in no one. Her position is very serious." And then, as Dan started from the rail, he caught his arm. "Not now," he said. "Wait until tonight. It would be too apparent if you were to rush up there in open day. And before you do speak, make sure that there is no one within 20 feet of you—and then speak in a whisper!"

"Thank you," said Dan; "you are right of course." And he went slowly back to the bench.

CHAPTER XVI.

A CHARGE TO KEEP.

When Dan Webster took his seat at the dinner table, that evening, he found a printed copy of the passenger list beside his plate, and his neighbors were a flutter with the excitement of seeing their names in type. Dan, turning to the letter V, found that the names of Ignace Vard and his daughter were not there. Doubtless the change from second class to first was responsible for the omission, and yet, at the back of his mind was a vague feeling of uneasiness which he was wholly unable to explain. Chevrial had impressed him, and yet one objection to that gentleman's misgivings seemed to him unanswerable: if the Vards had been changed from second class to first with any ulterior object, the authorities in charge of the ship must be in the plot, and that was manifestly absurd.

Yet his determination to seek Miss Vard at the first moment and advise her to be cautious did not waver. He knew, from the printed announcements of the company, that the first cabin dinner was not a table d'hote served at a fixed hour, as in the second cabin, but an a la carte meal, served from 6 to 9, as at a fashionable restaurant, so he loitered restlessly about for half an hour after he left the table; then, deciding that he had waited long enough, he approached the ladder which led to the first class promenade. But a uniformed figure which stood at the foot of the ladder stopped him.

"Beg pardon, sir," it said, "are you first class?"

"No; I am second."

"Did you wish to see the purser or some officer of the ship?"

"No; I wished to see one of the passengers."

"In that case, I fear I cannot let you pass, sir. It is against the rules."

"Oh, is it?" said Dan, all his suspicions revived with double force, and he bit his lip in perplexity.

"I am sorry, sir, but I am here to enforce the rules."

"Oh, I understand," said Dan. "You might get your stateroom steward to take a message," the man suggested.

"But I want to see the person."

"The person can come to you. There is no rule against first class visiting second. First class has the run of the ship."

"I see," said Dan. "Thank you," and he went away to think it over.

Mechanically he threaded his way through the crowd on the promenade, climbed up to the boat deck and sat down on the well remembered bench. Some of the others were occupied, but this one was empty; perhaps the others were becoming as dear to other people as this one was to him! He got out his pipe, lighted it, pulled his cap over his eyes, thrust his hands deep into his pockets, and began to think.

He could, of course, write Miss Vard a brief warning; but what assurance had he that it would be delivered to her, at least without being opened? If Chevrial was right, if she was really under espionage, any communication addressed to her would certainly be inspected. Even to write merely asking her to meet him would arouse suspicion. There was only one way—he must watch for a chance to steal forward into first class when no one was looking.

He considered the possible ways of doing this. In the morning, he knew, the folding gate which divided the lower promenade into first and second class was always swung back while the deck was being washed down. It would be easy to pass then; but, he reflected, in the daytime he had never noticed that a guard was stationed at the ladder leading to the upper promenade. Perhaps it was only at night that the prohibition was in force—at night, when the women of the first cabin had their diamonds on! There must, of course, be some police supervision of the ship; each class must be kept to its own quarters, or, at least, prevented from wandering into quarters higher up. But, just the same, he must get past!

He rose, and, walking to the forward rail, looked across at the other deck. A space of perhaps 30 feet separated it from the one on which he stood. Then he looked down. The man on guard was pacing slowly back and forth, his hands behind him; but suddenly he quickened his step, for two men had approached the foot of the ladder. The guard stopped them with the same formula he had used with Dan.

"Beg pardon, gentlemen," he said, "are you first class?"

"No; we are second class," answered one of the men.

"Have you business with the purser or any officer of the ship?"

There was a moment's hesitation.

"Why do you ask?" queried one of the men.

"It is forbidden to pass otherwise."

Again there was a moment's hesitation, and Dan strained his ears to catch the reply.

"We have business with the commander," said one of the men at last, in a low tone.

The guard was obviously surprised.

"The commander is very busy," he said, deprecatingly. "Perhaps tomorrow will do?"

"Tomorrow will not do," was the curt answer.

"I must, at least, announce you," said the guard. "May I have your card?"

A card was produced and handed to him. Without looking at it, he blew a sharp blast on a little whistle which hung about his neck. In a moment another man in uniform appeared at the head of the ladder. The guard mounted and handed him the card.

"For the captain," he said, and came down again. "I regret that I must detain you, gentlemen," he added, "but I must obey the regulations."

"Certainly," agreed one of the men, and they stepped a little apart and stood talking together in low tones. But almost immediately the messenger appeared again at the top of the ladder.

"The captain will receive you, gentlemen," he said, and swung open the gate and waited for them to pass. Then he closed the gate and hurried after them. Dan could see them going along the upper promenade; then they passed from sight.

The guard had stared after them as they climbed the ladder, and he stood staring for some little time after they had gone. Plainly he was much astonished. But at last, with a shake of the head, he turned away and resumed his walk.

Dan was about to turn away, too, when another incident attracted his attention. A barefooted sailor in white duck, coming from the stern of the ship, climbed to the rail, tested the rope holding the canvas wildshield, and then, as the guard turned away, grasped a stanchion of the railing above his head and drew himself up quickly to the first promenade. Dan, looking after him, saw him run rapidly up the ladder to the forward boat deck and disappear behind a life boat.

That was a way, certainly, to evade the guard. Dan measured the distance from the rail to the upper deck, and wondered if he could pull himself up as quickly as the sailor had. He would have to be quick, or the guard would see him. And it was quite an athletic feat. Besides, he would be handicapped by his shoes; he might easily slip off the rail and over the side. No, that road was too dangerous, except as a last resort. Besides, if he were caught, it would be very awkward.

He returned to his bench and sat down again. After all, was there really any reason why he should warn Miss Vard? The whole thing was, most probably, nothing but a bit of rhodomontade on Chevrials part. And who was Chevrial, anyway? How did it happen that he was so familiar with spies and secret services and systems of espionage? A most peculiar wine merchant. Perhaps he was not a wine merchant; perhaps * * *

"A penny for your thoughts, Mr. Webster," sad a low voice, and some one sat down beside him.

He turned with a violent start.

"Kasia!" he cried, and then stopped, stammering. "I beg your pardon, Miss Vard," he said, also lowering his voice. "You startled me so!"

As she met his glance, he saw how bright her eyes were. She had thrown a wrap about her and drawn the hood over her head. Against it, her face looked very white.

"I think you may call me Kasia," she said softly. "You see, I need a friend, and I should hate to have a friend call me anything else. "No," she added, as he started to say something, "I shall continue to call you Mr. Webster—that is not quite the same thing. And I am sorry I startled you."

BIG GUN "HOSPITALS" FOLLOW THE ARMY

Behind the British Lines in France—(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—In war the question of waste of material is second only to that of men. Armaments become rapidly unserviceable through old age and casualties, the big guns most of all. For gun casualties a regular system of hospitals exists.

The first aid station is in the battery itself where, much as a medical orderly keeps a supply of medicine and bandages, a trained artificer keeps a supply of tools and spare parts. He can deal with any trifling accident that may occur, or replace any small part that may be broken. The modern gun or howitzer is a complicated piece of mechanism, requiring constant skilled attention if the best results are to be obtained. This attention the artificer supplies.

But should the gun develop a complaint beyond the powers of his tools to rectify, or should an unlucky splinter of shell wound it in some vulnerable part, its removal to hospital becomes necessary. Gun hospitals are workshops wonderfully organized to deal with the work that falls to their lot, and staffed by skilled men of the ordnance corps. These workshops are graded according to mobility, and are all capable of more or less rapid transfer from one point to another. They are styled light, medium or heavy, according to their powers of movement and their capacity for dealing with work requiring light or heavy tools.

A light, ordnance mobile workshop," to give it its full title, is self contained upon two or three motor trucks ingeniously arranged. The floor of the lorries carries light lathes and drilling machines driven by electric transmission from the engine of the automobile, light being furnished from the same source. The trucks look like ordinary closed motor cars when traveling but on duty the sides of the vans drop down to form platforms around the machinery, and the interiors are transformed into buzzing hives of activity. Their capacity is limited to the work that can be handled on the comparatively light tools that they carry.

The next stage is the medium mobile workshop." This is no longer self contained in motor trucks, ready to limber up and be off at a moment. It carries machinery that must be unloaded and installed in some convenient shed. The whole is transported on motor trucks, but the work is not carried on in the trucks. There is a contract oil engine and dynamo, to be bolted down to a hastily constructed foundation. There are lathes, milling machines, every sort of machine tool that is to be found in a general engineering shop. The whole concern requires about two days to set up and put in running order. Nearly everything except the most intricate repairs can be performed here and it is [illegible] necessary for a weapon to be sent to [illegible] any further.

[illegible] for the accommodation of really bad [illegible] there [illegible] heavy [illegible] shops [illegible] susceptible of [illegible] may be [illegible] with these are equipped too, only with heavier machinery than the medium [illegible] but with elaborate additional machinery for special work. In addition to the big machine shop there are pattern making shops, wheelers' shops, a foundry and accessories and every sort of device to supply the needs of an army that fights with highly scientific weapons. The whole outfit is constructed so that it may be taken down and packed into trucks drawn by great tractor engines.

The whole system is a miracle of organization for a war which, although at present mainly one of position, may at any moment develop into one of movement. Everything, workshops included, must be ready to follow up an advance. Provision of machine shops at fixed points might meet the conditions of trench warfare, but they would become useless as the line of battle left them behind. So the gun hospital, like the field ambulance and casualty clearing stations are fashioned upon a plan that allows of ready movement.

There remains the case of the gun that through long and honorable service is worn out. It is removed from the battery, to be replaced by one of a number that lie in readiness at one of the gun parks behind the line, and is taken back to an arsenal to be rebuilt. The inner tube, whose rifling in some cases is worn nearly smooth, is removed and another inserted in its stead, after which the gun is ready to take its place once more in the emplacements of an active battery.

Teaching Millions to Save.

From the American Magazine

A novel scheme was adopted by a wealthy Californian to awaken in boys a desire to save their money and to get ahead in the world. This scheme is being copied in other parts of the country and has had far reaching results.

F. H. Silverwood of Los Angeles, or 'Daddy' Silverwood as he is called by 5,000 boys, believes that the best kind of a nest egg is a silver one, and so he has set $5,000 in silver in banks where each boy can sit on his particular egg and hatch thrift from it.

The first batch of these eggs, or $1 bank accounts, was deposited in 1909, and this letter written to 500 boys:

> Dear Young Friend: You are one of 500 boys I have selected in southern California for whom I am opening a bank account. One dollar has been deposited to your credit in the Los Angeles Trust & Savings bank, corner Sixth and Spring streets. I have stipulated that it remain there for five years except in case of sickness or death, for the reason that I want to add to it from time to time if you endeavor to do the same.
> You are living in a land where nobody is held down by caste—in a country where poor boys from the farm go to the White House, where brakemen and even section hands become railway presidents, where the poorest boys become our merchant princes, where the factories and institutions of every description are built up by boys with no opportunity except their own energy and integrity.
> Trusting that you will decide to be one of the great men of the future, I remain,
> F. H. Silverwood.

Three-fourths of the boys for whom accounts were opened fulfilled the requirements and added to the nest egg. "Daddy" Silverwood kept his promise and also put in money.

A little newsboy added $275 to his account the first year. Others have done almost as well. They are spurred on to save by letters which Mr. Silverwood writes, encouraging them to work hard and better their conditions.

Stabilization, Speculation and Sugar.

From the Baches Financial Review, New York.

Stabilization of trade is a good thing for all business, in the long run. Speculation in a commodity may have a steadying effect in peace times if the supply is good, but speculative excesses are bad for all trade, and especially bad in inflation times like these, when excess speculation is likely to break out. Crops in which there is a world shortage are liable to these excesses. A serious world shortage is now developing in raw sugars. Hence, speculation in sugar was beginning to show some excitement. The Hoover ban has been applied and the speculative market here too is now dead. It is better for the trade to have prices held at a reasonable level.

Conferences of the different trades with the food controller bring together the leaders in these trades, and may have good results in methods of operation. In the sugar trade the refiners have heretofore pretty much held the whip hand over the raw sugar makers. Perhaps a better condition here may result.

No Other Place Woud Do.

A dentist, who had been made nervous by frequent burglaries in his vicinity, was somewhat startled recently by having a man come regularly at the same hour every evening and sit on his doorstep. He finally suggested that, if it would be all the same to him, he would be pleased to have him divide his attention and sit on some neighbor's doorstep for a while.

"But it wouldn't be the same," shouted the visitor, "nor anything like it. You are a dentist, and I have an aching tooth that I haven't the courage to have pulled out. I come here every afternoon trying to make up my mind to have it out, and as soon as I come in sight of your house it stops aching, but when I sit on your doorstep, and the confounded thing knows it can be pulled out if it gives me trouble, I have some rest."

NOTICE TO SICK WOMEN

Positive Proof That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves Suffering.

Bridgeton, N.J.—"I cannot speak too highly of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for inflammation and other weaknesses. I was very irregular and would have terrible pains so that I could hardly take a step. Sometimes I would be so miserable that I could not sweep a room. I doctored part of the time but felt no change. I later took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt a change for the better. I took it until I was in good healthy condition. I recommend the Pinkham remedies to all women as I have used them with such good results."—Mrs. MILFORD T. CUMMINGS, 322 Harmony St., Penn's Grove, N. J.

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence of the excellence of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the distressing ills of women such as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, backache, painful periods, nervousness and kindred ailments.

"It's too bad that you broke your doll," commented the caller.

"This doll is not broken," corrected the child gravely.

"Oh, isn't it? I thought that was the doll that used to cry 'Mamma' when it was squeezed."

"This is the same doll. But you must remember that was several years ago. She is much older now. You don't expect a grown-up young lady to cry 'Mamma' when she is squeezed, do you?"

The caller had to acknowledge that whatever she expected it probably wouldn't take place.

Children Want to Know.

History repeats herself, but a child is always original.

Small Marjorie was most intelligently concerned over motion pictures of the war. When she failed to understand a situation she asked for information.

"Why are those men stooping under that bridge, mother?"

Mother explained that they were going to blow it up.

"Oh! Will they have breath enough?"

Dyspeptic Dangers.

"Is this war bread, my dear?"

"No; why do you ask?"

"It looks to me as if a man had only a fighting chance with it."

Being Just to Husband.

Mollie had very pronounced ideas regarding the rights and wrongs of her sex.

"Don't you think, Sallie," she asked one day of her dearest friend, "that a woman should get a man's pay?"

"Well," replied Sallie, after a moment of deliberation, "I think she should let him have car fares and lunches out of it."—Youth's Companion.

Damaged Goods.

The little boy of the suburb who runs errands for the neighbors when he gets a penny for it stepped timidly up to the counter of the hardware store.

"I want a—uh, a lock washer! You know one that goes on a bolt to keep the nut from slipping, and is stationary."

The hardware dealer pulled out a little drawer and tossed out a few metal disks on the glass showcase. The boy examined them. He found that they were not only perforated in the center, but that they were split, and the two ends bent apart, much like the clincher rim on an automobile tire.

He handed the washers back after gravely examining them.

"I don't want 'em," he decided. "Those things are broken."

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply on the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

At little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding skin. Just think! You can lift off your corns and calluses now without a bit of pain or soreness. If your druggist hasn't freezone he can easily get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Timorous Lover.

A woman went into a store for a pair of slippers. She asked the shop assistant to get her a pair about size 10, and she wanted them squeaky.

"They are for my father," she added.

"Squeaky, miss? I'm afraid we have not got any of that kind."

"Couldn't you make him a pair of squeaky ones?" asked the young woman. "There is a young man who visits me frequently, and it would be very convenient for him to know just when pa is coming downstairs."

Henry and Wes Lau and Chris Gram autoed down to Camp Dodge Sunday to see "Our Boys." They report that the boys are getting along fine in soldiering and have received their uniforms. It is needless to say they are quite proud of them. Chris also said that there were about five miles of buildings in a row and that it is a hard matter to find a person if you do not know the company he is in.

THE SECOND LIBERTY LOAN

At a meeting of the bankers in this County called by Mr. E. P. Healy of Britt, the chairman of the County Committee of the Liberty Loan, executive committee plans were made for efficient canvass of the whole county with a view of selling the amount of bonds allotted to this County

The secretary of the Treasury has requested that subscriptions to the amount of $621,250 be secured in Hancock County, which is just a little in excess of 14 per cent of the combined banking resources of the County.

It is of the utmost importance that all the people in this community be informed of the importance of the obligation to finance the Government. It is conceded that through the sale of Liberty Bonds, the burden of providing ample funds for the prosecution of this war will be more easily met by the tax paying public than by other means such as direct and heavy taxes on property. The Bonds now offered bear interest at 4 per cent payable May 15th, and November 15th. They are free from taxation except for inheritances and for incomes in excess of $5,000.

Liberty Bonds of the first loan have already commanded a slight premium above par in the market and it is clear that the obligations of the United States of America are a security of such unquestioned worth and merit that where the issue and purpose is well understood, the sale of these bonds is not a difficult matter.

Some of us are called to the front to fight for America. Some of us are not called but are at home enjoying all of the comforts and privileges that a home in the good old U. S. A. affords and it is up to those of us who are at home to help the boys who have gone out in preparation for active duty at the front.

It is well for us to consider that those who have gone and will go are fighting for the security of our home and the comforts that we enjoy and that we are really enjoying a special privilege if we can buy liberally of an interest bearing bond backed by the United States of America and in that manner furnish aid to the Government to our Country to the boys who are carrying on the fight at the front.

Committees are being organized now. You will be asked to buy a Liberty Bond. Do your whole duty as a loyal citizen.

Camp Dodge,
10-2-17.

Dear Mr. Editor:

If you can find a little space in your paper I would like to say a few words to the Klemme boys that are coming here soon.

The issuing of clothing has been slow, so far Many of us are still wearing what we wore down and you can imagine how we look.

Machine Gun Co. No. 4, the company to which I am attached will get our outfit tomorrow, and after two weeks drilling, with our new uniforms on, we will feel like real soldiers.

We have plenty to eat, the best of beds and good officers. Don't get the impression tho, that this army life is a joke. Some of us thought so at first, but now we are commencing to realize that we are here for some purpose and most all are digging in with a determination that will help to make the 88th division as strong as any of the National Army. Hundreds of men are at work making preparations for the remaining 45 per cent, and all is just about ready. Wish to thank the people of Klemme for collection made up at station when we left. It was highly appreciated by us all. Take my advice boys, and bring a change of clothing. It is easy enough to send them back if they are not needed, but it isn't so easy to go out for drill these frosty mornings with your only shirt hanging on the line to dry.

Hope to see some of you in Camp Dodge in the near future.

Yours truly,
Ralph L. Jones,
Co. 4, 337 Machine Gun Battery

BRITISH RECRUITING MISSION
Western Division

October 1, 1917

I, Ernest Hugh Fitzpatrick, Chief British Recruiting Medical Examiner for the State of Iowa, do this day, October 1, 1917, command and demand in the name of our Most Gracious Majesty, George the Fifth, King of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperor of India and Sovereign of the British Dominion beyond the seas, and with the consent and authority of the Government of the United States, that all British subjects of military age living in the County of Hancock, State of Iowa, will forthwith, without failure and without fear or favor, and without let or hindrance, place themselves in communication with James S. Ross, Sheriff of Hancock County, in the State of Iowa, who is now cooperating with me, by command of Governor Harding, for the purpose of enlistment into his Majesty's armies now fighting in the field against the common enemy of mankind. I do most earnestly urge that all British subjects between the ages of 18 and 45, living in Hancock County, in the State of Iowa, carry out these instructions, without loss of time, in lieu of the bill now before Congress, known as the "British Subjects Conscription Bill," which will shortly be enacted into law, under the provision of which law penalties will be provided for all those British subjects of military age, who willfully and disdainfully, disregard this call for enlistment into his Majesty's army.

ERNEST HUGH FITZPATRICK
Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh

In order that our readers may know just what we are voting on at the Special Election next Monday we quote from the resolution of the General Assembly introducing the matter as follows: It is proposed

"To amend the Constitution of Iowa by adding thereto a provision prohibiting the manufacture, sale or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, within the State."

It will be seen that this is primarily against the manufacture of intoxicants and the saloon or any place or establishment handling intoxicants.

It does not affect the drug stores who handle liquor under a permit as they are operating under the Pharmacy law and the carrying or not of the Amendment will not change the Pharmacy law.

If the Amendment carries the State may not be any dryer under Constitutional Prohibition than under Statutory Prohibition, which we now have, but it will take the matter out of politics and our legislators can then go about their work without the constant pressure of the liquor lobby.

Affectation.

Affectation is an awkward and forced imitation of what should be genuine and easy, wanting the beauty that accompanies what is natural.—Locke.

The origin of the phrase to take French leave has been the signal for many conflicting contests, but the outcome of them for the most part has been to increase interest in the question It has been plausibly suggested that the custom of dispensing with ceremony from a crowded reception instead of elbowing one's way through a throng of people to reach the hostess a custom which was the natural outgrowth of courteous consideration for every one involved, was borrowed by the English from the French And it has been suggested that the French use the phrase "French leave" has no connection with the French people except to the extent of what is implied in the etymology of the word "frank" meaning free and that the expression may mean simply a permission not granted but assumed. But the question is further muddled by the fact that the French have a phrase, prendre congé à la maniere Anglaise,' or "se retirer à l'Anglaise," with precisely the same significance, with the nit at the English In Germany the phrase is identical with the English From Hilpert's German dictionary it would appear that it is more than 100 years old, while the custom which it celebrates withdrawing without final leave taking was an established practice in Germany ages ago

A post comes from the United States Department of the Interior that permanent homes and tracts of land are now being offered by the government to the Papago Indians of Arizona The Papago Indians who number about 6 000, are a remarkable industrious people For centuries they have lived in southern Arizona crowded back into barren and desert territory so arid that white men could not have sustained life Yet here they managed to carry on agriculture and first introduced to arid regions the 'Papago bean,' or tepary bean, a hardy vegetable which is said to have no little food value

Hailstorm insurance is more extensively carried on in Germany than in any other country During the last 45 years the German hail insurance companies have collected the enormous sum of 1,144,795 000 marks (mark, 23.8 cents) in premiums and have paid out 902,426,000 marks in indemnities During the year 1915 the companies realized a profit of 7 999,975 marks, which was much in excess of their average earnings, and the business of the year showed an increase in insured value of 104 000 000 marks

In I Maccabees xiii 8, India is reckoned among the countries which the king of Pergamus received out of the former possessions of Antiochus the Great A more sudden increase of the country occurs in I Maccabees viii 37 An active trade was carried on between India and western Asia The trade opened by Solomon with Ophir through the Red sea consisted chiefly of Indian articles The Indians were included under the ethnological title of Cush (Genesis x, 6)

The most important change in the Red Sea has been the drying up of its northern extremity The tongue of the sea is dried up for a distance of about 50 feet from its ancient head thus fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah (Isaiah xix, 5 An ancient canal connected the waters of the Nile to the Red sea The drying up of the head of the gulf appears to have been the chief cause of the neglect and ruin of this canal

Surf bathing which became famous at the beach of Waikiki in Honolulu has been taken up by bathers at Venice, Cal Surf boards are about the size of an ironing board but heavier and promise to be in great demand in Venice and the other beach resorts in this vicinity Riding the surf in this fashion so far has been more popular with the young women than among the men

For many years before the Crimean war the mustache in England was the distinguishing badge of the cavalry, it was prohibited in the infantry, and as for the civilian who braved public opinion by sporting it, he was looked on either as an artist an eccentric or as wishing to pass for a hussar

EXAMINE FARMERS AS TO SIZE OF INCOMES

Des Moines Ia Oct 6 Two hundred Polk county farmers have received summons issued by the collector of internal revenue to submit to investigations in regard to their incomes during the years 1914 1915 and 1916

The hearings are being conducted in the federal court room in the federal building in charge of deputies assisted by the assessors field force

The hearings are being held throughout the state and of the same proportionate number of farmers are called before the deputies in each of the other counties in the state the plan will affect approximately 20 000 farmers

The farmers summoned to appear before the deputies have made no returns to the collectors office at all, it is understood during the past four years The collector's office is without information as to the incomes of the farmers and for this reason the hearings are being conducted

GIVE ALL CONSCRIPTS THE TUBERCULOSIS TEST

Camp Dodge Ia Oct 6—Every member of the Eighty eighth division will undergo a thorough examination for tuberculosis symptoms As other enlistment reports there will be given a thorough going over after the regular examination has been finished

A tuberculosis examining board has been appointed, with Capt J H Peck, of Des Moines, as chairman Captain Peck has only recently been transferred to Camp Dodge from Fort Des Moines

Other members of the board are two prominent Des Moines physicians, Dr Walter L Bierring and Dr A C Page

Whether men showing symptoms of tuberculosis will be discharged or treated is not known at the camp as word from Washington is awaited regarding this matter It is likely, however the will be discharged from the service

BUY ATHLETIC EQUIPMENT FOR BOYS AT CAMP DODGE

Camp Dodge Des Moines, Ia Oct 6 A campaign to raise $27 200 with which to purchase athletic equipment for the national army men here has been launched by John L Griffith athletic instructor and H J Metcalf secretary of the Iowa state council of defense

The purpose of the campaign is to provide a box of athletic goods for each of the 200 companies Each box will cost $136 and will provide adequately for all the athletic needs of this camp

Secretary Metcalf will send informative letters to every county defense council in Iowa and to the governors of the other states represented here—Minnesota North Dakota and Illinois

TO KEEP CLOSE TAB ON IOWA COAL SITUATION

Des Moines Ia, Oct 6—Although there is small chance of reduction in Iowa coal prices, it is hoped that a state organization will be formed which will prevent any coal dealers from cornering the supply and at the same time prevent any famine in Iowa, this was the message brought to the state council of defense here today by C W. Webster, just back from Washington, where he, as state fuel administrator, talked things over with the government. Under his plan railroads will co-operate in demanding unloading of coal from cars within two days and each dealer must report twice a week to the fuel administrator how much coal he has on hand, what he paid for it and what he is charging for it.

IOWA CORN CROP NOT YET SAFE FROM FROST

Des Moines, Ia., Oct 5 —Following is the weekly report of the Iowa weather and crop service

The average temperature for the week was about 2 degrees below the normal and light to heavy frosts occurred on two or three mornings in practically all parts of the state, the heaviest being in the eastern counties Corn made fair good progress considering the cool weather but fully one-third of the crop is not yet safe from an ordinary [illegible] frost and [illegible] more than [illegible] would be seriously damaged by freezing temperatures Not more than [illegible] per cent will be safe by October 15 and from [illegible] present indications from [illegible] to 10 per cent of the crop will require all of October and at least 5 per cent is hopeless The southwestern and west central districts show the best condition and the central district the poorest However there is enough of the crop mature in all districts to insure sufficient seed for next year and the seed is now being gathered in large quantities Much of the late bottom land corn is being cut for fodder and many silos are being filled Considerable corn is still in the roasting ear stage and as green as in July Plowing and seeding of winter wheat and rye has been handicapped in the southern and central districts by dry weather, but over the northern counties there has been a decided increase in the acreage of winter wheat and rye sown The acreage of clover cut for seed will be much less than the normal and large areas of last spring's seeding of clover and alfalfa have been destroyed by grasshoppers Cattle are on feed in many localities on account of shortage of pasturage Rain is badly needed for pastures plowing and fall-sown grains, but corn must have dry warm weather

PLENTY OF CLOTHING FOR CAMP DODGE SOLDIERS

Camp Dodge Ia Oct 5.—The arrival [illegible] of clothing and [illegible] during several thousand pairs of woven breeches or trousers pants the latter called in encouraging [illegible] of the national army [illegible] Dodge to hope they soon may be all dressed like soldiers.

All the companies in several regiments have been provided with all the articles of army war except the breeches Without these the leggings cannot be worn to advantage and the soldier boys are forced to drill and work in their civilian trousers

Hats hat cords shirts, socks, underclothing, overcoats and other articles of clothing all have been issued Once the regular army breeches are donned the nondescript soldier becomes a real soldier and feels the change.

Within a few days the entire regiment probably will be equipped with the breeches, when the uniforms will be complete and the marching ranks of drilling men will have more the appearance of army men

U. S. BECOMES GREATEST WAR FACTOR, QUICK

Army of More Than 1,000,000 Men Prepared and Supplied Six Months and More Awaiting Call.

BIGGEST WAR FUNDS VOTED

Navy's Size Increased The Times, 20,000 Airplanes and gun, and Contracts for 433 Ships Awarded.

By United Press.

Washington D C Oct 5—America arrived at the end of its first months in the war today has made miraculous record From peace unpreparedness the country in the months has developed a powerful fighting machine and become the great factor in the war

Congress, on the eve of adjournment of its war session has completed a program which for magnitude of appropriated has no equal in the history of world's parliaments

Condition Six Months Ago.

On April 6 the day the president signed the declaration of war, the army was small and poorly supplied. The navy was very poorly manned. The railroads of the country were unable to move ordinary shipments, much less handle the great troop bodies. The American merchant marine was a joke among nations The army had less than a dozen airplanes No laws existed for the development of the army and navy such as the emergency demanded. No money was on hand for the expenditures required and no authority was vested for carrying out any war plans.

Today, after six months, more than 1,000,000 men are under arms. Millions more are registered for service and subject to call to the 16 cantonments located throughout the country. The cantonments have been built at a cost of above $150 000 000

Billions have been loaned to the allies and other billions have been appropriated for shipbuilding and supplying our soldiers and sailors.

Thousands of Flyers Soon.

There are now three times as many vessels in the navy as there were months ago. The enlisted strength of the navy has sprung from 64,000 to more than 143 000 and other branches have been increased 400 to 500 per cent in personnel

Twenty navy training camps have been opened and aircraft and propeller factories are being opened The aeroplane plans of the country include thousands of aviators in Europe in a few months

The shipping board has contracts for 433 ships already Those vessels are rapidly being put into the service.

TREASON PROOF GIVEN TO FRENCH EMBASSY

Official Report of Evidence Will Be Used at Trial of Respected Frenchman

New York Oct 6. The full details of the sensational conspiracy whereby Paul Bolo Pasha under arrest in Paris as a spy obtained the transfer through well known and unsuspecting banking houses in New York, of a German peace propaganda fund of $1,760,000 to France will be delivered to the French embassy here by Attorney General Merton E Lewis of New York state Mr Lewis announced today that his investigation had been completed

The official charges of the plot will be sent to the French government it was said to be used by the chief prosecutor against Bolo Pasha the head of the French secret service organization who lost his life for his part in the conspiracy

Paris Oct 6 Today's issue of L'Action Francaise published by the government has charges against Leon Daudet, whose charges against Louis J. Malvy former minister of the interior caused a sensation in the chamber of deputies

Paris Oct 4 (Delayed) The charges made against Louis J Malvy former minister of the interior by Leon Daudet a newspaper editor were denied by M Malvy in his statement in the chamber of deputies today M Malvy insisted that he had been slanderously accused of abusing his position as minister to betray the country

The former minister of the interior said that M Daudet had called on Andre Maginot then minister for the colonies and accused Malvy in the presence of Maginot of going every week to Versailles, a suburb of Paris, to meet a German agent M Malvy declared that he never had gone to Versailles

The Bonnet Rouge Affair

M Malvy said that he had never been on intimate terms with the editor of the Bonnet Rouge He explained that as minister of the interior he was anxious to preserve order without resorting to violence To that purpose he obtained the co-operation of the Bonnet Rouge which seemed to exert influence in certain circles A year later his suspicions were aroused regarding the Bonnet Rouge and he reported the matter to M Briand who was then premier M Briand arose and said that toward the end of 1916 he noticed signs of a peace campaign in certain newspapers He used the censorship in acting against them and gave M Malvy certain information he had on the new tendency of the Bonnet Rouge He left the charge of M Malvy to watch those connected with the Bonnet Rouge

"I know I had them watched" said one former premier I must declare that M Malvy far from lessening vigilance ordered it to work with the greatest severity"

Premier Painleve asked the chamber to let justice accomplish its duty He promised the chamber that M Daudet would have to prove his charges contained in the letter to President Poincare The chamber then voted confidence in the government

In a voice which rose above the tumult the premier declared

"M Malvy is accused of having wished to enter the war council to deliver to German command the plan of attack upon the Chemin-Des-Dames M Daudet declared that the hand of the Hurete generale (political police attached to the ministry of the interior) was in the troubles of May '

"The letter' The Letter'" was shouted from all parts of the chamber.

Demands Military Trial.

"I will obey the will of the house,' said the premier, but I must say that this letter is not addressed to me In it M Daudet affirms that with regard to M. Malvy and M Leymarie (former head of the Hurete generale) the proofs of treason are super abundant. The letter cites two accusations, one concerning the attack on the Chemin-Des Dames, the other regarding the troubles in May It is essential, the letter says, to deliver M Malvy immediately to military justice."

The French spring offensive is generally admitted to have fallen down. What was planned to be a crushing blow resulted only in gains against the enemy and not in breaking through his lines As a result of the failure which included also the failure of the French ambulance train system, General Nivelle was relieved of the supreme command of the French armies and General Petain placed in charge.

Refuse to Sell to Government, Making It Helpless Before Demands of Dealers.

Berne Oct 6 - President Schulthess, replying today to the increasing criticism of the government for not attempting to keep down the price of coal this winter through a monopoly, told the parliament that this solution had proved impossible for Switzerland because German shippers had flatly refused to furnish coal for other than private Swiss firms and the German government had declared that it could not and would not bring pressure to bear on the mine owners.

President Schulthess touched on Swiss loans to Germany and the entente and said that from all appearances the war would last a long time yet.

TWO GERMAN RAIDERS ATTACK PACIFIC SHIPS

Crew of the Seeadler, Divided, Mans Pair Now Destroying Commerce, Report Shows

Washington Oct 6 - With definite confirmation of the presence of two German sea raiders in the South Pacific ocean reported in dispatches from Samoa to the navy department, a hunt for the pair of mysterious cruisers has been set in motion. The two raiders are manned by the crew of the famous Seeadler which made her way late last year from Germany through the allies' patrol into the Atlantic southward around South America preying on shipping and thence to the south Pacific where she stranded on Mopeha island and had to be abandoned.

The Seeadler destroyed three American sailing ships the schooners A B Johnson Manila and C Slade, in the south Pacific When she stranded she had aboard 27 white men and 17 native prisoners, who with the crew, reached shore in safety

Part of the Seeadler's crew put to sea again in a power sloop armed with machine guns, bombs and two months' supplies Early in September the French schooner Lutece arrived at Mopeha from Tahiti and was seized by the remaining members of the crew, who put to sea September 5 The prisoners were left on the island to shift for themselves

Capt Hador Smith, of the American schooner C Slade and three other prisoners left the island in an open boat and reached Samoa September 29, where the news of the sea raiders was made known to the American naval authorities

The number of the raider's victims beyond the four mentioned in the dispatches from Samoa cannot be ascertained. At least four American owned vessels are reported overdue on the Pacific coast from south Pacific ports and their owners have abandoned hope of their safety

British Dig Themselves in With Only Opposition From Heavy Artillery Fire—Petain Lines Pounded.

By United Press.

With the British Armies at the Front, Oct 6.—The most important victory of the great war was how Field Marshal Haig's great stroke of yesterday appeared today. Latest reports at headquarters give every indication of the complete disorganization of the enemy.

There were representative troops of all sections of the British empire in the great drive. The Australians, Britishers, Scotch, Irish and Newfoundlanders stood shoulder to shoulder.

By Associated Press.

British soldiers now are entrenched on the crests of most of the high ground in the famous Ypres salient as a result of a tremendous blow given the Germans yesterday on an eight-mile front east and northeast of Ypres Driven from the high ground, the Germans now will be forced to go up hill against the British, while the British artillery throws shell after shell upon the German defenses and lines of communication.

Massed Men Mowed Down.

Field Marshal Haig's latest stroke surprised his adversaries as they were about to renew their attacks against him. The British barrage mowed the massed Germans down and those that remained were annihilated in the rush of the British troops. At no point along the attacking front was the German resistance very great, although the British had difficulty in overcoming the concrete redoubts bristling with machine guns

The villages of Reutel, Noordenhoek, Molenaarelsthoek, Broodseinde, and Gravenstafel were captured in their entirety and the greater part of Poelcapelle was taken.

Can Bombard Railroad.

By the capture of Broodseinde the British established themselves well over the crest of the ridge five miles east of Ypres From here they can bombard the Roulers-Menin railroad, the principal German line of communication in the Ypres sector.

In addition to the loss of positions of great importance, the Germans sustained very heavy casualties, as a result of the British barrage. More than 3,000 German prisoners were taken, half of them being wounded. The German losses were so severe that Crown Prince Rupprecht attempted only a few counter attacks. These were easily broken up.

The course of events during the night gave further evidence of the severity of the shock given the Germans in yesterday's thrust. They kept up a heavy artillery fire during the night, but did not deliver a single counter attack. Meanwhile the British were busy consolidating their new positions.

On the French front General Petain's troops had to cope with several surprise attacks by the Germans last night, notably in the Champagne and in upper Alsace. The German efforts, however, met with no successes. Northeast of Verdun, where the Germans recently regained a bit of territory from the French, the violent artillery action is, continuing.

BROKE DOWN, BERLIN SAYS.

Berlin, via London, Oct. 6.—The gain of the British in yesterday's attack east of Ypres, the war office states, was restricted to a strip of land one to one and a half kilometers deep, running from Poelcapelle via the eastern spur of Zonnebeke and along the road to Becelaere. The latter village and the hotly contested village of Ghlevulet, the announcement adds, are in complete possession of the Germans.

The announcement says the battle was of unusual intensity, but that the fourth army succeeded in withstanding the British attack. Advancing on a front of 15 kilometers, the statement adds, the British pushed forward temporarily, but could not hold their ground.

The British used at least 11 divisions, the statement says, and their losses are reported to have been large. The British thrust broke down before reaching its objectives, which, the announcement continues, were very far distant. The German troops in Flanders are praised for their heroism

BURLESON RESCUES TALKATIVE HEFLIN

Washington, D. C., Oct. 6.—Investigation of charges by Representative Heflin, that certain members of congress had "acted suspiciously" made in an interview in which he is alleged to have declared that he had heard members obtained German money by being "lucky at cards," was begun today by a House committee.

Plans for hearing Heflin as the first witness were thrown awry by Postmaster General Burleson who took Heflin away. The committee heard two newspaper men in executive session. Both swore that Heflin told them in the House lobby that he had heard that "pro-German and peace at any price members of congress" got money easily at a Washington gambling house conducted by a German by being "lucky at cards."

When assailed about the interview Heflin repudiated it flatly.

All Highways in Avery and Ell Township, Hancock County, included within watershed of said District.

You and each of you are hereby notified that on Sept. 2, 1916, there was filed in the office of the County Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, a petition addressed to the Board of Supervisors of Hancock, Franklin and Cerro Gordo Counties, asking that certain lands hereinbefore described, be incorporated into a Drainage District, and that a system of drains be established for the relief of said District.

You are further notfied that on Sept. 7, 1916, H. V. Reed was appointed a Commissioner from Hancock County, to confer with Commissioners from Cerro Gordo and Franklin Counties, and appoint an Engineer. That on Sept. 23, 1916, said Commissioners made their report, appointing H D Keerl as Engineer to make survey, plat, profile and field notes of said proposed District and that on June 25, 1917, said Engineer filed his report recommending the establishment of said district and the construction of a system of drains: That said report is now on file in the office of the County Auditor of Hancock, Cerro Gordo and Franklin Counties, Iowa, and that said report may be amended at any time before final action is taken thereon by the Board of Supervisors of Hancock, Cerro Gordo and Franklin Counties, Iowa.

And that November 7, 1917, at 1 o'clock p. m., at the Court House at Mason City, Iowa, has been fixed as the time for hearing thereon. All objections and claims for damages must be filed in the office of the County Auditor in the county wherein said land is located not less than five days before said hearing.

Witness our hand and official seal this 28th day of September, 1917.

BIOGRAPHY

Frederick Dale Wood (mostly known as Fred Dale Wood and as Fred Dale to his intimates) is of Virginia parentage and ancestry, his forbears having been members of the Virginia colony 100 years before the Declaration of Independence. He spent his boyhood in Missouri Iowa and Nebraska, and when still a boy fared forth to see the world on his own acco[illegible] The West was really "wild and woolly" in those days, and he suffered many hardships, but gained much experience.

He did almost every kind of work a growing boy could do, from working in a livery stable to "riding the herd" as a cowboy. He found time to learn the printer's trade and read law, being handicapped badly in the latter by lack of education.

During President Cleveland's first term he was given a place in the Indian service, although he was not of age, where the Sioux Indians named him "Gray Eagle," because his hair was then gray Indeed, Mr Wood says, laughingly, that he cannot remember a time when his hair was not gray.

After a time spent as a special newspaper writer he moved to Seattle Wash., where he practiced law and became prominent there, and was later besought to accept a nomination for Governor, which he refused.

He served two years in the army in the Philippines, losing his health as a consequence, which caused him to abandon his Seattle law practice and move to New York City, going from there to Chicago about four years ago

During many years, he has been noted in national politics and has spoken in every state in the Union in behalf of Democratic presidential nominees He has traveled widely throughout the world and is a gentleman of culture, refinement and knowledge He is one of the most eloquent men in the public life of America and one of its deepest and most (Catholic) thinkers.

FREDERICK DALE WOOD.

Life Off the Platform.

Few persons have as intimate an acquaintance with the dictionary as has Fred Dale Wood. His command of English words is amazing and the ease with which he builds them into pithy and trenchant sentences is astounding. Many persons believe him to have the largest vocabulary of anyone in public life in America. It is not to be wondered at, however, because study of the dictionary is one of his diversions. He reads it as the ordinary person reads a novel and it is, to him, just as interesting.

He and Mrs. Wood have a charming home and there he spends much of his time off the platform, reading the world's best literature, ofttimes aloud to his wife, while she plies her swift needle in decorative fancy work for their home.

Not having reached the stage of "gout and golf," Mr. Wood has never been a devotee of the putting green, but, instead, takes long walks in the woods and fields, rebuilding his physique for the strenuous work of the platform. He bowls, skates, fences, boxes, swims and otherwise keeps himself in trim.

He is interested in all things that make for civic governmental betterment and gives much of his spare time to committee work that has to do with the upbuilding of city and nation. Both he and his wife are a sentient part of the vital life of the great city by the lake. Both are fond of theater and opera and attend whenever and wherever possible.

FREDERICK DALE WOOD.

If you ever hear anyone address Fred Dale Wood as Your Embassy, you will enjoy it better if you know the story. In an Eastern city a nouveau riche entertained Mr. and Mrs. Wood as honor guests at a reception. Mrs. N. R. asked Mrs. Wood: "What is your husband's title?" Mrs. Wood was a bit astonished but replied. "He has had many, at different times, but I believe he prefers 'mister' —that is what I call him." "Oh, that will never do," replied Mrs. N. R. "I am sure he must be, at least, an embassy. I think I shall call him Your Embassy—that sounds so distinguished." And she did, much to the embarrassment of Mr. Wood the amusement of Mrs. Wood and the consternation of Mrs. N. R.'s other guests.

How They Work.

In an argument against fanaticism the late General Funston said to a correspondent: "Even the looking glass and the wine glass have their uses. The looking glass reveals our defects to ourselves; the wine glass reveals them to others."

Persistent.

"You wouldn't kiss a girl against her will, would you?" asked the leap-year maiden. "No, I would not." Then she tried another approach. "Would you resist very much if a girl tried to kiss you?"—London Answers.

WRITE IT INTO THE CONSTITUTION.

We have Statutory laws and Constitutional laws

The making of Statutory law in Iowa is a privilege which rests entirely with the 150 members of the Legislature Such laws may express the ideas of only a bare majority of our law makers as to what should be the rule of conduct for our entire citizenship of two and a quarter millions.

On the other hand the Constitution expresses the will of the sovereign people themselves. The Constitution casts barriers over which the legislature cannot go. It fixes bars that the executive officers cannot remove It raises objections that the judiciary must respect. In fact the Constitution contains provisions that protect the people at all times from those of its number who hold only shifting ideas of the principles of government, and from those who would override all rules of conduct, were it not for the obstructions placed before them by the Constitution.

The Constitution is the guide that points unerringly to the express will of the sovereign people, such having been determined by the election ballot There can therefore, be no question as to the intention of the people when thus expressed.

Write PROHIBITION into the Constitution of Iowa and point out the road to all future legislatures that the will of the sovereign people is that IOWA SHALL BE FOREVER DRY.

THE FINAL KNOT.

A good story is told that well illustrates the necessity of Constitutional Prohibition in Iowa.

A lecturer was exposing spiritualism. One trick was for a committee to tie him hand and foot with a rope. Then behind the curtain the spirits were to set him free When the last knot was tied an Irishman in the audience called out, "Give it another knot."

Statutory prohibition is the first knot. But John Barleycorn is a slippery fellow. The Webb-Kenyon law is the second. But it will take the third which is a State Constitutional amendment and probably a fourth, National Prohibition before it is at all certain that the spirits will not slip the rope.

The third knot is what Iowa is to tie at the election, October 15th. when the Prohibitory Amendment comes to a vote of the people.

The wet forces are resorting to the boycott in their underground campaign which is largely managed from their headquarters in Cincinnati.

The following has appeared in many parts of the state:

"This is a reminder that we will withdraw our trade from all dealers whose churches have entered into politics, bribed legislators, or support any League or PAID body of reformers Prohibition is up to the voters and will not be bought by the children's pennies that escape the reformer's pockets"

The Anti-Saloon Outfit took another collection on Sept. 9th to be used (?) to keep Iowa dry.

The business men of these churches want your trade. Four churches have said you cannot have even beer.

The Prohibition wave is due to arrive Oct. 15 Vote 'Yes' and pay more rent, taxes, etc., and turn the state over to a bunch of outsiders who are reforming us at a salary of $6,000 a year. WAKE UP! Pass this along. Mail to a voter today."

The citizens of Iowa have the opportunity to reply to this Oct. 15 by voting yes.

The Allied Temperance Committee of Iowa in its desire to give the voters facts, has collected the following from about fifty of the mayors of the larger cities of Iowa. Only two report adversely in any respect:

Three questions were asked,

1. As to the proportion of liquor consumed under the present regime, as compared with the Mulct law days

2. Comparative arrests for drunkenness.

3. Benefit or detriment to the city.

The two that reported adversely admit that the present policy cuts down the consumption of liquor about 50%, but complain of loss of revenue. All the rest put the amount consumed at 10% or less and report a large decrease in arrests, in many cities falling almost to nothing They report that it has benefited the city in every respect and the business interests would not think of returning to the old regime.

The Manson Democrat declares that Prohibition is not an issue in the coming "Special Election." Surely they have failed to read the little publicity the wets are putting out. These Cincinnati people are urging the defeat of the Amendment, in order that they may change the present law to let in either shipments or the saloon.

It is an issue all right but its a "Counter attack" on the part of the wets, while the drys are "consolidating" their position.

Council Bluffs Nonpareil: The Nonpareil does not wish to be classed as criticising President Wilson for urging a compromise with the liquor interests. But now is a good time to get the measure of this liquor business. Alcohol is a traitor to any nation that harbors it. It lends aid and encouragement to the enemies of America in this war. At a time when we are asking American mothers to give their sons as sacrifices on the altar of human liberty these liquor men come forward and tell us that it is their right to defend their business because they have money invested in it

BROKEN DOWN IN HEALTH

Woman Tells How $5 Worth of Pinkham's Compound Made Her Well.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them." —Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 342 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

ANY CORN LIFTS OUT, DOESN'T HURT A BIT!

No foolishness! Lift your corns and calluses off with fingers—It's like magic!

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn, can harmlessly be lifted right out with the fingers if you apply upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

For little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain.

This simple drug dries the moment it is applied and does not even irritate the surrounding skin while applying it or afterwards.

This announcement will interest many of our readers. If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to surely get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Want Good Marksmen.

At the time of the Spanish American war an expert rifle shot was refused enlistment as a sniper on the ground that such a man is of more value in battle than in the sniper's military authority believes this to be the case. He says that when the distance is not accurately known, the good rifleman will be sure to miss while a novice from poor marksmen will cover the ground and score some hits. Nevertheless the policy is now to encourage marksmanship by every possible means.

Concrete Is Preferable.

Steel is going up, and concrete as a result is coming into wider use. Railway bridges for example, which used always to be of steel, are now often of concrete. A beautiful concrete railway bridge is being built across the James river at Richmond, Va., and it is much prettier than a steel bridge. For like reasons concrete is replacing wood in mining structural works, where it has the great advantage of being waterproof.

"It was because I was thinking of you. I have been thinking of you all day. I tried to go to you, just now. I had something to tell you. But the guard at the ladder stopped me."

He looked around to make sure that there was no one near.

"He didn't stop me," she said. "No first class passengers have the run of the ship. How does it happen that you are first class, Kasia?

It was the first time that he had used the word with intention, and his voice trembled a little over it.

She told him rapidly of the odor which had suddenly developed in her former stateroom, and how the ship's people had finally been compelled to transfer her and her father to the first cabin.

"Oh, to quite sumptuous quarters," she went on; "you should see them. Two bedrooms and a sitting room and bath—an imperial suite. There are no places left at the tables, so our meals are served in our sitting room, as though we were royalties. I'm afraid our tips will have to be something enormous! I can't help but feel that the steamship company is getting very much the worst of it. Both father and I offered to continue eating second class, but the captain would n't hear of it. He seems to think, poor man, that the odor has disgraced his boat. He was quite humble about it!"

Dan breathed a deep sigh of relief.

"I'm glad it's so simple," he said. "I had begun to imagine all sorts of things. Last night, when we were talking here, it happened that my roommate, a fellow named Chevrial, was sitting on that bench yonder and overheard a little of our talk. He was quite solemn with me this afternoon about it."

"In what way?" asked Kasia, quickly.

"He said there were always spies on board these big boats, and that you oughtn't to go around telling about blowing up battleships—not at this time, anyway, since it is only three or four days since a French ship was blown up."

He could hear the startled breath she drew, and the hand she laid on his sleeve was trembling.

"Did he say that?" she gasped. "But he doesn't suspect—"

"That your father blew up La Liberte? laughed Dan. "Of course not. He said that was absurd. But, just the same, he thought it unwise to talk about it."

"He is right," Kasia agreed. "What else did he say?"

"He seemed to think your being moved to first class war part of a plot of some kind, and thought you ought to be warned not to make any acquaintances or confide in any one. But of course that was just his imagination. If the captain himself moved you why that settles it. He wouldn't be concerned in any plot. The whole thing, anyway, sounds like a bit of 10-20-30. I told Chevrial so."

"Who is this Chevrial?" asked Miss Vard.

"I don't know. He told me he was a dealer in wine. He seems to have travelled a lot, and he is certainly a well educated fellow, and one of the best talkers I ever met. A Frenchman all through, from the way he got worked up over Alsace-Lorraine. He said it was as bad as Poland. But I suspect he was letting his Gallic imagination run away with him when he got on the subject of spies."

"I am not so sure of that," she said, and fell silent for a moment. "I have seen more of spies than have you, Mr. Webster—I know how Europe is honeycombed with them. At any rate, it can do no harm to follow his advice. Please make sure that there is no one near us. I have something most important to say to you."

Dan glanced at her in surprise; then he got up, looked behind the boat in whose shadow the bench stood, and made a careful survey of their surroundings. Then he sat down again.

"There is no one near," he assured her.

"Mr. Webster," she began, leaning so close that a tendril of her hair brushed his cheek, and speaking in a voice that was almost a whisper, "I told you that I had need of a friend. It is a desperate need. I may rely upon you, may I not?"

For answer, he sought her hand, found it and held it fast. It was very cold.

"I was sure of it," she said, and her fingers closed upon his. "I knew, in my first glance at you, that you were to be counted on."

Dan's heart was glowing and he could not trust himself to speak.

"My need is this," she went on rapidly, as though, having nerved herself to speak, she must hurry through with it before her resolution failed. "My father has perfected an invention—oh, a great invention—which he fears some one may try to steal from him. He has many enemies who would stop at nothing to gain possession of it. Even on this boat, perhaps, there are some of them. he does not know, there is no way that he can tell; but he is very anxious. For eight years he has labored at this invention, and at last it is finished. But if some one should steal his model, all this would be for nothing—for worse than nothing. It is not a money loss he fears—this invention will not bring him money—but his whole life would be wrecked—all his plans, all his hopes. Today he agreed with me that this model should be destroyed; he put it in my hand and he expected me to drop it into the sea. But I was afraid to do that; perhaps he could not make another. It is so complicated, so delicate, perhaps he would go wrong. So I thought and thought—I thought if I had a friend whom I could trust absolutely, whom no one would suspect of possessing it, I might entrust it to him * * *"

Dan's pressure on her hand grew stronger.

"Give it to me," he said.

Kasia gazed into his eyes for a moment, as though reading his very soul; then her other hand came forward under her cloak and touched his. He felt that it held a package, and he took it quickly and slipped it into the pocket of his coat.

"Now it is safe," he said. "You are not to worry about it any more."

She breathed a deep sigh of relief.

"But you must make me two promises," she said.

"What are they?"

"You must permit no one, under any circumstances, to open that package."

"I promise."

"Rather than do that, rather than permit any one to see it, you must destroy it—throw it overboard, stamp upon it—destroy it in some way."

"I promise."

"No matter who may be trying to get it—the captain of this ship, an officer of the police—it must make no difference."

"I promise."

She leaned against the seat, suddenly relaxed as from a great strain, and closed her eyes. But she did not draw her hand away. Then she opened her eyes and looked at him, and her lips were quivering. An immense longing to take her in his arms, to stoop and kiss those lips, to hold her close to him, rushed through the man's veins. But he held himself back. To do that would be base; to do that would be asking payment! He could not do that. But sometime, sometime * * *

She saw the change in his face, sat for an instant very still, then drew her hand away, got out her handkerchief and passed it across her eyes.

"Now we can talk," she said, in another tone. "You may choose the subject."

Dan pulled himself together.

"Oh, any subject will do," he laughed. "Ships or shoes or sealing wax—just so you do the talking."

And he got out his pipe and filled it with trembling fingers. He was absurdly happy.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE FIRST CONFERENCE.

In the captain's cabin meanwhile, another conference was going forward, and one of a very different character from that on the after boat deck. The curtains had been carefully drawn, and three men sat facing each other. They were Ignace Vard, Pachmann, and the young man whom he addressed habitually as Prince." Vard was on the divan in the corner of the room, the others lounged in two luxuriously upholstered chairs which had been wheeled in front of the divan. Their attitudes suggested careless unconcern, but their eyes were glowing with repressed excitement. Cigars and liquors were on a table between them, and the air was blue with smoke.

The captain had been chatting with a group of passengers when Pachmann's card was handed to him, but after a glance at it, he excused himself at once.

"Show the gentlemen to my cabin," he said to the messenger, and himself hastened to it. There, a moment later, Pachman and the prince appeared.

"It is necessary that we have a conference straight," said Pachmann, "with this Ignace Vard. It must be in a room where we cannot by any possibility be overheard."

"It is, I suppose, an affair of state?" asked the captain.

"Yes, of the most importance."

"My cabin, then, is at your disposal."

"Thank you, sir," said Pachmann. "There could be no better place. I was hoping that you could offer it."

"You will understand, sir," Hausmann went on, stroking his beard nervously, "that an explanation of all this will have to be made to my company."

"I will see that a satisfactory explanation is made, sir," Pachmann assented.

The captain nodded his relief.

"That is what I desire. I will have Vard brought to you," he said, saluted and withdrew.

He sent a messenger for the inventor, waited until he had entered, and then summoned a sailor and posted him as a sentry outside the door with instructions to permit no one to enter or even knock. Then he had another man stretch a rope across the deck some 20 feet abaft the door, and finally mounted thoughtfully to the bridge, considerably to the surprise of his subordinates, and spent the whole evening there, pacing slowly back and forth with an appearance of restlessness the other officers could not understand, for the weather was very fine and the barometer high and steady.

In the cabin below the conference proceeded.

"It is as well, Mr. Vard," Pachmann was saying, "that we should understand each other. The prince and myself are here as the direct personal representatives of the emperor, who has given us his fullest confidence and the most complete authority. Any agreement we may make with you, he will recognize as binding. It was a condition of yours, I believe, that you would meet only with persons so empowered."

"I should have preferred to treat with the emperor himself," said Vard.

"You could scarcely expect him to make this trip to America," Pachmann pointed out, with a smile. "If you had been content to go to Berlin * * *"

"That was impossible," Vard broke in. "It was stipulated that the treaty should be signed in America, and the emperor agreed."

"And we are here to carry out that agreement," Pachmann added. "But before we proceed to a consideration of it, I will outline the progress of affairs to the present moment, in order that the prince may be thoroughly familiar with the matter. If I am mistaken in any detail, please correct me."

Vard nodded, and lay back in his seat, watching the smoke from his cigar, as it wreathed itself toward the ceiling.

"About the middle of July," Pachmann began, "Mr. Vard called on Count Eulenberg, the chief marshal of the imperial court, and asked for a private audience with the emperor. The request was so preposterous that the count was astounded when Mr. Vard persisted in it. After that he was shadowed night and day, his belongings were searched, his mail opened and the police authorities were about to expel him from the country as a dangerous person, when something still more astonishing happened. With incredible good fortune, Mr. Vard had in some way managed to secure an audience with Admiral von Tirpitz, secretary of the navy, two days later, a secret audience was arranged, at which the emperor was present. At the request of Admiral von Tirpitz, I was also present, in my capacity as chief of the wireless service.

"At this conference Mr. Vard stated that he had discovered a principle, or invented an apparatus, by which he could explode the magazines of a fort or battleship at any distance up to five miles, and that he believed the perfection of the invention would greatly increase its range. This new principle, which worked in conjunction with the ordinary wireless, was something which there was no way to guard, since it penetrated both wood and metal. Every ship, every army, every fort was at the mercy of the man controlling it. If a single nation controlled it, that nation would become mistress of the world; if it was common to all nations, war, as we know it, would be impossible.

"Mr. Vard went on to say that it was not his purpose to make this discovery the property of a single nation. His purpose was to render war so impossible that all nations would consent to universal disarmament, and enter into an agreement for universal peace. He had come to Germany first, he said, because she was the greatest of the armed nations, and if she agreed to his proposal, the example would be very great. His proposal was that he would prove that he was able to do everything he claimed, in any way that Germany might prescribe, in the event of his success Germany was to sign an agreement to disarm, was to secure the signature of Russia and such other nations as she could influence, and this alliance was then to force the agreement of all other nations; the navies and coast defenses of such nations as would not agree to be blown to pieces and their consent compelled."

Pachmann paused for a moment and wiped his glistening forehead.

"Am I stating your proposal correctly, Mr. Vard?" he asked.

The inventor nodded, without lowering his eyes from the ceiling.

"I need not say with what astonishment we listened to this extraordinary proposal," Pachmann continued. "It seemed impossible that any merely human brain should have been able to work out the details of a plan so stupendous. But it impressed the emperor, it impressed all of us. We held other conferences, and it was finally agreed that, before we went further, Mr. Vard should give us the proof he had suggested. The test to which he finally consented was to be a conclusive one. He was to blow up a French battleship in Toulon harbor. As his funds were limited, we agreed to bear the expense of the experiment and to reimburse him for the apparatus which he would have to leave behind. If he succeeded, we would be ready to treat definitely with him; two commissioners, with full power from the emperor, would accompany him to America, where such treaty as might finally be agreed upon would be signed. Am I right so far, Mr. Vard?"

The inventor had lowered his eyes and was looking at the speaker keenly.

"Yes," he said, "except that you should add that it was distinctly understood that the treaty was to be one for universal disarmament, and that Germany was to do everything in her power to secure the consent of all other nations."

"You are right," agreed Pachmann, readily. "That was to be the general purpose of the treaty. It was only its details we were to discuss—the exact manner in which this end could best be accomplished."

The prince had been listening intently, and at the words, his eyes and Pachmann's met. Vard was again gazing at the ceiling.

"On the 20th of this month," Pachmann continued, "Admiral von Tirpitz received from Mr. Vard, in a code agreed upon, a telegram stating that the test would occur at daylight on Monday the 25th." He paused for a moment, then went on more slowly. "At that hour, a companion and myself were on the harbor front of Toulon; and at that hour La Liberte was indeed destroyed."

He stopped, his eyes on the inventor's face. Vard met his glance without flinching.

"I understand," he said, in a low tone, "that I am no monster, that I recognize the sacredness of human life. The test proposed was yours not mine; I protested against it, and I consented at last because I saw that you would with nothing else be satisfied. But for the destruction of that ship, you will have to atone; to those men who were killed a great monument shall be built; they shall be recognized by all the world as heroes and martyrs; their families shall weep for them, indeed, but with pride. To banish from the world those men laid down their lives, even as I would lay down mine—even as any brave man would—gladly eagerly!"

Their officers were chosen from the engineers ... and from men who in civil life were engaged in similar undertakings, such as builders and miners. Most of the men were peasants used to digging in the fields and their work was very satisfactory, but this kind of excavating work was different and they suffered considerably from the unusual method of having to throw the earth upward or wheeling it in barrows up steep inclines.

One of the officers overcame the trying difficulty by inventing an apparatus for carrying loosened earth and rock to the surface by use of electric power. By this arrangement two men can do the work formerly done by five. When the earth has reached the surface it falls into barrows and is wheeled away along the level and distributed about in such a manner as not to attract the attention of the enemy's airmen always flying about the lines to observe what is going on in the opposite position.

Special army saw mills have been started to provide the props and planking for the shelters and everything is done at minimum cost.

The veterans so employed have sustained losses when working in exposed positions, but no danger appears to daunt them and they continue their job as though they were working in the fields at home. They have adapted themselves to the use of the most modern tools, and although the great majority of them had no previous experience of electric drills and borers they now use them as well as practical miners.

No Sugar Speculation.

From the Buffalo Express.

Following the assumption of control of sugar by the federal food administration comes the report that a sugar exchange may be opened in Cuba, presumably in Havana, where speculation may be carried on as heretofore in sugar futures. Some of the leaders in the trade in New York declare that it is unbelievable that American traders would operate on a Cuban exchange with the knowledge that the United States government took control of sugar with the express purpose of managing directly or indirectly the world's supply. They also believe that the Cuban government would not permit the operation of an exchange where operations would oppose the aims of the food administration. It may well be doubted if the Cuban government would authorize an exchange especially as Cuba is in the war on the side of the allies. Such authorization could be regarded as an unfriendly act towards our government and severe reprisure could and would be brought to bear on Cuba. As for Americans who would trade on such an exchange, a way would be found to deal with them, which they would not be apt to forget. All the leaders in the sugar trade are strongly supporting the government in this matter and anxious to cooperate in every way they can to make the sugar administration a success.

Help to Save Nation's Food Supply

In this time of high cost of living, everybody should use all possible means to prevent waste and to help save food. No one means can be more effective than a vigorous campaign to exterminate rats which destroy over two hundred million dollars worth of foodstuffs annually Keep garbage in rat-proof cans, stop up their holes, and above all exterminate them with Stearns' Paste, which can be bought for a few cents at any store A two ounce box will usually rid a house or barn of every rat. It destroys mice, cockroaches and waterbugs as well. Adv.

Cup of cocoa made with milk
Plain pudding made with milk, or stale bread with corn syrup

It will be noted that milk is the backbone of these diets Milk is the best single article of diet for a growing child The council says "Even at the present high price of 13 cents a quart grade A milk represents by far the cheapest of the protein foods for children"

Approve Aims of America.

From the London Globe

In common with the rest of the allies, we welcome the outspoken declaration of Mr Lansing on the aim of the United States in entering the war The evil ambitions of the military rulers of Germany are to be destroyed That is the intention of the Washington government, which perceives the situation without any illusion as to causes, and is fully awake to what might have been the consequences had the war ended in the defeat of the allies. This is seen from the advice of the secretary of state to the members of the officers' reserve corps to get rid of any idea that they were going to fight others' battles and not their own The future of the United States, Mr Lansing says, is at stake

To be quite just to ourselves on this side, that fact has long been perceptible, and we scarcely imagine that so shrewd and able a nation as the Americans did not also perceive it to be the case German imperialism, we agree, is the common enemy, but we do not make the mistake already made by some speakers on the subject, of reckoning the kaiser and his advisers as the sole opponents to be crushed. The allies are fighting against the whole German nation, and it is just as well to bear this in mind.

The Good Old Yankee Name.

Give them the good old Yankee name
Our soldiers always bore,
Send them out on the firing line
As they have gone before—
With a Hip! Hurrah! and a ringing cheer
For the bright flag flying free,
With a bugle song to cheer them on
In the way it used to be.

Give them the good old Yankee name
That never has known defeat,
With the pulsing throb of fife and drums
To time the marching feet.
Let the bullets whistle and sing
When the boys get into the game,
They'll have good luck—with Yankee pluck
And the good old Yankee name.

Give them the good old Yankee name
When the guns begin to roar,
Why should we follow a fashion now?
When we never did that before.
Haven't we got backbone and grit
To stand on our own two feet?
Then it's Hip! Hurrah! for the Yankee boys
And the Yankee name so sweet.

Not Martyrs—Merely Pests.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger

Emma Goldman, the anarchist, reaching Jefferson City to begin serving her term for obstructing the federal army draft law, says she does not claim to be a martyr

Thus we all live and learn One dose of federal law has brought about this gleam of intelligence in one who has thrived by defiance of that very law.

She is perfectly right The Goldmans and the Berkmans are not martyrs. They are merely pests And while Uncle Sam is engaged in housecleaning, it might be well to gather in all who aid and abet such pests.

Worlds Tallest Women.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

After taking measurements of the heights of women in France, England and America a doctor announces that the English woman is the tallest and the American woman comes next. The average height of the French woman is five feet, one inch. The American woman is nearly two inches taller, and the women of Great Britain one-half inch taller than the latter American women are heavier. Their average weight is about 117 pounds.

The Reproach.

O maddened nations! Dare you face the Lord
And pray to Him for victory's reward?
Rise up from where you kneel—in slime and mud!
From mangled mothers' breasts and brothers' blood!
God's answered prayers are with the glorious sun
And with the peasant when his work is done;
With little children when their dimples smile;
With buttercups and daisies, mile on mile.
Shall he forswear these joys of precious worth
To stride the bloody battlefields of earth?
What devil's tongue has let this madness grow—
That man should ask his God to bend so low?

—Jane Burr, in the Christian Herald.

BOYS MAKE BEST AIR PILOTS

More Likely to Possess Dashing and Intrepid Qualities That Make Ideal Aviators.

War aviation, with its exceptional dangers and its demands for supreme courage is peculiarly a service for volunteers But it has been demonstrated says St Nicholas Magazine that the younger the war pilot the more likely is he to possess those dashing and intrepid qualities that make the ideal air fighter. Consequently, the government is opening wide the door of the aviation service for volunteers under twenty-one, the conscription age The army is already giving officers' commissions to young men nineteen years of age, while the navy has reduced its limit to eighteen years Only commissioned officers are permitted to operate American military airplanes, so all our flyers will get commissions

Boys considerably younger than eighteen can be thinking now of becoming war pilots, with reasonable expectations of seeing actual service As long as the war goes on, the aircraft program will keep growing, since only the declaration of peace will justify lessening of our effort

But let us see the qualifications of those suited to war aviation The athletic type of boy is preferred To have been a member of a team is usually a good indication of pluck and perseverance A sound physique, and good vision and hearing are absolutely necessary. The ideal airman has a cool head; he is able to act quickly in emergencies. It is important, too, that the war pilot be an accurate observer and equally important that he possess the ability to form correct judgment

Hello Profanity.

The rule is strict against using profane language when talking over the telephone. A telephone experiment has proved a failure in Lynn, Mass The manager noticed that "wrong number" calls were frequent and he ordered the "hello" girls to call each digit separately and to insert the word "dash" after each one The method was slow, but the climax was reached when a Lynn man was in a hurry to get a Boston newspaper office. He called for "Boston 3000" and heard a sweet voice at "central" say: "Beach three dash, oh, dash, oh, dash, oh, dash

That nettled the Lynn man and he called out:

"Well, what are you cussing about?"

The order was abolished, and no more dashes are being said by the telephone girls at Lynn.—Buffalo Commercial.

Fair Showing.

"How is your boy getting along in the army?"

"First rate," replied Mr. Dopples, considering his limitations."

"Yes?"

"Henry hates to get up in the morning, dislikes all forms of physical exercise, and never was known to obey an order while he stayed around home, yet I understand he hasn't been in the guardhouse but twice since he enlisted."

Comparisons.

"Do you remember in your days of adventure the story you told me about the trouble you had in one voyage to dodge a menacing shark?"

"Yes, but that's nothing to the trouble I have to dodge my wife when she wants money for shopping."

The race is not always to the swift, but the chances are a hundred to one that it is.

MUST NOT BOTHER EDISON

Visitors Not Permitted to Intrude on Great Inventor When He Is Busy at His Experiments.

Thomas A. Edison's favorite pursuit is chemistry. Even as a boy telegraphist getting his first start towards a career, this inclination was manifest in his experiments with batteries and electric devices, and it still remains his greatest pleasure, observes an exchange.

His new laboratory is splendidly equipped. Every known substance ranging through all the kingdoms of matter from lanthanum to shark's teeth and including over 200,000 specimens, is kept on hand for immediate availability. It is a collection of over 30 years' standing, encouraged from time to time by prizes for new additions offered by the inventor to his men.

His own laboratory table is never, in any circumstances, allowed to be touched. A notice posted on the doorway reads to the effect that Mr. Edison is not to be disturbed in the course of his experiments except for matter of the utmost importance. So fond is he of his beloved pastime that he declares his idea of heaven is to be able to continue it, and his injunctions to his staff are: "When I die I want my table forwarded to me by wireless."

Little Italy, Pa., is to be moved bodily to a new site so coal under it can be mined.

Experience is what you know after making a fool of yourself.

In the Language He Understood.

Clarence S. Lee, a division superintendent of the Indiana Union Traction company, with headquarters at Muncie, reads everything dealing with electricity and electrical subjects that comes his way, so much so that he sometimes fails to keep up with public affairs as presented in the newspapers. He mentioned this to a friend the other night and the latter chided him for not knowing about an important war development.

"A man in your particular kind of business I should think would always be interested in current events," said the friend, "that is if you expect to be a live wire."—Indianapolis News.

A Letter From Washington

The Food Administrator Writes Us:

"The use of baking powder breads made of corn and other coarse flours instead of patent wheat flour is recommended by the Conservation Division of the Food Administration. The wheat needed for export is thus conserved, and at the same time healthful food for our own people is provided. The circulation of recipes providing for these uses would be of assistance in carrying out our plans."

The following recipes for Corn Bread and Rye Rolls save wheat flour and make attractive and wholesome food for every day when made with

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

CORN BREAD

1¾ cups corn meal
¼ cup flour
4 level teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1½ cups milk
2 tablespoons shortening

Mix thoroughly dry ingredients; add milk and melted shortening; beat well; pour into well greased pan and bake in hot oven about 25 minutes.

RYE ROLLS

2 cups rye flour
¾ teaspoon salt
3 level teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
¾ cup milk
½ tablespoon shortening

Sift dry ingredients together, add milk and melted shortening. Knead on floured board; shape into rolls. Put into greased pans and allow to stand to warm place 20 to 25 minutes. Bake in moderate oven 25 to 30 minutes.

Our red, white and blue booklet "Best War Time Recipes" containing additional similar recipes sent free on request. Address Royal Baking Powder Company, Dept. W, 135 William Street, New York.

Hog Feed
Makes Heavy, Healthy Hogs
from skinny little shoats. Builds fat, bone and muscle. Better than corn for fattening. One man says: "15 sacks saved 150 bushels of corn." Another says: "Shoats gained 2½ pounds a day." Everyone is highly pleased with the excellent results. Makes more gain in two weeks than grain alone makes in three.
Come in and order a ton. Then watch how your pigs thrive on it—how they grow and fatten. There's money in it for you.

Lester Stille and Carl Suckow were over at Garner last Friday evening in the latter's car. They had a little accident with the car; that is they were educating a young lady as a driver and she gently (?) bumped the car into the curb and bent the front ax. For further information ask the boys.

We had a little excitement in Klemme last Saturday when the meat market caught on fire. The fire started from the exhaust pipe at the rear of the building. The engine probably missed a charge a couple of times and the gas accumulating was ignited, caught a box and then started the back part of the building. A few pails of water easily put out the blaze.

Last Sunday Wm. Werner had quite a bad smash up with his auto. Between here and Goodell a wheel broke throwing the car into the ditch, breaking the wind shield, fenders and other parts. Mr. Werner received a few cuts and Mrs. Werner was quite badly bruised. They were not speeding but were traveling at a moderate rate when the wheel broke which caused the accident. Mr. Werner has traded the wrecked car in on a new one and is now driving the latest model Ford.

1000 PUPILS ATTEND SEED CORN DEMONSTRATIONS

Supt. Baggs and L. T. Nutty of Ames Give Excellent Talks at the Rural Schools in Hancock County

Nearly 1000 rural school pupils and many farmers attended the seed corn demonstration given in this county last week by County Superintendent J. R. Baggs and L. T. Nutty of the Extension Department of Iowa State College. The city and consolidated schools also observed seed corn week by giving their agricultural students work along that line.

The demonstrations were held at the central school of each township making sixteen in all. The other schools of the township brought their pupils to this central meeting and by this means the work was given to the whole township in one meeting.

The demonstrations were well attended and much interest was shown by the children as well as the older people.

An exceptionally interesting meeting was held at the Burgardt school in Britt township. The pupils each brought an ear of seed corn and a little corn show was held. The ears were placed by the demonstrator and the bad and good points of each ear was pointed out. This show not only created much interest but also taught pupils some of the fine points on corn showing.

Some of the points which were brought to the minds of the pupils in the demonstration were as follows:

1—Pick seed corn from the field and not from the wagon at husking time.

2—Take ears about waist high and those that tilt downward.

3—Hang up to dry in a dry, well ventilated place.

4—Store in a dry place, (furnace room or attic.)

5—Ear test in the spring by the rag doll method.

In all cases the children were urged to save 10 ears to be shown at the County Short Course next winter and they were all told how to select show ears.

The thing that should be remembered by every farmer is that seed corn will be scarce next spring and will sell for a high price. The north is already on the lookout for seed corn.

Every farmer in this county should keep his own seed and enough more to help the other fellow out.

Good seed corn is the best insurance for a good corn crop and to get good seed one should pick it from the field and in his own community.

KLEMME COW-TESTING ASSOCIATION

The following table gives the names and records of the cows in the Association which have produced more than 35 pounds of butterfat or 850 pounds of milk during the period of 30 days ending September 30, 1917.

SCHOOL NEWS

Oscar Schuldt, Editor

Viola Sampson was absent from school the past week.

Mildred Johnson was absent from school the past week on account of illness.

Mable Stearns was absent from school Monday morning of this week.

"Stub" Lewis was absent from school Monday and also Tuesday afternoon.

Tuesday morning of this week was made interesting by distributing James Whitcomb Riley pins to those who volunteered to try and sell them. The money received for these pins will go to secure a bust of James Whitcomb Riley, and a painting of the famous "Swimming Hole." The boys and girls are out selling them now, so buy one and help us along.

The customary six weeks tests were given Thursday and Friday of last week.

Black and Gold have been chosen for our school colors.

A program and debate will be given by the High School, Friday afternoon October 26th, at 2:30. All are invited to attend.

Mr. Reese, our professor, has a bad cold, which causes him to be very uncomfortable in school.

The Seniors organized their class and elected Burr Church as president and Ernest Lewis as secretary.

The 9th grade English Class have completed the study of Lowell's poem "Sir Launfall."

Lois Lenz has returned to school after several weeks of illness.

A basket social will be held at the Idle Hour theatre October 29th, for the purpose of creating a fund to carry on the athletic work of our school. All ladies are cordially invited to bring baskets which will be placed on sale for the benefit of the hungry gentlemen present. A short program will be given before the baskets are placed on sale. Further particulars will appear in the school notes next week.

Our school editor drove to Kanawha Saturday to take some of the teachers of this township to the study center.

The girls' basket ball team will meet the Garner team Friday afternoon on the local court. All are cordially invited. Later—Game has been postponed, possibly in near future, as Garner has to get a permit from the State Athletic Association to play this school as they can only play the schools in the association.

A FINE JOB OF PLUMBING

In looking through the new residence of F. J. Wenck, which is nearly completed, we were shown and had explained to us the heating and plumbing work installed by Oscar Wenck of Garner.

To our idea, and also the opinion of others better posted than we are, that there is not a better installed or more complete job in the state. Mr. O. H. Wenck has put in all the plumbing, heating, modern bath, vacuum sweeper and has reason, as well as the owner, to be proud of the job. Klemme as a neighboring town are fortunate to have a firm so close at hand where we can get first class work. Mr. Wenck employs only first class plumbers, believing that the best is none too good; in this idea he should be commended. Mr. J. B. Hawkins, a man of long experience in the plumbing and heating line, has been with Mr. Wenck for several months helping him close up his work before leaving to help "Uncle Sam." We hope he will not be gone very long as he is a capable young man and much needed here as a plumber. Mr. Hawkins will return to Waterloo, his home, and from there he will leave for "some where in France." Good luck to them both.

THE WIN-ONE CLASS

The Win-One Class of the English M. E. church was invited to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Schaefer last Wednesday night for their regular monthly social meeting. The young people of the Germantown church were also invited, and together these two bands of young people spent a very pleasant evening. After opening exercises with songs and prayer, the meeting was turned over to the entertainment committee who did their part in making a lively time for all present. The evening's program closed with a splendid luncheon served by the hostess.

The word pilgin, or pidgeon as connected with English, is a Chinaman's poor attempt to pronounce the word business. Brewer gives it—business, bidginess, bidgen and pigeon. Pigeon English, therefore, means business in English. It is a strange admixture of English, Chinese and Portuguese, and is used in all parts of the far east as a means of communication between the natives and the foreigners. During nearly half a century, and especially since the opening of many ports to Europeans, business relations have developed to such proportions and reached into so many channels that some universally understood means of communication became absolutely necessary, and pidgin or pigeon English was the natural result. Its acquirement in the coast ports, at all events, is a matter of importance both with traders and with natives, who seek situations in foreign employ, and it has become popular as a medium of communication.

The historic fishing town of Gloucester, Mass., is doing an immense business in its famous industry, but it is not so deeply immured by money getting as to overlook some other things. For instance, learning that some I. W. W. firemen had obtained jobs on one of its big steam trawlers, it quickly put these gentlemen ashore, pointed out to them the railroad station, bade them adieu, and engaged firemen who could be trusted in their place. Gloucester is evidently fishing also for disturbers and disloyalists.

The department of agriculture estimates that only about 27 per cent of the tillable land of the country is actually under cultivation. Sixty per cent of the total area of the continental United States, or 1,140,000,000 acres, is tillable, or capable of being brought under cultivation. This includes large areas not yet cleared, but sure to be in the future. An additional 19 per cent of the whole, or 360,000,000 acres, is regarded as valuable for grazing or for fruits, though not for crops.

There appears a chance that Iceland's prohibition law soon will be repealed. More than 100 of the country's most prominent men and women have presented an appeal to the Iceland althing (parliament) in which they declare that three years' operation of the law has demonstrated that it has not fulfilled a single one of the aims which brought about its enactment. The amount of drunkenness in the country, say the signers, was negligible before the law was enacted

Increased importance of shipping throughout the Caribbean is responsible for the establishment of six new stations of the United States weather bureau and the enlargement of 12 other stations in the West Indies during the past year. With the establishment of a new station at Puerto Plata, Santo Domingo within the next week all of the stations have been installed and two daily reports from each will be going forward to the weather bureau at Washington

The crescent was not originally the emblem of the Turks. It was first used by the primitive Christians of Constantinople and the eastern provinces of the old Roman empire as an emblem of the growing influence of Christianity. It was not until about the year 1453, after the Turks had overrun Asia Minor and part of southern Europe, and had captured Constantinople, that the Turks adopted the crescent as their national emblem.

The Koran prohibits the use of images and symbols in the religious ceremonies of the strict Turks, or the internal decoration of the temples and mosques, the rule being so strict as not to permit the martial or civic decoration of the greatest generals or other distinguished persons. The adoption of the crescent by the Turk as a national emblem is an oddity which has so far remained unexplained.

A newsboy in Chicago, who sought exemption from war service on the ground that his parents were dependent on his help, was found to possess more than $100,000. His petition was refused, of course, and interest in his case now centers, first, on how he made so much money, and second, on how he managed to keep his prosperity hidden from the street corner politicians.

The Australian continent is abundantly supplied with lizards. Three hundred and ninety species are recorded, and they may be seen not only in woods and prairies and deserts, in the water, among rocks and in trees, but also in the less frequented city streets.

According to the last census, 1910, the land area in crops in the United States was 311,000,000 acres, about 27 per cent of the tillable area, leaving 73 per cent still to be brought under cultivation. This shows that we are far from the limit of our resources.

MORE MEN DISCHARGED BY GENERAL PLUMMER

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 13.—Discharge of 10 Iowa men has been ordered by Maj. Gen. E. H. Plummer, for physical reasons. Along with the Iowa men, there are 30 Minnesota drafted men and 20 from Illinois counties.

Iowa discharged men are Hugo H. Hermann, Raymond A. Garstang, Scott county, Irving Schmide, Harvey White, Floyd, Ralph Fullerton, Ralph Melick, Boone, Claude Miller, Mason City, Guy O. Foster, Muscatine, Glen Hutzell, Hardin, Frank Erhart, Shelby.

CIVIL WAR ROMANCE IS FINALLY TERMINATED

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 13.—A proof that "love laughs at locksmiths"—and at old age as well—came to friends of Henry D. Sumner, a pioneer dairyman, and soldier of the civil war, and Mrs. John E. Jayne, his ante-bellum sweatheart, ages 79 and 69, respectively, when they were married here by the Rev. C. Dreyer. The bridegroom loved the bride when he and the man who won her, a fellow soldier in the war of the rebellion, were fighting side by side. "Comrade" Sumner remained his good, true friend throughout the years that followed, until "taps" sounded for the successful suitor some years ago. Since then, Mr. Sumner's wife died, and in the course of time his heart turned back to the sweetheart of his youth, now widowed. A courtship, interrupted by the flight of years, was resumed and the gallant veteran won.

FIRST REAL SNOW OF THE SEASON IS SEEN

Dubuque, Ia., Oct. 13.—The first snow of the season at Dubuque started falling late yesterday, and by 9 o'clock last night more than three-fourths of an inch of snow covered the ground with no signs of a letup.

Reports from Waukegon, Ia., near here, say that nearly an inch of snow fell there and the temperature dropped to 22 degrees.

Rock Rapids, Ia., Oct. 12.—The first snow of the season fell here late yesterday

"DRY" FORCES BUSY IN HARRISON COUNTY

Logan, Ia. Oct. 13.—The flying squadron for the constitutional amendment on prohibition mobilized here this morning and went to Magnolia, Pisgah and Little Sioux, where dinner will be served. Mondamin and Missouri Valley were to be made this afternoon. Singing and band music are among the features of the tour of the county.

REPRESENTATIVE WOODS CERTAIN OF OPPOSITION

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—At least one of the Iowa delegation in congress will have a contest for return to congress. Representative Frank Woods will have opposition next year. L. J. Dickinson, of Algona, prominent attorney, is out as a candidate against Mr. Woods and friends here understand he will make a vigorous fight.

FORMER GOVERNOR SHAW SEES COMPETITION FOR U. S.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—Former Gov. Leslie M. Shaw, of Iowa, in an interview in eastern papers predicts the United States after the war will be "infinitely worse off" than the people of other nations. He says it will have to face more strenuous competition than it has ever before known.

BUENA VISTA FARMERS TO PAY INCOME TAX

Storm Lake, Ia., Oct. 13.—George Bowers, deputy internal revenue collector, is spending a busy week in Storm Lake interviewing approximately 600 farmers, who were served summons to appear, relative to the income tax. Nearly 500 of the number were forced to admit they are liable to the tax. There has been considerable excitment among the men called for examination. According to Mr. Bowers, Buena Vista county, is one of the wealthiest counties in which examinations have been held.

VIOLATOR ESPIONAGE ACT GIVEN SENTENCE

Judge Wade Sends Daniel H. Wallace to Prison for Twenty Years.

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 13.—Judge M. J. Wade, in federal court denied a motion for a new trial for Daniel H. Wallace this morning and sentenced him to 20 years in prison for violation of the espionage act.

GENERAL SUMMARY OF IOWA CROP CONDITIONS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 13.—The final weekly crop report of the season by the Iowa weather and crop service is as follows:

"The week was much colder and drier than usual, the temperature being about 7 degrees below the normal, and the rainfall was practically nil. The frost of October 1 was much more damaging over the southeastern counties than was reported last week, the one on the 6th was killing in all parts of the state except over the extreme western and southwestern counties and the hard freeze on the 8th was general in all districts.

"About 40 per cent of the corn in the northeastern counties has been seriously damaged, with less injury toward the west and south to the extreme southwestern corner of the state, where the damage probably did not exced more than 1 to 3 per cent and most of that only slight.

"Considering the crop as a whole about 70 to 75 per cent was fully mature, 10 to 15 per cent was slightly damaged and the remainder will be soft and chaffy, depending on the character of the weather during the next few weeks. The total yield will be greater than last year, and the condition of the crop in the northeastern district is much better than it was in 1915 when killing frost and freezing temperature occurred in that district on August 30. A great deal more than the usual amount of the crop is in shock or silo on account of the shortage of the hay crop. Much excellent seed corn has been gathered and much more should be selected at once from the best of the frosted fields and properly cared for, as good seed corn will be in demand next spring. Pop corn husking will begin in Ida and Sac counties in about 10 days. Both the yield and quality of this crop is good. The yield of potatoes is turning out fairly well the quality is generally good and the output will be much larger than last year on account of a greatly increased acreage. It is thought that winter apples may have been damaged by the hard freeze on the 8th. Good soaking rains are now needed for fall sown grains, grass lands and for the water supply, then clear, cool weather for drying out the corn

"Notwithstanding the fact that fall grains were badly winter killed and that the planting season was cold and wet and the summer unusually cool Iowa has done her share toward feeding the nation and the world.

"The small grain crops were exceptionally good, there will be considerably more than the normal amount of corn and the truck crops were excellent."

LITTLE TOWN IS NEARLY WIPED OUT BY FIRE

Denison, Ia., Oct. 13.—Deloit, a station on the Illinois Central and Northwestern roads six miles north of Denison was visited with a devastating fire. Fire was discovered in the hotel and it quickly spread until that building and those occupied by the drug store, butcher shop, and cream station were burned to the ground. There are no water works and every well was pumped dry in the town. A call for help was sent to Denison and the fire company took the motor truck with chemical engine to the fire. With the aid of this and the work of citizens the south side of the street was saved, where the buildings were on the verge of flaming under the intense heat of those on the north. It is believed the fire started from a defective chimney in the hotel. Loss to property, $15,000. The True general merchandise store, the leading business place, was saved.

PROMINENT DAVENPORT MEN ARE ON TRIAL

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 13.—The United States government is training its heavy legal guns upon representatives of Davenport's German aristocracy in federal court today.

Six men are on trial, charged with aiding in an alleged plot to promote disloyalty and obstruct recruiting of Uncle Sam's military forces.

Two of the defendants, Dr. Henry Matthey and Dr. Walter Matthey, are noted surgeons. They are members of one of the oldest and wealthiest families in Davenport. Their family name has been prominent here for generations.

Still another, Attorney Fred Vollmer, is linked by ties of blood with Davenport's plutocracy. He was formerly county attorney and is a brother of ex-Congressman Henry Vollmer, whose oratorical powers gained him national prominence while Iowa's Second district representative at Washington.

The other defendants are E. C. Willis, an attorney, A. H. Miller, who holds a responsible position with the Sieg Iron company, of Davenport, and Charles Wiese, also an attorney. With the exception of Willis, who is a New England Yankee, all of the defendants are Germans.

IOWA CIVIL WAR VETS TO JOURNEY TO VICKSBURG

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 11.—Veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic who saw service in the campaign at Vicksburg, will go from all parts of the state of Iowa Monday for a four days' convention at Vicksburg. It is estimated that 700 veterans will go from Iowa on a special train which leaves Chicago Monday.

Governor Harding, who will appear on the program, will attend the convention with those members of his staff who have seen active service.

The state of Iowa will pay the traveling expenses of all of the veterans, who were actively engaged in the campaign. The federal government will be the host to the men while encamped at the historic southern city.

ODEBOLT PEOPLE ASK FOR NEW HIGH SCHOOL

Odebolt, Ia., Oct. 11.—A petition, asking the school board to submit to a vote of the people of the district a proposition to erect a $50,000 high school building, is being circulated. It is believed the necessary 25 per cent of the voters will sign the petition. It is also proposed to purchase grounds to be used as play grounds by the children.

The schools are so crowded that some of the classes are now finding it necessary to hold their sessions in business houses, which have been temporarily arranged for school purposes.

FOUR I. W. W.'S BEING HELD AT CAMP DODGE

Will Be Given Trial by Court Martial on Charge of Desertion.

Camp Dodge, Ia. Oct. 12.—Four I. W. W. men are under arrest at Camp Dodge and are charged with being deserters from the army. They will be tried by courtmartial. The men were captured at Devils Lake, N. D., by a deputy sheriff and were evidently trying to make their way into Canada. They carried a grip containing a considerable quantity of I. W. W. literature in the English and foreign languages. The men were under orders to be brought to Camp Dodge with the first contingent of drafted men.

IOWA SUFFRAGISTS IN SESSION AT DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 12.—Senator Albert B. Cummins was the chief speaker at the annual session of the Iowa Suffrage association here last night and declared to the women that he was in favor of both national and state equal suffrage.

E. T. Meredith, of Des Moines, was another speaker at the session, and Mrs. Helen Guthrie Miller, vice president of the National Suffrage association, also spoke.

Mrs. M. E. Patterson, of Sioux City, chairman of the state suffrage committee of the W. C. T. U., is here and will make a series of speeches in behalf of the prohibitory amendment during the week.

The women will hold their election today. Anna B. Lawther, of Dubuque, will in all probability be reelected president.

The women are planning to continupe their campaign for equal suffrage in Iowa and will ask the next legislature to vote to resubmit the amendment to a vote. It was announced that all of the debts incurred during the last campaign have been paid.

Y. W. C. A. HAS PART IN GREAT WAR PROGARM

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 12.—Des Moines is bending under the tremendous burden of war time, but that the city will meet the situation without breaking is the statement of Miss Cara Adams, national secretary for the cities of the north central field, who has just visited Camp Dodge, where she made a study of the war work which the Y. W. C. A. is doing there for women and girls. At the request of the war department, the Y. W. C. A. took over this work in addition to their regular responsibilities, and what Miss Adams saw at Camp Dodge is, she said, only one of many of the similar programs being carried out all over the country.

For this purpose, a war fund of $3,000,000 was voted by the national board of the Y. W. C. A. and the north central field committe is now conducting a campaign to raise about $300,000 in the five states- North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska and Minnesota—which comprise the field. With Camp Dodge as the great military center, the five states will direct a large part of their efforts to making conditions for women there as ideal as possible.

MANY NEGROES RECEIVE COMMISSIONS IN U. S. ARMY

Des Moines Ia., Oct. 12.—Commissions will be awarded to approximately 625 negro candidates at the Fort Des Moines officers' training camp.

Col. W. T. Johnson, detailed from the adjutant general's office in Washington, is here to present the commissions.

The 150 negroes that failed to win commissions will be sent to their homes immediately, Colonel Johnson said, and immediately relieved of all military duties.

Fort Des Moines, was the only officers' training camp for negroes in the country. It opened June 18, and at one time had a maximum enrollment of 1,200

BODY OF HOLSTEIN WOMAN TO IDA GROVE FOR BURIAL

Ida Grove, Ia., Oct. 12.—Mrs. H. A. Dessel, wife of one of Ida county's best known citizens, was interred in the local cemetery in this city yesterday. Her death occurred at the family home in Holstein, Sunday. For 12 or more years Mr. and Mrs. Dessel were residents of Ida Grove, the husband filling the office of county auditor for several terms. They left Ida Grove a number of years ago, taking up their residence in Holstein, and the husband and one son survive. Mrs. Dessel had been in poor health for a number of years.

IOWA PRESBYTERIANS TO HOLD FORTH AT AMES

Ames, Ia., Oct. 12.—The 23rd annual Sunday school institute of the Presbyterian church in Iowa will be held in Ames Collegiate Presbyterian church, beginning Monday evening, October 15. The opening addresses will be by Rev. L. D. Coffman, D. D., of Davenport, and Prof. W. A. McKeever, head of the child welfare department of the University of Kansas.

The 36th annual meeting of the Presbyterian synod will open at the same place on Tuesday evening, October 16, with an address by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman D. D., moderator of the general assembly. Rev. F. A. Gageby, D. D., of Washington, is the retiring moderator and Rev. William O. Ruston, D. D., of Dubuque, is the stated clerk.

Among the many interests to be considered is the work already begun among the soldiers of the Des Moines cantonment. Rev. E. A. Bees, D.D., of Iowa City, is now in charge of that work.

IOWA POSTMISTRESS IS HELD FOR EMBEZZLEMENT

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 12.—Miss Mary Nolan, who figured prominently in a breach of promise case against a banker at Patterson some years ago, has been arrested, accused of embezzlement of $1,000 in funds from the government. For two years she has been postmistress at Patterson.

EAGLE GROVE MAN IS IOWA MASONIC HEAD

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Oct. 12.—Eugene Schaffer, of Eagle Grove, was yesterday elected grand master of the Royal and Select Masons of Iowa. A. E. Opsgrand master

CHARLES CITY FACTORY HAS HEAVY FIRE LOSS

Charles City, Ia., Oct. 12.—The Hart Parr company, at whose factories here many of the parts for the English tanks and many of the appliances of the new government wooden ships are built, suffered a loss by fire last night estimated at $500,000. The forging and boring department of the shell shop was destroyed. The tank and shop work will not be interrupted, nor will the fire cause any interference with the departments in which shells for the allies have been made, as the flames were confined to one building. The cause of the fire is unknown.

FEDERAL JURY IS QUICKLY AGREED

Daniel W. Wallace Violated Espionage Act in Address Delivered at Davenport.

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 11.—Daniel W. Wallace, head of the League of Humanity, with headquarters in Chicago, has been found guilty in the federal court here of a violation of the espionage act. Wallace was charged with making treasonable utterances in a lecture delivered here July 25 last. He was arrested the next day by government agents.

The jury was out one hour and seven minutes. A motion for a new trial probably will be filed Wednesday.

Wallace was found guilty on two counts of having violated the espionage act of June 15, 1917. One count charged him with attempting to create insubordination among men of conscriptive age in the United States. The second charged him with obstructing recruiting and enlistment in the United States army and navy.

The trial of six other residents of Davenport who were indicted with Wallace starts today.

SLOAN TO DO ITS PART TO LIBERTY BOND ISSUE

Sloan, Ia., Oct. 11.—A mass meeting, which taxed the capacity of the auditorium, was held in the school house last night for the purpose of inaugurating the local Liberty loan campaign. George S. Jeffrey acted as chairman of the meeting and short talks on the needs of the government, and the manner in which the bonds would be offered, were given by Ben Davidson, George M. Evenson, Guy N. Struble, Judge J. L. Kennedy and T. A. Black.

Although no subscriptions were asked for at this meeting, $50,000 worth of bonds were pledged voluntarily. A committee of 12 men was appointed to take active charge of the sale. The committee consists of B. M. Stoddard, George S. Jeffrey, Mayor A. L. Calderhead, Dr. Lee W. Prescott, D. G. Manley, G. B. Wall, John T. Fry, John T. Pope, George Thom, Fred Johnson, I. S. Bondurant and O. L. Linscott.

COMMISSION NEGROES TRAINING AT DES MOINES

Washington, D. C., Oct. 11.—Army officers have gone with commissions to be presented to successful candidates at the negro officers' training camp at Des Moines, Ia., who are completing a four months' course of instruction. The new officers will be assigned to negro units in the regulars, national guard and national army as needed, and it is probable that none will hold higher rank for the present than company commander

The war department has now worked out completely its policy in the mobilization of negro troops and will announce the full plan tomorrow. Officers familiar with its details believe it will provide for efficient use of the troops and prove entirely satisfactory in all sections of the country

THE KELLY TRIAL COST COUNTY HANDSOME SUM

MAKE FORT DES MOINES GREAT HOSPITAL CENTER

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 11.—Consolidation of the third and fourth increments of 40 and 15 per cent, and a request that they not be sent until after October 25, has been made to General Crowder by Camp Dodge officers.

Twenty-five thousand men will be sent to the camp if the recommendation is followed.

Maj. Gen. E. H. Carter, commanding central department, visited Fort Des Moines Sunday and advised the war department that work be started at once if the old fort is to be used as a reconstruction hospital.

If present plans are carried out, the Fort Des Moines base hospital will have a capacity of 1,000 beds. Stables will be renovated to allow quartering of attendants and specialists will be sent here to equip cripples from the European war with artificial limbs and teach men trades so they will not be objects of charity.

GIRLS CHARGE THEY WERE BADLY SLANDERED

Sac City Ia., Oct. 11.—Refusal to permit certain young women to stay at a dance given at the home of John R. Markley, east of Schaller, on the night of June 13, 1917, has led to the filing of eight separate suits for slander in the district court of Sac county with Mr. Markley and his wife, Magdalene Markley, as defendants. The suits are brought by, or in behalf of four young women, namely, Charlotte Rutledge, Lazora Jones, Cora Hazel Merkley and Marjorie Jones, and each petitioner asks for damages in the sum of $10,000 from each of the defendants.

CITY WILL SELL COAL.

Bloomington, Ill., Oct. 13.—The city council today voted to use $1,000 in buying coal and delivering it to persons who have been unable to get it from dealers. Consumers will pay only at actual cost to the city plus delivery charges.

CAPPER WRITES GARFIELD

Topeka, Kan., Oct. 13.—Declaring that concerted action by retail dealers in advancing prices to unreasonable figures, apparently with a determination to ignore federal action is producing a lack of confidence in authority which must inevitably prove disastrous," Governor Capper today sent a letter to Harry A. Garfield, fuel administrator, calling his attention to the "extremely unsatisfactory condition of the retail coal market in the state of Kansas."

"A careful inquiry has developed no justification for the prices now prevailing," writes the governor. "Profiteering, delay on the part of the federal government in giving our people the relief they had expected from a situation which has become intolerable, has created widespread unrest. This condition of mind finds expression in an overwhelming number of letters now coming to my desk in every mail."

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—With threatened coal shortage will be avoided, fuel administration officials said today, by an order just issued, suspending in part provision of a recent priority proclamation directing that all central field coal moving toward lake ports go to the northwest. Ohio operators have been directed to supply enough fuel to meet pressing needs in Ohio and send what is left to the northwest.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 13.—Because of a shortage of coal the Columbus street car system was tied up again this morning for nearly an hour and thousands of people were forced to walk to work.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—Evidence of a general coal shortage is admitted by the geological survey.

"The tremendous increase in manufacturing and transportation activity this year," said a statement issued today, "has created a demand for coal in excess of any in the past."

A serious coal shortage exists in Ohio, fuel administration officials were told by a delegation of consumers who came to Washington to protest against lifting the embargo on coal shipments to Canada.

Mayors of some towns, they said, have seized carloads of coal en route to the lakes and have apportioned it among the inhabitants.

MUNICIPAL BREAD DEPOTS PLANNED

Hoover Prepares for Early Regulation to Make Bakers Be Good.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—Early regulation of the baking industry was promised by Food Administrator Hoover, plans to control bread production and distribution already are under consideration and will be put in operation as soon as bread baking experiments now being conducted in several cities are completed. Municipal bread depots will be provided if it is found that retailers cannot be controlled under a voluntary arrangement.

MILL AUSTRALIAN GRAIN ON COAST; SAVE SHIPS

San Francisco, Oct. 12.—To encourage shipments of Australian wheat to California for re-shipment to the European allies in the form of flour, thus saving bottoms because of the lesser bulk of the finished product, lie behind a reduction in freight rates from San Francisco to gulf ports announced today by the Southern Pacific Railroad company.

This action was taken at the request of the California grain corporation and the United States food administration.

POTTERY WORKERS STRIKE

East Liverpool, Ohio, Oct. 12.—Following the strike of 10,000 general pottery workers in Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Tennessee and Canada, plants which in this district were notified that the supply of natural gas, used for fuel, would be cut off from all industries concerns January 1.

The walkout is the men's answer to the manufacturers' refusal to grant a flat 25 per cent wage increase.

RAILROADS ASK LOAN FROM U.S.?

Rate Increase to Be Sought and Effort May Be Made to Borrow Federal Funds. Discussion Indicates.

Washington D C, Oct 13 Reports that the railroads are considering informally asking the government to help them in some way to obtain money with which to maintain and enlarge their present plants and equipment to enable them to cope with the high tide of traffic are regarded by officials here as forecasting a concerted move soon toward that end

What form this move will assume apparently has not yet been decided by the roads themselves It is reported that they have under consideration several courses. One possible method is renewed petition for a general increase in freight rates Another is to request the government to lend the railroad money on railroad securities For this, however special legislation would be necessary Other plans, details of which have not been revealed, are said to be under consideration.

Railroads at present are earning very nearly as much as last year which marked the high tide But within the last two months operating expenses have shown increase said to be out of all proportion to the increase in gross receipts Railway executives say that as the government has a practical monopoly through Liberty bond issues of the investment funds of the country, they have found it almost impossible to obtain funds

New York Oct 13 Coincidental with the announcement yesterday that passenger trainmen on western railways would shortly present demands for increased wages, executives of eastern trunk lines arranged to meet in New York today and discuss plans for making another plea to the Interstate Commerce commission for higher freight rates. The new demands of the railway brotherhoods for more pay will be a factor in the road's petition, it was said.

The eastern railroads hope, it is said, that the western and southern roads will also renew pleas for higher rates. Ordinarily, applications for rate increases are presented separately by the three districts, but in the last case all roads joined in the petition for an increase of 15 per cent in freight rates. The Interstate Commerce commission, in its finding last June, refused the increase asked, but granted increases of approximately 5 per cent of the gross revenue of the carriers.

FARMERS HOARD SPUDS; WARNED TO DISGORGE

Chicago, Oct. 12.—The farmer, immune to the anti-hoarding law, is hoarding his potatoes, according to Harry A. Wheeler food director of Illinois, under Mr Hoover

Mr. Wheeler issued a warning that, as the crop was the greatest on record, not mentioning the unrecorded crops of tens of thousands of gardens, the farmers were riding to a fall. He said that when the hoard began to disgorge it would all come at once, unless the hoarding was stopped, and prices would drop to zero. He suggested that the farmer would benefit by allowing the movement to follow its normal course.

STUDENTS ASK PROFESSOR BE GIVEN BACK PLACE

New York, Oct. 13.—Trustees and faculty of Columbia university were petitioned to effect a readjustment of the controversy which will result in Prof. Chas. A. Beard resuming his services as member of the faculty at a meeting of 700 underclass men of the college today.

Professor Beard resigned Monday.

The trustees last week declared vacant professorships held by James Cattell and Henry W. L. Dana because of their pacifist activities.

AIRPLANE POOL APPROVED.

Washington, Oct. 12.—Legal approval has been given the agreement between the air craft production board and the Airplane Manufacturers' association, clearing away a possible serious obstacle to the government's $640,000,000 aircraft program. Attorney General Gregory has held that the patent pooling plan to prevent patent litigation does not violate the Sherman anti-trust law.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 12.—Attorneys for Adolph Germer, socialist leader of Chicago, and 11 other persons charged with conspiracy against the selective draft law, today opened the defense at the trial in United States district court here.

The defense hopes to submit evidence to sustain its contention that the defendants did not effect a conspiracy to oppose the draft and that no treasonable or disloyal literature was circulated by them

HUNDREDS OF RED CROSS WORKERS NEEDED SOON

Petrograd, Oct 12.—General Jancovoso. Rumanian war minister, called today on the American ambassador, David R. Francis, and explained the situation in Rumania, thanking him for American aid.

"One American Red Cross mission has arrived at our front, but that is only a small part of what we need. There is little cholera or other disease among our armies and people now, but spring may bring more. Hundreds of American relief workers will be needed them. We are obtaining medicines from Japan, but lack funds which American could supply"

GIBBONS WRITES WILSON ABOUT HIS NEW PLACE

Washington, D. C., Oct. 12.—Cardinal Gibbons wrote President Wilson in a letter made public here today, that he is trying to "pursuade all Americans that they can do the greatest good to themselves and their country by cheerful preformance of their duty as it is pointed out to them by lawfully constituted authority," The letter was written on the occasion of the recent formation of the League for National Unity, of which Cardinal Gibbons is honorary chairman.

President Wilson in reply thanked the cardinal for accepting the chairmanship of the league.

NEW ARMY OFFICERS WILL BE FOOT DOCTORS

Fort Snelling, Minn., Oct. 12.—In accordance with orders from the war department, students and officers of all training camps will be given instruction in shoe fitting, the care of the feet and minor orthopedic treatment, it was announced today. Hereafter, no man will be discharged from the army because of foot ailments, until orthopedic treatment has been given, the order recites.

IN TRAINING 431,180 MEN.

Washington, Oct. 12.—The number of men in America's new national army either actually under training or ordered to the 16 cantonments throughout the country totals 431,180.

In making public the figures Secretary Baker said that the shipments of clothing to the camps is keeping pace with the arrival of the new troops. Up to October 2, the day before the second increment of draft men was ordered out, nearly 13,000,000 articles of wearing apparel and sleeping equipment had been sent to the cantonments and shipments are being made aidly.

SNOW FALLS IN OHIO.

Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 12.—A fall of snow is in progress today in northwestern Ohio and northeastern Indiana. Rain, which fell throughout the night, turned into snow early this morning, and in an hour the ground was covered with a coat of white. Fort Wayne and Sandusky also reported snow.

GERMAN MUTINY SAVES RUSSIANS

Dissatisfaction, Said to Have Begun Eight Months Ago, Prevents Use of Fleet.

London, Oct 12. The inactivity of the German fleet in the Baltic sea recently, when there were obvious opportunities for attacking Russia, according to a dispatch to the Daily Chronicle from Amsterdam, was due to the mutinous outbreak in the German navy The outbreak affected at least six important units of the fleet, putting them out of action and causing the authorities to doubt discipline of the crews of the other ships. It was impossible, the dispatch adds, to take stern measures on a large scale against the offenders, because that would have increased the evil.

DISCONTENT BEGAN LAST YEAR.

Amsterdam Oct 11 According to some reports here the discontent in the German navy began eight months ago and the men of the fleet had reached such a nervous state, owing to the prolonged high tension, that only a spark was needed to cause an explosion on board the warships involved It is said large numbers of pamphlets were found dealing with the cause of the war and asking why Germany became the most hated nation in the world Others dilated on the vile influence of junker dom and the big manufacturing interests and purported to give the truth about "the man behind the war"

Fairly reliable accounts put the number of men condemned to penal servitude at 30, whose sentences range from five to 15 years, while 80 to 100 were given lighter sentences.

MEDALS GIVEN FOR VANDALISM

German Soldier Writes of Difficulties of Taking Wedding Presents From French Women.

By United Press.

With the French Army in the Field, Oct 12—Documents recently taken from German prisoners indicate that the famous iron cross, over 2,000,000 of which have been distributed by the kaiser since the beginning of the war, is given now not only for acts of bravery but also for exceptional ability in destroying French villages, homes and farms.

In a letter from a German landwehr, Fred Saer, to another German soldier named Silkenhause, of the Fifty-ninth regiment, published today, Saer speaks of getting one of the coveted prizes for having taken from an aged French woman her household belongings. He was certain he would get the reward.

The letter also said.

"I am attached to the ammunition branch of the army. We take all iron, lead, copper, cork, oils, etc., that we find in the homes of the French We take chandeliers and kitchen utensils. Everything is assembled here and sent into Germany. Often it is very difficult to have to take from married women their wedding presents, but the necessities of war force us."

LACK OF DISCIPLINE STILL WEAKENS RUSS

Evil Influences Busy But Petrograd Says Fraternizing Attempts Are Repelled.

Petrograd, Oct. 12.—Austro-German troops are renewing their attempts to fraternize with the Russians, but so far every effort has met with failure, according to a statement issued by the Russian war office based on reports from the front. The general situation is quiet, although some of the armies as well as some of the Cossack units, still act with some suspicion toward the commanding staff. The question of peace is said to agitate the great mass of the Russian soldiers.

At some places there is agitation against capital punishment, but at the same time demands are made that punishment in the rear of the fighting front be enforced with greater strictness. The cases where orders were discussed or not carried out are comparatively rare, the soldiers who refuse to obey orders usually being brought to trial.

The war officer announces with regret that the evil influence of the gendarmes and police still asserts itself. So far no measures have been taken to isolate these elements. Complaints of want of discipline among new recruits are still numerous.

FINDS CAMPAIGN TO DISCREDIT RED CROSS

Washington, D. C., Oct. 12.—Declaring that efforts to disparage the work of the American Red Cross are made in various sections of the country as part of an anti-patriotic propaganda Harvey D. Wilson, general manager, today telegraphed all Red Cross division managers to begin nationwide investigation to trace the movement to its course and to combat it.

"It is evident that rumors, innuendos, critical of and calculated to embarrass the Red Cross are being industrially circulated as part of an anti-patriotic propaganda," the telegram reads.

EXPECT OFFER TO QUIT ALSACE LORRAINE SOON

London Believes Any Proposition, Short of Abdication of Hohenzollerns, May Be Made Soon.

TEUTON PEOPLE PREPARED

Proposal to Restore Conquered Provinces to France Intended to Sway U. S. Sentiment and Save Scepter.

By United Press.

London, Oct 13 Following the failure of the Germans to sow discord among the allies as to Alsace-Lorraine, there was speculation in official circles this afternoon as to the character of Germany's next move toward peace. The general belief was that a sweeping offer to evacuate Belgium and other German occupied territory, was not at all unlikely Such a policy, it was said, would likely be relied upon to influence American public opinion.

Any such scheme is believed doomed in advance, so far as its effect here is concerned, because the war issues have gone far beyond the Belgium question. The indications of German desperation, in a military sense, are such that almost any move, short of the kaiser's voluntary retirement, would not come as a great surprise.

By J. W. T. MASON.
Written for the United Press.

New York, Oct. 13.—The kaiser's government is continuing the pursuit of peace by attempting to create discord among the allies about the future status of Alsace-Lorraine and at the same time is sounding the German people as to their sentiment on the subject. The kaiser is telling his people that all the allies are now contending for is restitution to France of Alsace-Lorraine. He is seeking to lead his people to believe that after all it might be better in the end to surrender that territory, if by so doing peace could be restored

However, the main question is not one of territory, but that of continuing the kaiser in power It is felt by the allied powers that, even though Alsace Lorraine should be surrendered, along with other German occupied territory, a peace could not be declared by the allies, for they would eventually have to fight another war with the Hohenzollerns.

SWEDES EXPECT GERMAN FOODS

Grain, Sugar and Potatoes to Be Sought—Socialists Excluded in Forming New Cabinet.

London, Oct 13.—M. Widen, who has been asked by King Gustave, of Sweden, to form a cabinet, will attempt to construct a ministry solely of liberals, says the Stockholm correspondent of the Daily Mail. Hjalmar Branting and his associates in the socialist party will be excluded by M. Widen, who is a moderate liberal. It is the correspondent's opinion that M. Branting will not be sorry to be excluded, as popular discontent is likely to increase during the winter.

As to the effect of the American blockade, the correspondent says the manner in which the policy of the United States is to be answered is indicated by the government's anncuncement that Germany will supply to Sweden grain, potatoes and sugar, which the allies have refused. This announcement, if realized, will naturally stimulate the pro-German trend of public opinion developed by the Washington news of the last few days, the dispatch says.

It says that particular resentment has been provoked in the press by the statement that the Swedish delegates to the United States had suppressed the facts in relation to Sweden's exportation of iron ore to Germany.

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS FIGHT MILITARY DRILL

Six Hundred Strike and 4,000 Others in New York Plan to Follow.

New York, Oct. 13.—An increase this year of from 40 to 80 minutes in the school day here for military training, was given as the cause of a strike today of a number of high school students.

Miss Anna Lederer, as head of a students' committee, told an aldermanic committee on public welfare that 600 students had struck and that 4,000 would follow unless military training were discontinued.

REID-MOORE CONTROL ROCK ISLAND AGAIN

Chicago, Oct. 12.—The Reid-Moore interests wrested control of the board of directors of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad from Nathan Amster, of Boston who, as spokesman of a stockholders' committee at a previous meeting had named himself chairman of the executive committee of the road.

Nine of the 13 directors elected today were Reid-Moore men, the other four including Amster, were with him as insurgeants.

SIR WALLACE GRAHAM DIES.

Real Man

By Walter J. Delaney

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

There were eight in the group—frowsy, hard-looking fellows, shuffling in gait, tattered as to attire, unshaven and not even clean. One was building a fire, six of his companions were rifling their pockets, producing stolen eggs and onions and slices of bread, cake fragments, in short, the general variety of food likely to be given at the kitchen door to begging tramps.

This, in fact, they were, even the man who lay back where a heap of old railroad ties had been piled so as to form a sort of shelter. He half lifted on one arm, his haggard face showing illness and pain.

"The medicine, boys!" he cried out eagerly.

Each one of the group hung his head. The sick man gulped. He said huskily:

"No money, eh? Well, I know you did your best. I guess you had better g[illegible] a hospital."

"[illegible] Busy Ben to report yet," answered the cook of the group. "It's the one that coaxes the coin out of people. Ah there he is now."

A stalwart fellow with a limping foot came through the woodland path to the tramp camp, situated exactly on the county line for reasons prudential.

"Any coin, partner?" piped the cook.

"Sure" retorted the new-comer, and rather gruffly, it seemed. "Here's your medicine, Bartley," and he handed the invalid a bottle, which the latter seized joyously.

"Oh you've got it, have you?" he cried. "Now, I'll get well. How did you come across it?"

"Bought it, of course."

"Where did you get the money?"

"Ask me no questions and I'll tell you no lies. The good people—baugh! All of them thought I was lying when I told them I had a sick partner. I offered to work for the town druggist a whole day if he'd fill the prescription and he booted me out into the street. Charity—but I got it."

Busy Ben was strangely mute after that. He seemed pre-occupied and disturbed. One of the men had brought a chicken. This with the other food made a good meal. They boiled the eggs in an old kettle, made coffee in the same receptacle and then the group generally settled down to the tramp's paradise—sleep.

Only Busy Ben, thoughtfully smoking his stump of a pipe, sat up near the blazing fire, ever and anon edging closer to the shelter where sick John Bartley lay. Tenderly he spoke:

"Taken a dose yet?"

"Two of them. Didn't you notice me eat? Why, I feel like a new man already! There was never such a knocker for chills and fever like that blessed prescription. I'll be afoot inside of two days. Partner, I'll hope to do as much for you some day."

Busy Ben only stared stonily. His soul was chock full of sentiment just now, but he strove hard to conceal it. Then the grateful eyes beaming upon him unlocked the door of his mind. He glanced sharply at his snoring compatriots. Then he leaned towards the invalid.

"Bartley, I want to tell you something. I stole that money."

The sick man looked perturbed. He was living a hard life, but he had once been a respectable citizen and shame was not yet dead within him. He was silent, but his lips twitched.

"I had to do it," continued Ben, as hardly as he could. "Everybody turned me down. I was getting desperate, for I knew that the medicine maybe meant life or death to you. I was sitting resting behind a hedge when I heard voices. Beyond it was a woman and a child, a little girl about eight years old. They had just come out of an old hut. You know the big wind we had last night? Well, it had blown down half of the old ruin. It seemed the mother and child had ventured into the wreck to see if they could gather up some of their belongings. They carried a lot of clothes, going to some new place of refuge. The little one, it seemed, had tried to find her savings bank, but the bureau where it was lay under a heap of wreckage. 'We'll come again tomorrow and look for it,' the mother promised. Then they went away.

"And then—"

"I got the money," spoke Ben in a low, subdued tone, shrugging his shoulders as if to cast off unpleasant thoughts. "There was seventy-two cents in the little bank. I took fifty cents, the price of the medicine."

"Some day—" began Bartley in a tone of emotion.

"Yes," nodded Ben, "some day you and I must make up the cents in dollars, if we're real men." Then he walked away.

Imagination or reality, the medicine cured John Bartley, but not in two days, nor in six. It was a full week before he could get well about. Then he made urgent inquiries of Ben as to the location of the blown-down house and the woman and the girl.

It was nearly noon when he located the wrecked hut. Near to it under a set of tarpaulins was a lot of new building material. Bending over a bed of flowers was a little girl. "The one that Ben robbed!" muttered Bartley hoarsely.

"Heaven bless her forevermore!" and the tears stood in his eyes. Then he approached the child. She looked up with fearless, friendly eyes. She picked a lovely rose and tendered it to him.

"I'm sort of keeping the flowers all right till we get the new house up," she said. "I'm afraid it will be a long time, though," she added.

"How is that?" inquired Bartley.

"Why, under those covers yonder is a patent bungalow mamma bought. Oh, we were to have such a fine house! It's all paid for, but the bank mamma had the rest of her money in to pay for the building of the house has failed. So mamma has to put me with Aunt Nellie, who is poor, and mamma is out nursing. But maybe some day we can earn enough to put up the house."

"Boys," spoke John Bartley to his fellow tramps that night, "among us are some workers, surely. I was once an architect. Will you help me build the house I have told you about?"

Millville witnessed a marvel that week. Nine earnest, industrious tramps with alacrity and vigor followed the directions of Architect Bartley. Little Floribel Moore was on hand most of the time, half comprehending the unique situation.

Mrs. Moore was engaged in nursing twenty miles away. She stood spellbound as she viewed the bungalow which unexpected hands had constructed. The tramps had disappeared, but two days later little Floribel ran up to Bartley in the street and ran towards him, pulling her mother after her.

"Mamma, this is the man who showed the others what to do and told me such pretty stories."

"You see, we heard of your misfortune," lamely explained Bartley, "and thought we'd surprise you," and evaded the point direct, but it was sure to come out some time.

Bartley's fellow migrators went on to pastures new. Bartley himself remained in Millville. A village contractor had employed him gladly when he learned of his former experience as an architect. Within a month few would have recognized the well-dressed, businesslike new-time "Mr." Bartley as the old-time fellow companion of uncouth knights of the road.

Mrs. Moore, installed in her pretty new home, was glad to welcome him as an occasional visitor. Little Floribel doated upon him. One evening as mother and child were in the room where Bartley was their guest, the little one chanced to take her savings bank from the mantel to inspect its contents.

"Oh, mamma, look!" cried Floribel suddenly "who put in all of the bright new pennies?"

The "bright new pennies" were gold pieces. At last John Bartley had been able to keep his vow. For each penny taken by Busy Ben he had substituted a gold dollar. He flushed with embarrassment. The searching eye of the widow scanned him and then, as Floribel was busied over the counting of her treasure, she asked softly:

"What does this mean?"

For the first time the widow knew all of the truth. Into her beautiful eyes came pity, sympathy and love, for those two, "just plain folks," had been coming closer and closer to one another during the weeks of their growing friendship, and fate destined that their lonely lives should be united.

Exactly.

A couple of country cousins on a visit to Glasgow halted in front of a brass plate fixed on the front of a house, whereon was inscribed in bold characters the word "Chiropodist."

"Chirrupodist!" remarked one of them, perplexedly. "What's that?"

"Why," replied his companion, "a chirrupodist is a chap that teaches canaries to whistle."—London Tit-Bits.

IOWA STATE COLLEGE IN WAR TIMES

By E. W. Stanton, Acting President.

Iowa State college is continuing all its regular courses of study and adding additional work in these days of war. On Nov. 12th special sections for students of agriculture, taking up four year college work in either the freshman or sophomore classes, will be organized for the boys who have to stay on the farm until farm work is over. These courses will be intensified and will enable the student to complete the essential and sequential work of the first semester so that he can either go on with the regular work of the second semester or take a second intensified course that will finish March 25th in time for him to return to the farm.

The establishment of these sections is conditioned upon the number of applications being sufficient to warrant the necessary expense. There is little doubt, however, of this number being reached. Sections will be organized in the Engineering, Home Economics and Industrial Science divisions upon similar conditions. Students who expect to take advantage of this offer should make application to Herman Knapp, Registrar, on or before Nov. 1, in order that definite information may be sent them as to whether such courses will be established. Extra sections in the two-year non-collegiate agricultural work will be formed at the same time as those in the four year courses.

The offering of these additional courses is but one evidence out of many that the Iowa State college, in these days of struggle and turmoil, is devoting all the resources at its command to the service of the state and nation. In every one of the five major lines,—Engineering, Agriculture, Home Economics, Industrial Science and Veterinary Medicine,—special work is being carried on to meet the demand which the need of the hour has created.

Never before has there been greater inducement for young men and women to secure a college training than now. The war has greatly increased the demand for educated leadership in every field of endeavor,—agriculture, engineering, general industry, business, schools, public service, home, army and navy. In all of these the call is urgent for those who have had preparation to direct and lead The organization of the nation's great war machine is almost wholly in the hands of men and women of college education. The greatest present shortage of men is in the class of those technically trained for the larger tasks This shortage will grow. To meet it, our colleges must furnish to the world a steady and undiminished stream of skilled workers and capable doers.

For a time after the war there will be an equal if not greater demand for trained young men and women. In our laboratories and classrooms of today we are preparing those, who, tomorrow will be engaged in the great work of reconstructing our industrial life.

It has always been the dominating idea of the college to render the most efficient service,—service to the student in giving him the best possible industrial education; service to the people of the state in carrying to them the latest and the best that science has developed in our laboratories and experimental fields. In these days of war we pledge ourselves with increased energy to the tasks that have been assigned us.

The increase in value of Iowa farm land in the last ten years is greater than the increase in value of all the farm land in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Arkansas, Louisiana and Oregon combined.

First, in the number of automobiles per capita (there is one automobile for every nine persons living in the country, and one for every thirteen persons living in the cities and incorporated towns).

Not a Bit of Use.

There was some speculation as to what use the instrument would benefit the old gentleman or not. One was holding the ear trumpet while another was explaining its use and showing old Mr. Shortcash how to hold it to his ear.

No solicitude to be overheard. Presently he turned for an opportunity to reach Mr. Shortcash's ear and, speaking very distinctly into the trumpet, said:

"Not one cent paid me that five dollars you owe me, yet Mr. Shortcash."

But the old gentleman put the instrument down with disappointment on his face, and they could see it was a failure even before he had time to say:

"That thing's not a bit of use to me."

And he sighed, but his sigh was not so deep as that which came from Binks.

Easily Explained.

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XVII.—(CONTINUED)

His eyes were shining, and the prince, looking at him, felt himself shaken by a strange emotion. But across Pachmann's lips flitted an ironical smile, as of one who disdained heroics.

"For the decision as to La Liberte," he said, "I assume full responsibility. It was I who suggested it; it was I who showed that no other proof could be conclusive; it was I who arranged for it. I have no regrets. You have your part of the bargain accomplished, Mr. Vard," he added. "His highness and myself are here to accomplish ours. We are ready to discuss the details of the treaty."

"I think that first, perhaps, I should look at your credentials," Vard suggested.

"That is just," and Pachmann, getting out his pocketbook, took from it the envelope sealed with the black seal, and handed it to Vard.

Vard took it, glanced at the seal, and hesitated, just as the captain of the Ottilie had done.

"I am to open it?" he asked.

Pachmann nodded.

"It contains my credentials," he said.

A careful inspection of the seal would have disclosed the fact that the envelope had already been opened once—perhaps more than once—but Vard made no such inspection. Instead, he broke the seal with nervous fingers, and drew out the stiff sheet blazing with the royal insignia. This is the English of what he read:

> Herewith do I grant to the bearer of this paper, Admiral H. Pachmann, power extraordinary as my representative, to enter into agreements, to make treaties, and to sign the same; and I do further declare that I shall consider myself bound by such agreements and signatures as though I myself had made them and, finally, I command all members of my family, all officers of my army and navy, all members of my diplomatic corps and all good Germans generally to yield to him the same obedience they would yield to me, all this for the good of my empire.
> (Signed) William, R. I.
> Wilhelmshohe, September 21, 1911.

Vard re-read this extraordinary paper, then replaced it in its envelope and silently returned it to its owner. Again that ironical smile flashed across Pachmann's lips, as he restored it to his pocketbook.

"You find it ample, do you not?" he asked.

Vard nodded, and glanced curiously at the prince, wondering if that young man was aware of the exact wording of this remarkable document, especially of the clause, "all members of my family."

"And now," proceeded Pachmann, adjusting himself to an easier posture, "we shall be glad to hear the further details of your proposal."

Vard paused for a moment to collect his thoughts.

"There is one thing I would understand first," he said. "From that paper, I infer that the emperor alone is concerned in this—that his cabinet is not aware of it."

"No member of the cabinet except one—whom I will not name," assented Pachmann. "I will not conceal from you that the emperor is desirous of reaping for himself the full glory of this achievement. He realizes that the man who brings about world peace will be the most famous man in history. He has his ambitions, as you doubtless know."

"Yes, I have heard so," said Vard, with an ironic smile. "Well, let him have the glory—I do not object; besides, he will deserve it. And now for my proposal. It is this: the nations of the world, with Germany and Russia as the first signatories, shall enter into a treaty providing for the immediate disbanding of their armies, dismantling of their forts, and disintegrating of their fleets. Only such troops shall be retained as are needed to provide garrisons for such outposts as may be necessary to protect the Christian world from the incursion of barbarous or nomadic tribes, and only such warships as are needed to assist in this work. The exact number each nation shall maintain will be decided by a general court of adjudication, and all such troops and warships shall be in common; and all expenditures for what are usually known as military purposes shall be in common, apportioned by the same court of adjudication among the nations which are party to the agreement. Under no circumstances may any nation maintain any force privately or for its own use."

"I am interested to know," put in Pachmann, smoothly, "in what manner you propose to secure the consent of the various nations to this scheme. The smaller ones will doubtless be glad to fall into line; but you surely do not expect England and France, for example, to agree merely because we ask it!"

"To those who do not consent," Vard answered calmly, "we will give a demonstration of the necessity for doing so."

"Some such demonstration as that of Monday?"

"Yes — greater ones, if need be."

Pachman considered this thoughtfully.

"It might do," he said, at last. "A few such demonstrations would no doubt be convincing. Yet there might be one or two which would be obdurate."

"I think, in the end, we can convince them."

"You will go to any lengths to do so?"

"To any necessary lengths."

Pachmann nodded.

"I was desirous of getting a clear expression from you upon that point," he said. "Pray continue."

"I do not believe there will be many such nations," Vard went on. "You have spoken of France and England. I believe France will consent, for she is a nation of idealists. I should have chosen her to lead the movement, but for the fact that her army and navy are inferior, to yours, and so she might seem to be acting from fear or from self interest. Should you refuse—should we be unable to agree—it will be to France I shall go next. As for England, she also fears you—she will be glad to escape from the burden of her armaments and from the shadow of your great power. In fact all nations in whose governments the people have a voice will be eager for disarmament. And the people everywhere must be allowed to speak. If those in power seek to crush them, to restrain them, we must assist them to throw off the yoke of tyranny and decide for themselves."

"Ah," said Pachmann, very quietly. "Socialism—I see!"

"The rule of the people," said Vard, calmly. "The freedom of the people—call it what you will. That is what I labor for. The people of each nation must be free to choose by whom and in what manner they will be governed. That evolution will, of course, take many years; but it must not be cramped or retarded. At the very outset, it will make two considerable changes in the map of Europe. Poland will be reconstituted and Alsace-Lorraine restored to France."

Pachmann started violently, and a wave of angry red swept over his face.

"Impossible!" he cried. "Impossible! To that we can never consent!"

Vard smiled at his emotion.

"Why not?" he asked, ironically.

"Because," shouted Pachmann, "Elsass and Lorraine are German—they were stolen from Germany by France two centuries ago."

"They were not German—they were independent states; and they are not German now. They are French. However, I am quite willing to leave the final decision to the people of those provinces. You cannot object to that!"

Pachmann lifted his cigar from one corner of his mouth to the other. His face was livid.

"Beware that you do not attempt too much, my dear sir," he said, and there was in his voice a covert threat not to be disguised. "I warn you. But, in this connection, some other questions occur to me. What of Ireland?"

"The Irish shall decide."

"South Africa?"

"Most of it belongs to the Boers."

"That, at least, is a grain of comfort. But India, Egypt?"

"I cannot answer that. India and Egypt must be made the subjects of careful study and the government given them which will be best for their peoples, and which will not drain them of their wealth, as England does. There will be many such problems, and the best minds of the world must study them. My answers to your questions are but suggestions. All such problems must be settled by an international court, which shall proceed upon the theory that all peoples capable of self government shall have absolute freedom, and all other peoples shall be made capable of governing themselves as rapidly as possible. Each peoples shall be free to decide for itself as to it form of government, but shall be required to pledge itself to the principle of universal peace. That pledge will be necessary only at first—after 50 years of peace, no nation will ever think of war! I know that, for a generation or two, there will be difficulties. We have grown suspicious of each other: we have become hardened by hatred and injustice. But time will change all that. Let us lay down our arms, disband our armies, restore what we have stolen, and, instead of hatred, we shall find love in our hearts. Instead of oppression, we shall have justice, tempered with mercy. Each man will have his work to do, and none who works will go hungry; and we will end by becoming citizens, not of Germany, France or of any other country, but of the world! I tell you, sir, that our great-grandchildren, looking back at us from a world at peace and united in a brotherhood, will wonder at us—we shall seem to them blind savages, murderers, lunatics!"

It was evident enough that the prince was moved. He was young, he had always been something of a dreamer. Rigid training at his father's hands had gone far to dispel the dreams, but they were not quite rooted out. Now, at the words of this supreme idealist, this inspired dreamer, they revived again. He sat regarding the speaker with misty eyes, his mouth a little open, his hands gripped in front of him. Pachmann, glancing at him, passed his hands before his lips to wipe away a sneer.

"All most interesting," commented the admiral, in his ironical voice. "I think that we understand your proposal fully. There is only one point upon which you have not made yourself quite clear. Should we be unable to agree, what will be your next step?"

"I thought I had already told you," answered Vard, impatiently. "Should we disagree, I shall offer France the same opportunity which I now offer Germany."

"You will find France skeptical."

"Then I shall offer her the same proof I offered you. That will be best, will it not?" and Vard looked straight into Pachmann's eyes.

Pachmann sprang from his chair, his mouth working, his eyes suffused.

"You will destroy one of our ships?" he demanded, his voice hoarse.

"A ship or a fort—it shall be for France to choose."

Pachmann's fingers were twitching visibly to be at the other's throat. But by a mighty effort he controlled himself, flung himself again into his chair and poured himself out a glass of brandy from the bottle at his elbow.

"Will you drink?" he asked over his shoulder.

"No, thank you," answered Vard.

The prince sat without moving, still staring at the inventor. Meeting his eyes, Vard smiled slightly.

Pachmann set down his glass, and turned back to them.

"I must ask you to pardon me," he said. "I lost my self control—a thing I do not often do—but your suggestions seemed to me insupportable. However, I can perceive that there is another side to them. I think we understand your proposal now, most thoroughly. There are certain details which the prince and I must discuss together, before we can submit an answer. In a matter of such moment, we must proceed with the greatest care. This is Thursday. I think we can be ready by Saturday evening."

"Very well," agreed Vard, rising. "The same hour, in this room?"

"If that pleases you."

"It does."

He bowed coldly to Pachmann; then, with a sudden gesture, held out his hand to the prince. But Pachmann interposed before the prince could take it.

"That I cannot permit," he said grimly, and he opened the door.

A barefooted sailor, clad in white duck, standing on the deck outside, saluted. Pachmann stood for a moment staring after Vard's retreating figure; then he turned back into the room. The Prince was helping himself to a drink, and Pachmann joined him.

"Yes," he said, "this is what we need, after all that raving."

"Would you call it that?" asked the prince.

"Raving? Yes, it was precisely that! The man is mad, my prince; absolutely mad. No one but a madman would speak as he does—of citizens of the world, the brotherhood of man, and all that folly!"

The prince drained his glass.

"I fear you are right," he said, as he set it down. "Yes, I fear you are right, and that it is only folly!"

"There is one thing you must not forget," added Pachman, his hand on the door; "since he is mad, it is as a madman he must be treated!" and he led the way out upon the deck.

Somewhere in the dim hours of the night, Dan Webster was awakened by a glare of light in his eyes. He opened them to find that the electric lamp beside the was stand was burning. Peering over the edge of his berth, he beheld a curious sight. Chevrial was sitting on his berth, half undressed, examining tenderly one of his toes, and swearing softly to himself. He glanced up, met Dan's astonished eyes, and laughed.

"Man is a ridiculous animal," he said. "The feet with which he has been provided are absurd—no doubt because they were really intended to be hands. They are too sensitive, too undefended. Blundering around here in the darkness, I have injured one of my toes, and it hurst devilishly. Pardon for awaking you, my friend. Good night!"

He turned off the light, and Dan lay back upon his pillow, with strange thoughts whirling in his head.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE SUBSTITUTE SENTRY.

Admiral Pachmann turned into his berth, that night, extremely well satisfied with himself, for he was convinced that the cards were in his hands and the game as good as won. And what a game! For his king, world empire; for himself—but the admiral did not permit himself to name the reward. He knew well that he would not be forgotten when the moment came for the distribution of honors. Was not the whole plan his? Had he not worked it out to its minutest detail? Had he not carried it through? And how adroitly, how triumphantly! Even the emperor would have to acknowledge that!

Let us do the admiral justice; he loved his country, he was ready at any moment to lay down his life for her, he would have labored just as earnestly without hope of other reward than the sight of her aggrandisement; but, just the same, when the honors came, he was not one to refuse them! World empire would mean governorships, suzerainties * * *

He was lying in his berth next morning, half dozing, smiling to himself as all this passed before his mind in august and glittering procession, when there came a tap at the door. He got up, opened it, and a sealed note was handed in. A glance at the other berth showed that the prince had already risen. Pachman tore open the note and read its contents with some astonishment. It was from the captain, and asked for an immediate conference on a matter of great importance.

Pachmann dressed hastily, and, as he did so, considered whether he should hunt up the prince and summon him, also, to this conference. He decided against it. He foresaw that in this affair there would be many things which it would be unwise for the prince to know—he had sat staring like an idiot, last night, while the mad Pole raved about love and mercy and universal brotherhood; he was too young, too easily impressed, too soft of heart. He had agreed that victory must be won at any price, but Pachmann very well knew that he had no idea of how terrible that price was almost certain to be. No; the prince must be kept as much as possible on the borders of this affair! So, having finished dressing, the admiral went forward alone to the captain's cabin.

He found the captain sitting at his desk, and his face was so grave that it gave Pachmann a little start.

He rose and greeted the admiral, and then glanced over the latter's shoulder, as though expecting to see some one else.

"You did not bring the prince?" he asked.

"Do you think it necessary?" retorted Pachmann, tartly.

Hausmann hesitated.

"I am not, of course, aware of your relative position in this affair," he said finally.

HOW TO DISPLAY FLAG TOLD BY GENERAL M

Washington, D. C.—Warning against desecration of the American flag by enemy aliens and an order for summary arrest and punishment have been issued by Attorney General ory and is in the hands of United attorneys throughout the country.

"An alien enemy tearing down, mutilating, abusing or desecrating United States flag in any way," the order, "will be regarded as a ger to the public peace and subject will be subject to summary arrest punishment."

In this connection Adjutant General McCain has issued a pamphlet devoted to the traditions and uses of the and Stripes for the information general public.

There is neither federal law nor for the manner in which the civil lation displays hangs or exhibits flag. General McCain pointed out rules as there are apply only to army and navy.

"The only national laws governing the use of the flag," "are those providing that no mark can be registered using the coat of arms of other insignia of United States or any simulation of and providing penalties for misuse the emblem 'within the District Columbia'." There are, however, laws governing the use or abuse of flag.

The attorney general's order has authority from section 12 of President Wilson's proclamation of April 6 concerning the activities and apprehension of enemy aliens.

"In the army," said General McCain, "it is the practice each day regardless of weather, to hoist the flag briskly at sunrise and lower it slowly and ceremoniously at sunset, indicating the commencement and cessation of the activities of the day.

"It is displayed at half mast on Memorial day, May 30, until noon, then at full mast from noon until sunset. This also is done on other days ordered by army authorities from time to time. The flag is always hoisted to full mast before being lowered to half mast.

General McCain recommends that the flag should never be used except on the flag pole. For purposes of decoration he recommends bunting, but never the flag.

"If you must use it for decorating for purposes other than on a pole," said General McCain, "it should always be hung flat, with the union to the north or east. However, it should not be displayed horizontally or laid flat.

"Under no circumstances should it be hung where it will be contaminated, or be draped over chairs or benches, or any object or emblem of any kind should be placed above or upon it.

"There is no objection to flying the flag at night on civilian property, but it is not done for advertising purposes.

"The flag is generally displayed on Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays, Mothers' day, Memorial day, Flag day and Independence day.

"Where several flags of emblems are displayed, the American flag should be in the center at the top. In any parade the flag should have the place of honor.

"The flag should never be displayed with the union down except as a signal of distress at sea.

"Old or worn flags should not be used ever. They should be burned, privately without irreverence or disrespect.

"These views are merely suggestive and not authoritative."

WHAT PART WILL WOMEN OF U. S. PLAY IN THE WAR?

Agnes Repplier answers this question in the Woman's Home Companion when she says:

"And women? American women. They have a big and hard part to play in the nation's struggle for right. Whatever may have been their sentiments before a state of war was declared, honor and honesty now demand unswerving allegiance to their country. The eight leading colleges for women who have pledged their loyal services to the administration, blazed a trail which we may wisely follow. No one can accuse the heads of these colleges, or their faculties, of harboring the 'military spirit.' On the contrary, it was well known that some of them were earnest advocates of peace. The document which they endorsed, and sent to Mr. Wilson breathed a spirit of integrity as well as of courage and devotion.

"Although we believe that the settlement of international difficulties by war is fundamentally wrong, we recognize that in a world crisis such as this it may become our highest duty to defend by force the principles upon which Christian civilization is founded. Any service which we can render, and so far as we can speak for them) any service which the thousands of trained women whom we have sent out from our colleges can render, we here place at the disposal of our country."

The Lieutenant.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

It has been said that the present conflict is a lieutenant's war, and, therefore, in the British forces the platoon leaders are selected for the whole army for their intelligence, courage and ability to lead men, and are not only taught to fill any one of the various positions in the line of work, but they must also possess the born gift of teaching others.

Each lieutenant is required to train a little band of followers when in camp, care for their bodily comforts in the field and to lead them in battle. He is taught father and master to his men.

Though there has never been a war in which organizations and complete scientific equipment have played such a tremendous part, yet, at the same time there has never—since the Middle Ages—been an epoch when inspiring leadership of small bands of men has counted for so much.

The lieutenant is expected to be the bravest, most cheerful and most self-sacrificing individual in the platoon he commands. Most of these officers are mere young men, who two years ago were at schools like Eton or Rugby, but who today are veterans, with war records complete with splendid courage and self-sacrifice.

All along the line of actual conflict between the opposing armies little bands of warriors are now led much as the knights of old led their followers. When in battle front each band is so isolated by conditions of the conflict, and by an unwatchful enemy, that it often loses touch with everything in the world except its platoons upon its right and left. Food and water, to sustain life and ammunition with which to carry on the fight come to it at intervals from the rear.

Meant It for Him.

From the Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

He was fond of playing jokes on his wife, and this time he thought he had a winner.

"My dear," he said, as they sat at supper, "I just heard such a sad story. A young girl today. They thought she was going blind, and so a surgeon operated on her, and found"—

"Yes?" gasped the wife breathlessly.

"That she'd got a young man in each eye!" ended the husband with a chuckle.

For a moment there was silence.

Then the lady remarked slowly:

"Well, it would all depend on what sort of a man it was. Some of them she might have seen through easily enough."

We'll be getting the facts concerning the potato plots.

A Medicine for Women

Forty Years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has Relieved the Sufferings of Women.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this try who continues to suffer without giving Lydia E. ham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evi- that is continually being published, proving beyond adiction that this grand old medicine has relieved suffering among women than any other medicine in world.

Mrs. Kieso Cured After Seven Month's Illness.

Aurora, Ill.—"For seven long months I suffered from a female trouble, with severe pains in my back and sides until I became so weak I could hardly walk from chair to chair, and got so nervous I would jump at the slightest noise. I was entirely unfit to do my house work, I was giving up hope of ever being well, when my sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took six bottles and today I am a healthy woman able to do my own housework. I wish every suffering woman would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and find out for herself how good it is."—Mrs. Karl A. Kieso, 596 North Ave., Aurora, Ill.

Could Hardly Get Off Her Bed.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—"I want you to know the good Lydia E. Pink- Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was in such bad from female troubles that I could hardly get off my bed. I been doctoring for a long time and my mother said, 'I want you Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.' So I did, and it certainly made me a well woman. I am able to do my house work am so happy as I never expected to go around the way I do again, I want others to know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable pound has done for me."—Mrs. Josie Copner, 1668 Harrison Ave., mount, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A Courageous President.

From the New Republic.

Lack of moral courage can certainly not be imputed to President Wilson. If any unpopular action must be undertaken in the national interest, everybody else dodges it, while the president puts it through without flinching. It was the president who was forced to assume responsibility for our entry into the war, for conscription, for the unprecedented policy of immense loans to foreign nations. It was the president who alone dared to place a quietus upon the plan of rushing a volunteer division to France under a popular hero, and who determined upon sending overseas the flower of our regular army. When the vital matter of food control falls afoul of conflicting and widely represented interests, the president comes promptly to the rescue. Certainly a majority in both Senate and House recognized that the present was no proper occasion to interpolate a sweeping domestic reform like national prohibition into a war measure. But many of those who recognized this shrank from incurring the odium of those of their constituents who place prohibition above every other issue, and who are sufficiently numerous in most constituencies to turn the elections. President Wilson did not shrink from such odium. Probably he would personally prefer a bone dry nation, but not at the expense of national harmony in the existing crisis.

The Great Task of the Council of National Defense

Grosvenor Clarkson, Son of "Ret" Clarkson, in Scribners.

The activities of the council of national defense and its advisory commission, in a very definite, almost dramatic, measure, mark the entrance into American governmental affairs of the nonpartisan business man, engineer and scientist. The present work of both bodies is based on the irresistible and hard won knowledge that modern war is an enterprise to which military men alone have ceased to be called —that it enlists the specialists of every industry and every science from the fighting line clear back to the last line of defense. As Howard Coffin, who, more than any other man, started the movement for industrial preparedness in this country—has said: "Twentieth century warfare demands that the blood of the soldier must be mingled with from three to five parts of the sweat of the man in the factories, mills, mines, and fields of the nation in arms."

With a full realization then that battles are won not alone by fighting men but by fighting coordinated industries, the council of nation defense and its advisory commission settled down to real business on March 1, 1917. Since that date the record has been one of steady, ground breaking accomplishments brought about by only the hardest kind of hard work. What has been done reaches nearly to an epic. After the president delivered his war message before the congress, the speed was redoubled. Today the statement is justified that probably no similar governmental body has ever put behind it as much solid result in the first 70 days of a great war.

BOY SWAPS HIS DAD'S SHIRT

Accepts Proposition of Wild West Show Employee and Gets Inside the "Big Top."

Monta Jessup is the robust son of Orin Jessup, president of the Orin Jessup Land company of Tipton and he is a true American lad, says the Indianapolis News. He knows when a circus comes to town and like all other boys, he will find a way to osee the show. That was why he did not miss a Wild West exhibition that played Tipton recently. The lad had been pondering over how he was to get inside the "big top" and he was not greatly encouraged until a big, black man—one of the many sons of Ham with the show—approached him.

"Say, sonny, how big's your dad?" asked the stranger.

"He's a whopper," promptly replied the youngster, thinking perhaps the colored man might have some notion of ordering him roughly from the grounds.

"If you all 'll give me one of your dad's shirts I'll take you in all the shows."

The lad scurried away and soon delivered one of Mr Jessup's best shirts to the colored man, who was as good as his word, and took the lad through every tented attraction on the grounds. Later on the young American had it forcibly impressed on him that he could have gone to the show several times for what the shirt cost.

Sure Enough.

The ball had gone over the fence, as balls will in suburban gardens, and a small but unabashed batsman appeared at the front door to ask for it.

Then appeared an irate father.

"How dare you show yourself at my house? How dare you ask for your ball? Do you know you nearly killed one of my children with it?"

"But you've got ten children," said the logical lad "and I've only got one baseball."

What Name?

Orville Wright said at a Dayton dinner:

"The war has developed flying enormously. We'll all fly after the war. Air fiends will then be as thick as motor fiends are today.

"What name shall we give to the air fiend's mania? Aerysipelus, perhaps? Or would flyfold be better? Maybe we'll call it inflewenza. Hold, though! All things considered, wouldn't the best name be skyatica?"

CITIES STRANGLED BY RAILROADS.

A 2-cent stamp is more than a steel engraving of our first president, it is a charter for the diffusion of democracy. Many complacent patriots do not appraise at its full value the civilization and national economy of a 2-cent stamp. Such impartiality in railways would mean billions added to our national wealth. Instead of that we have cities dizzy with railway duplication while other cities are strangled because they are not treated impartially. Spokane, Denver and other western cities have been choked by discriminating freight rates that favored Pacific coast cities. Parasitic East St. Louis has opposed a free bridge to St. Louis because the toll bridges levied tribute on the larger city. Galveston, the most important gateway to Panama, has been treated by foreign railways and its own dock owners as an appendage of Houston Leading citizens in the afflicted cities have conspired with the railways to retard the economic welfare of their communities.

The most spectacular examples of strangulation are Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, because their arrested development is in such sharp contrast to the growth of Cleveland and Detroit. Instead of improving their transportation, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati excuse their lack of growth by boasting of their bank clearings. Pittsburgh and Cincinnati are old established cities, doomed to riches. Corrupt politicians and incompetent business men have sapped these cities, but geography compels commerce to dump riches into their unworthy coffers. Yet measured by the actual workers and their output, these cities are being distanced by Cleveland and Detroit. The best measure of a city's industrial worth is the amount added to the value of raw material by the workmanship of the city's industrial population. Between 1909-1914 the wage earners of Pittsburgh increased 3 per cent and the value added to the cost of manufactures 2 per cent. In the same period Cincinnati did not add to its wage earning population, but enhanced the value of its manufactured product 6 per cent. At the same time Cleveland and Detroit added 22 and 24 per cent respectively to their wage earners and 26 and 46 per cent to their products.

It is true that Pittsburgh and Cincinnati have been hampered by politics, but the fatal incubus to progress has been discrimination in transportation. Pittsburgh has been bottled up for a generation. A 10 years' heroic fight by the Wabash railway for entrance into Pittsburgh was finally won, only to have the machinations of the Pennsylvania octopus neutralize its triumph. The business men, bankers and brokers of Pittsburgh and Cincinnati accept with docility the wretched transportation facilities of those cities. At the same time live business men and radical politicians seize the advantage the great lakes gives them in Cleveland and Detroit, distancing the strangled cities of the Ohio river.

An efficient transportation system would be as impartial as uniform postage.

RESUSCITATING THE HALF DROWNED.

In all probability within a short time I will begin to receive inquiries about resusicitation of persons who have apparently drowned. These questions generally come in the shape of an inquiry as to the relative value of pulmotors, lung motors, and other similar devices. It is well to answer the questions publicly and before they come rather than privately and after they come.

The commission appointed by the American Medical association reported that the devices are of little benefit and probably in use do more harm than good. By "in use" I mean this: In resuscation work time is all important. Artificial respiration commenced five minutes after the accident is very much better than any kind of resuscitation work done 10 minutes after it. The minutes conserved in getting the life-saving apparatus to the field of need means the loss of life. Some even go so far as to say that that type of apparatus which mechanically exhausts the lungs does injury in a positive as well as in a negative way.

In a conference of industrial physicians with the Pennsylvania department of labor, the recommendation of the Meltzer method was indorsed by the committee on resuscitation from mine gases. Dr. Elizabeth B. Bricker, of the Pennsylvania department thinks the Meltzer method superior to the lungmotor and the pulmotor. Dr. Patterson said: "I myself know of one case which was lost when the prone pressure method was stopped and mechanical means were applied." Dr. J. W. Luther of the New Jersey Zinc company said: "We see quite a number of cases of carbon monoxide poisoning and we have been using the pumotor in several cases. I must say, however, that it is not only quite efficient. I have been considering changing it. I do not like the lungmotor. I do not like the principle of it."

Dr. George Evans, of the Oliver Iron and Steel company, said: "In our work we occasionally have cases of men being overcome by gas and we have practically done away with the pulmotor. We have been using the Schaeffer method."

Dr. Munson, of the Carnegie Steel company, said: "The first aid crews of the Carnegie Steel company are taught to perform the different methods of artificial respiration and then as soon as they can obtain the pulmotor to apply it. It has always given very good results and I know of no case where we have had a fatality."

The chairman asked: "Do you allow a layman to use your pulmotor?" To which Dr. Munson replied: "We train them thoroughly in how to apply the pulmotor and how to use it. Of course, there are trained crews in almost every part of the plant—men who will not lose their heads."

Dr. Rubin of the Westmoreland Coal company told of a case where the pulmotor had failed and a simple mechanical method succeeded.

Dr. Heleman of the Pennsylvania railroad company said. "I have been on committees of various railroads that have considerer the pulmotor and lungmotor. We could not be prevented from making various objections to these machines, but we were well satisfied with the Schaeffer method."

The Schaeffer prone pressure method will be described tomorrow.

Airplane "Built Like a Watch."

Carl Snyder, in Collier's Weekly.

A fast airplane, and especially an airplane engine, bears something of the relation to a motor car that the finest Elgin or Waltham movement does to an Ingersoll or Waterbury watch. The engine of your motor car weighs from 500 to 1,200 pounds, or more. It will average from 20 to 30 pounds per housepower at the lowest. The new airplane engines run less than three pounds per horsepower and the finest of them two pounds or less. Airplanes have been built with air cooled engines for short distance fast scouting whose engines weigh less than a pound and three-quarters per horsepower. They must be quite literally, as an old advertisement used to say, "built like a watch."

I suppose that the Ford engine does not cost in quantity very much over $50. That is about 22 rated horsepower. At present a high powered airplane engine of the best type—say 120 to 150 horsepower—cannot be purchased for much less than $3,000. And the whole airplane, a big one, may readily cost $10,000 to $30,000. You can readily see why the construction of only 15,000 airplanes, as in England's program would easily equal, for a total expenditure for men and camps and hangars and repairs and wastage, more than $500,000,000.

A fast modern airplane has an average life of only about 200 or 300 hours of active service—say two months at the outside. This means that to keep 10,000 airplanes on a battle line you have to be able to built 5,000 per month or more. The cost would be almost unthinkable. That is why warfare in the air for any length of time would bankrupt the world. And that, in turn, is why warfare in the air means the end of all warfare.

Yale and Harvard.

From the Waterbury American.

Apropos of the fact that Yale men are sleeping in Harvard dormitories—the wolf lying down with the lamb, so to speak—and drilling shoulder to shoulder with Harvard men, the Boston Herald is moved to wonder if this can be that millennium which President France, of Brown, once said would be at hand when Harvard should shout: "To heaven with Yale." Cheer up; the Yale-Harvard desire to lick each other is at present somewhat overshadowed by a mutual desire to lick the Hun, but it won't be safe to build peace temples in the bowl and stadium yet awhile.

Philadelphia Lawyer Illustrated "Leading Questions" in Court With Diplomatic Kiss Story.

The late John G. Johnson, a Philadelphia lawyer, was once explaining to a jury the nature and the unfairness of "leading" or guiding quistions. He illustrated his explanation with an anecdote.

"A young chap and a pretty girl," he said, "sat on a secluded bench at Lemon Hill. The girl turned to him and said earnestly:

"'You ask me for a kiss. There is a langunge in kisses. A kiss on the hand denotes chivalrous respect. On the forehead it denotes a firm and faithful friendship. On the lips—' her color rose and she drew a long breath—'a kiss on the lips denotes all things. Kiss me, then, once. Express in one kiss your feeling toward me.'

"The bashful youth pondered.

"'I don't want to lose her,' he said to himself. 'Where is it best to kiss her? Hand, forehead or lips?'

"A mellow whistle interrupted him. He looked at the girl. Her red mouth was puckered up in the form of a rosebud; she had pulled down her hat so as to hide her forehead completely, and both hands were thrust up to the wrists in her pockets."

The "Cat Squadron."

Great Britain was the first naval power to build the battle cruiser. Close on her heels came Germany, Russia and Japan; but all others, including the United States, have no battle-cruisers in their line of battle. It was in 1907 when the Indomitable, the first one, was begun. One year later she crossed the Atlantic at a speed of a little more than 25 miles an hour. The Inflexible and Invincible followed, and, when the European war came, Great Britain had a squadron that proved of immense worth to her. In the Jutland battle, however, three of the British battle cruisers were sunk, shells penetrating their armor and exploding their magazines or boilers. The armor of a superdreadnaught would most probably have proved too strong for the shells that destroyed these battle cruisers. The famous "Cat Squadron," so called because it included the Lion and Tiger, is today the last word in the battle cruiser; but in a few years the American battle cruisers that are now being built will far outstrip the "cats" in every feature.—Frank E. Evans, in St. Nicholas Magazine.

BRITISH RECRUITING MISSION
Western Division

October 1, 1917

I, Ernest Hugh Fitzpatrick, Chief British Recruiting Medical Examiner for the State of Iowa, do this day, October 1, 1917, command and demand in the name of our Most Gracious Majesty, George the Fifth, King of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperor of India and Sovereign of the British Dominion beyond the seas, and with the consent and authority of the Government of the United States, that all British subjects of military age living in the County of Hancock, State of Iowa, will forthwith, without failure and without fear or favor, and without let or hindrance, place themselves in communication with James S. Ross, Sheriff of Hancock County, in the State of Iowa, who is now cooperating with me, by command of Governor Harding, for the purpose of enlistment into his Majesty's armies now fighting in the field against the common enemy of mankind. I do most earnestly urge that all British subjects between the ages of 18 and 45, living in Hancock County, in the State of Iowa, carry out these instructions, without loss of time, in lieu of the bill now before Congress, known as the "British Subjects Conscription Bill," which will shortly be enacted into law, under the provision of which law penalties will be provided for all those British subjects of military age, who willfully and disdainfully, disregard this call for enlistment into his Majesty's army.

National Food Membership Campaign

With fifty volunteer workers in the office at Burlington, Federal Food Administrator J. F. Deems has commenced to distribute throughout the State the membership cards of the National Food Pledge Campaign. As rapidly as housewives sign food pledge cards these are returned to the Food Administrator's office at Burlington and a kitchen card, giving instructions as to the why and wherefore of Food Conservation, and a membership card, are mailed out.

Membership cards are handsomely engraved in five colors, and are to be hung in the front window of each home, to show that the housewife is a member of the Food Conservation army.

No obligation is imposed upon signers of the food pledge other than they will conserve food to the best of their ability.

From time to time the Food Administration will mail literature on food conservation and suggestions and helps for the housewife which will aid her in assisting the Government.

As rapidly as a realization of the fact that the food pledge is simply an expression of co-operation with the Government in its food conservation becomes manifest the "Get a Member" Campaign will grow stronger. Each housewife who is already a member of the Food Conservation army is asked to explain the food pledge to her neighbor and secure her signature if possible. These are to be mailed to the office of the Food Administrator at Burlington and membership cards will be issued from there.

Some confusion has been created through the illegible addresses on the cards on the part of some signers, and for this reason a large number of signers will not get their membership cards In cases where they fail to receive them, however, their names may be again certified to the Food Administrator by their respective County Chairman and cards will be forthcoming.

MEETING OF KLEMME CO-OPERATIVE CREAMERY SOCIETY

Last Saturday afternoon the stockholders of the Klemme Creamery Company met at the Opera House for the election of officers for the coming year and for other business that was brought before the meeting. The following officers were elected:

President—C. A. Arnold.
Secretary—Valentine Josten.
Treasurer—H. L. Suckow.
Directors—Herman Priebe, John Bock.
Re-elected—J. E. Stille, G. A. Goll and John Day.

The above men are all good hustlers and will make things hum. The Creamery has been a wonderful success, which must be credited a large part to the able men that have always been chosen as officers and directors. The officers in the past have brought the Creamery Company up to the present standard and the good work will continue with the present board of directors and officers.

We give a short sketch of the business for the past year:

Received 850,682 lbs. cream.
Received 215,636.6 lbs. butterfat.
Average price butterfat for year 41 2-3.
Present price butterfat 49.

The above figures speak well for the Creamery Company. They are doing a large business and what is better, it is continually growing larger.

SCHOOL NEWS

Burr Church, Editor

Oscar Schuldt our editor, is absent from school this week and his place will be filled by Burr Church.

The high school pupils have received their examination papers for the first six weeks and the teachers Mrs. Powell and Mr. Reese, say the majority of the papers were fine.

Erwin Lau accompanied his father and brothers to Camp Dodge Sunday. His brother is there receiving training in the army.

Dalia Stromer was absent from school last Thursday.

Minnie Blank visited Camp Dodge Sunday and was absent from school Monday morning. Perhaps she visited too long with the soldiers.

A Basket Social will be given at the Idle Hour theatre, October 29th, by the Klemme school. Ladies please bring baskets and gentlemen must bring bulging pocketbooks.

Miss Viola Sampson who has been absent from school several weeks, has returned to her school duties this week.

One of the "Sophies," Mable Waterman, was an Algona visitor Sunday.

Oravella Emerson was absent from school Monday.

Lula Neuberger is pianist this week for our opening exercises, which are held every morning.

A debate and literary program will be given by the high school in the grammar room, this week Friday. Everybody is invited.

Mr. Reese has recovered from the cold that caught him in some mysterious manner some time ago.

We have found a new way to wash blackboards. This method was introduced by Miss Anne Borge, the primary teacher.

New sash curtains have been obtained for the school house, improving the appearance to a great extent.

Tuesday morning at recess Mrs. Powell had the misfortune of finding a mouse in her desk. It had been feeding on poisoned wheat and was not feeling very lively.

Mrs. Powell says that she corrected about 300 examination papers the past week.

The pins which the school has been selling in honor of J. W. Riley, are all sold. They went like hot cakes. The money will be used to purchase a bust and painting of the "Old Swimming Hole" also a book of his poems.

Lois Church has returned to school. She has been absent the last six weeks.

In this day when the world, and especially the United States is so careful in representing the most up-to-date ideals in industry, farming, in fact in almost every line of endeavor, live communities should inspect their schools and make sure that they are providing the boys and girls with the best facilities possible. The function of the school is not merely to give the members knowledge of certain branches of learning, but it should be able to provide training in moral and physical lines as well. It should be able to make the spare hours of the boy especially profitable in these lines. Give a live boy an hour of idle time and he is sure to fill it with some interesting pastime. If undirected this surplus energy is often used in acquiring evil habits. If directed it will be profitable to the development of the boy. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is an adage containing more truth than poetry. There is no better way to direct the expenditure of the boy's surplus energy than in good wholesome athletics, and in order to promote them we must have support, both moral and financial. Of course every one will lend us the moral support for it costs nothing. What is harder to get and more essential is the financial backing. We are giving a short entertainment at the Idle Hour theatre next Monday evening. It will be followed by a basket social. The money is to create an athletic fund for our high school. With this entirely worthy object in view, will the young men of the city bring a good appetite accompanied by a full purse, and the ladies will donate the where-with-all to satisfy the ravenous appetites and desire of the young gentlemen to rid themselves of their spare change. Don't forget the date, Monday, October 29th.

We were a little delayed with our paper this week because our patent insides failed to arrive on time. By patent insides we mean ready prints.

"The big wind," a name given in Ireland to a terrible windstorm which began on the night of January 6, 1839. In Limerick, Galway and Athlone hundreds of houses were blown down and hundreds more were burned by the wind spreading the fires of those blown down. Dublin suffered severely. No Irishman knows this storm by any other name than "the big wind." "The night of the big wind" forms an era; things date from it; such and such a thing happened "before the big wind. when I was a boy," or it happened "a twelvemonth after the big wind, when your Uncle Dennis was but a lad." The use of the name seems a sort of survival of oral tradition as opposed to written history

After the revolutionary war, while Lafayette was trying to reach Holland to escape enemies at home, he was seized by the Austrian government and imprisoned as a dangerous character. His wife, also, was imprisoned at Paris during the reign of terror, but succeeded in getting to Vienna and pleaded with the emperor for her husband's release. Lafayette's friends in this country did what they could in his behalf, and finally, on August 25, 1797, he was set at liberty after five years' imprisonment in a dungeon During this imprisonment two American friends of Lafayette, Francis K. Huger, of Charleston, S. C., and Dr Eric Bollman, made a daring attempt to liberate him, for which they were imprisoned.

The assumption of the phrase "The United States of America" first appears in Jefferson's draft of the declaration of independence, and in this particular the first draft was not altered by congress in ordaining the declaration. The words are found in the final paragraph and thus appear in the official copy on file. "We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in general congress assembled-" On September 9, 1776, congress first officially designated the new nation by the title and style of the United States of America.

The humming bird is pugnacious and will attack birds larger than itself, especially if the intruder approaches its nests. The nest, built in trees, shrubs or reeds, is constructed of slight materials—cotton-wool, vegetable down and spiders' webs. Of the smaller species the eggs are never more than two. They are white and about the size of peas.

Oregon and Washington were once the habitat of camels, long extinct in this country, according to the announcement of a discovery made by Prof John C. Merriam and John P. Buwalda, of the University of California. Fossil remains of camels were found in the White Bluffs region along the northern bank of the Columbia river

Prof M P Philbrick of the University of Washington told the Washington State Philological society that women of the Seventeenth century powdered their cheeks with corrosive sublimate -bichloride of mercury—and with white lead And they perfumed their gloves with ambergris.

Since beginning operations the Toronto harbor commission has reclaimed 300 acres of land in connection with its part of the work of the harbor front development scheme Taking the value of the new land at $10,000 an acre, the harbor board has created an additional asset of $3 000 000

Millions of horses are being destroyed in the present war Since the beginning of the war about 750,000 have been sent from the United States to Europe, and reports show a decrease of about 33 000 in the number of horses in this country for the year 1916 and 1917

The influence of light on egg production from poultry during the short day winter months has been rather markedly proved. By the use of artificial light early in the morning and late in the evening, the egg production has been increased 60 per cent.

Nitrogen of the soil is now derived mainly from accumulated animal and vegetable matter, but the first plant life must have fed on the free nitrogen of the air and it is this that the scientists are seeking to woo into the soil.

An insect of the "Hercules" variety, weighing three ounces, was able to support on its back a brick weighing more than a pound. A human being, if subjected to a proportionate weight would be crushed.

COUNCIL BLUFFS MAN BEING INVESTIGATED

Prominent Druggist's Attitude Toward Liberty Bond Issue the Cause.

Council Bluffs, Ia., Oct. 20.—Frank H Morgan, one of the prominent druggists of this city, had the entire front of his store painted yellow during last night. This morning he was summoned before federal authorities in Omaha He is charged with declaring to the committee soliciting for Liberty bonds that he didn't owe the country anything. He didn't subscribe for the first issue, he said, and wouldn't for this.

HE BECAME "SLACKER" THROUGH IGNORANCE

Storm Lake, Ia., Oct. 20.—Because he did not "know" Lars Hansen, an alien, is on Uncle Sam's list of slackers. Lars, who is a farm hand 23 years old, has been working on the farm of George Haahr, near Newell, registered and thought that was the end of the matter His name was drawn and he failed to report. Sheriff Skeels received orders to send him to Des Moines Young Hansen decided to declare his intentions of becoming a citizen of the United States immediately, which relieves the situation and he will fight for the old U S. A. He came to this country in 1911 from Copenhagen

MUST NOT USE GERMAN LANGUAGE IN PULPIT

Audubon, Ia Oct 20 The members of the congregation of Rev. Mr Starck, a German preacher and school director who has several times been before the Audubon county council of defense for alleged pro-German preaching and teaching, and who was placed under orders by the council to cease his offending actions, have taken the matter in their own hands and have, it is believed, effectually squelched Rev Mr Starck

Rev Mr Starck, who conducts a school and is pastor in a German settlement in this county followed the instructions of the council of defense until last Sunday when he preached a sermon in German The members of the church were much offended and immediately interested themselves in the matter by the introduction of a resolution and upon which there was an almost unanimous vote, amounting practically to an ultimatum to Rev. Mr. Starck to never again disobey the orders of the council of defense in the use of the German language, and he was so instructed

PARENTS FORGOT THEY WERE POSSESSED OF A BABE

Waterloo, Ia Oct 20 - Mr and Mrs. R. E. Beal, of Bismarck N D., occupied a berth in a Chicago Great Western train from St. Paul, bound for Kansas City At Oelwein the car they were occupying was switched into the train for Chicago and they changed into another car in the train bound for Kansas City

When the train arrived here, the agent inquired of the conductor of the sleeper if he had any passengers who had been transferred to his car at Oelwein On being informed there was a man and woman there who had made the transfer, he sought them out and asked if they had left a baby on the Chicago bound bar He had been advised in a telegram from the conductor of the Chicago bound train that a baby had been found in the berth which the Beals had occupied.

Not until the agent inquired of them about the baby had the parents missed it. There was a tearful scene on the part of the mother who upbraided the father, but neither could explain how they had neglected the youngster.

A message was hurried to Dubuque to intercept the Chicago train and to ask the Dubuque agent to send the little one on to Kansas City. This he refused to do, so Mr Beal made the trip to Dubuque to regain possession of his child, the mother remaining here while he made the trip.

LIFE SENTENCE FACED BY ARMY DESERTERS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 20.—An indication of the sentences which may be dealt out to five alleged deserters in the Eighty-eighth division now facing courtmartial proceedings has been given in a copy of a memorandum from Camp Gordon, Ga.

"Private Otto K. Brennon, Company R. Three Hundred and Twenty-sixth infantry, was tried, found guilty, deprived of the pay and allowances due him and sentenced to hard labor in the federal penitentiary for life. The sentence was commuted by Major General Swift, commanding the division, to 10 years in the penitentiary at hard labor."

YOUNG HORSE THIEF IS QUICKLY LANDED

Harrison County Sheriff Used Telephone—Farmers, Too, Aid.

Logan, Ia., Oct. 20.—As a result of beating the brush along the Missouri river in three counties, and keeping the telephone red hot day and night and receiving the cooperation of public spirited citizens of Harrison county in different localities, Sheriff M. D. Myers apprehended a horse thief and landed him behind the bars, where he later admitted his guilt, giving his age at 18, and his name Frank Goble, later his name as Jesse Jerome, and still later as Clarence Rohrback, with his home in Pennsylvania

When Chris Peterson, former resident of Logan, but now of near Little Sioux, discovered a fur coat missing and a good horse gone from the farm, he promptly notified the sheriff's office. Sheriff Myers threw out the drag net without satisfactory results until reaching six-mile grove, when the horse was recovered at a farm, but the thief had made good his escape. By keeping up the hunt with a large force of men Sheriff Myers struck the trail and shortly afterward, through the assistance of farmers, nabbed the young man and brought him to Logan.

DRAFT LAW EVADERS HELD AS DESERTERS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct 20.- Charges of desertion have been preferred against five draft law evaders held in the guardhouse of the Eighty-eighth division of the national army at Camp Dodge.

The extreme penalties for desertion in time of war is death. No definite announcement was made in connection with the preparation of the charges, but it was intimated severe measure in all probability would be taken if the defendants are found guilty Preliminary reports which have been made to the division judge advocate say the men claim to be members of the I. W. W.

Their names have not been given out Their cases probably will be called the latter part of this week or the first of next week.

A FULL REGIMENT OF REGULARS TO CAMP DODGE

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 20.--The Forty-second infantry regiment, comprising 2,058 men of the regular army, has been ordered to the Eighty-eighth division of the national army at Camp Dodge, according to word received at division headquarters

TWO NOT GUILTY OF ESPIONAGE CHARGE

Long and Sensational Trial at Davenport Finally Brought to an End.

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 17.—Dr. Henry Mathey and E. C. Willis were found not guilty of violation of the espionage act today. The jury disagreed on all the other cases.

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 17.—The conspiracy and espionage law violation cases went to the jury late last night. United States Attorney Claude Porter closed for the government and former Congressman Henry Vollmer for the defense. Judge Wade's charge to the jury lasted one hour.

Judge Wade directed a verdict of not guilty for all defendants on the conspiracy charge. This means that the jury will have to deal only with the espionage act violation, there being two such violation counts against each of the six defendants.

Guilt or innocence hinges on the Wallace trial. Judge Wade instructed the jurymen to ascertain first whether or not Wallace's lecture was what the government said it was The jury is to take up the cases of the six defendants individually

Porter flayed the indicted men. Porter was interrupted frequently during his closing argument by Henry Vollmer and Attorney Warner, who were given a severe calling by the court

The defendants Dr Henry Mathey, E C Willis A H Miller Charles Wiese and Fred Vollmer were in the court room They were very grave

The trial of the six men opened a week ago, when the task of selecting a jury was started Two days were spent in securing a jury and in making the opening statements The testimony of between 60 and 70 witnesses has occupied the time and attention of the court and jury for five days, including two night sessions.

SOLDIERS MAY LOSE THEIR VOTES NEXT YEAR

Washington, D. C., Oct. 17.—Iowa men in the rainbow division and the other Iowans destined for France probably will not get an opportunity to vote in the congressional elections next fall. The war department has about decided that no voting on the other side will be permitted

Many states have absentee voter laws that permit the soldiers to vote while in camps The war department has held that it is entirely legal to vote the men from these states while in France, holding that the rule of extra territoriality applies and the American army camps over there are to be considered American territory But the position of army officers is that it would seriously interfere with camp discipline and cause needless annoyance to take the men from their serious work and inject them into a political fight on this side.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY MAN SUES GREAT NORTHERN

LeMars, Ia., Oct 17 Matthew Brennan, residing on a farm west of town has started suit for $10,000 damages against the Great Northern Railroad company, claiming he was injured permanently when a freight train dashed into the caboose of another train on which Brennan was riding on February 21, 1917 Brennan was accompanying two cars of stock to market He had both legs broken and suffered other injuries

This is his second attempt to commit suicide He was adjudged insane and will be taken to the state institution at Cherokee. Pearson was a well known character in Akron for many years.

CHEROKEE REPORTS A SERIOUS COAL SHORTAGE

Cherokee, Ia., Oct. 17.—The coal situation is getting serious in Cherokee. The local dealers who were interviewed say that they have practically no coal on hand, and that they cannot get a single order filled at the price fixed by the government. They might get some by paying exorbitant prices, but they don't feel like taking the chances on that sort of procedure until the coal question has been more definitely settled.

MODALE, IA., FARMER'S WIFE KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Missouri Valley, Ia., Oct. 17.—While driving from Missouri Valley to his home near Modale in a heavy car the machine of Leon Sumner skidded on a high grade, went into a ditch and turned all five occupants beneath it, killing Mrs. Sumner almost instantly, breaking a leg of Mr. Sumner and inflicting slight injuries upon three young women who were in the rear seat. Mr. and Mrs. Sumner were only recently married. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Olinger. Both families are prominent. The young couple had taken possession of a fine new farm home near Modale three weeks ago.

WILLARD ESTATE IS TO BE HELD INTACT

Late Head of Marshall Oil Company Made Provisions in His Will.

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 18.—Leaving an estate estimated at $300,000, L. R. Willard, late president of the Marshall Oil company, of this city, has nominated by will three trustees who jointly will manage the estate and keep it intact during the life of his widow, Mrs. Jennie A. Willard. The will, which has just been filed, makes but one special bequest, leaving to the widow the $75,000 Willard home. Upon her death the trusteeship will be dissolved and the estate divided equally among Mr. Willard's five daughters, or their heirs, in the event of the death of any of the children. The trustees nominated by the decedent are G. H. Ruth, the new president of the Marshall Oil company; President C. C. St. Clair, of the First National bank of this city, and W. H. Kalbach, of Oskaloosa, president of the Oskaloosa National bank and a stockholder in the Marshall Oil company.

AN IOWA RAILROADER IS GOING TO RUSSIA

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 18.—In order to become identified with the American force of railroad men now in Russia, Charles W. Warcup, master mechanic of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad in this city and formerly of Minneapolis, has resigned his position and will leave within a few days for a Pacific port preparatory to sailing for Russia. He has been commissioned a captain and will serve on the staff of G. H. Emerson, who has been appointed by the United States government as director of Russian railways. William Gemlo, of Minneapolis, who was master mechanic here prior to the incumbency of Warcup three years ago, again becomes master mechanic here. Gemlo has been master mechanic of the Cedar Lake, Minn., shops for the company.

Dailey was struck by an automobile driven by Harvey Harrison, of Grand Meadow township. The injuries sustained by the child were such that death, resulted yesterday. No blame is attached to Harrison, who is said to have been driving at only about 10 miles an hour. The boy in his play is understood to have run in front of the machine.

VILLISCA AX MURDERS STILL HAVING ATTENTION

Corning, Ia., Oct. 16.—The district court grand jury is ordered to report today for inspection, when it is the understanding that it will take up an investigation of the alleged Wilkerson conspiracy. This is the case brought by the state several weeks ago wherein Wilkerson and three others are charged with plotting a burglarious visit to the store of F. F. Jones in Villisca for the purpose of securing documents supposed to have a bearing on the ax murder investigation. Edward Boller, William Walker and Harry Havner were arrested about the same time, and it is reported one or more of them will turn state's evidence. It is alleged that the conspiracy was hatched in the Victoria hotel in Corning.

REMSEN MAN, CRUSHED UNDER WAGON, DIES

Corning, Ia., Oct. 18.—Matthew Wiebersch, aged 63, was instantly killed at Remsen yesterday when a team of horses ran away. Wiebersch was engaged in loading coal near the railroad tracks when an approaching train frightened the horses. Wiebersch jumped to seize the lines and was thrown under the wagon. His chest was crushed by the wheels of the heavily loaded vehicle and he succumbed to his injuries in half an hour. The deceased had been a resident of Remsen for 34 years. He leaves a wife and seven grown up children.

TWITTED, SHOOTS NEGRO TO ANSWER TORMENTORS

East St Louis Ill Oct 9 Wanton shooting at negroes by soldiers on patrol duty during the race riots here last May was testified to before the congressional committee investigating the riots Charles Roger, president of a large chemical company here, told the committee that he saw a uniformed soldier shoot a negro who was standing with a group of his fellows a block away, merely to show some white men who were twitting him that he could not shoot

Mr Roger testified that a man in a crowd of whites remarked to the soldier:

"What are you doing with that gun' You can't shoot'

"The hell I can't!" Roger quoted the soldier as saying

Whereupon the soldier fired into the crowd of negroes and one of them fell wounded testified the witness

ATTORNEY GENERAL TO OBEY ORDERS GIVEN

Lincoln Neb Oct 19 Attorney Reed spent several unhappy moments on the carpet when the educational lands funds commission, for which he is attorney, insisted on knowing why he did not obey the board's instructions to file a suit to test the right of the state to the mineral rights on state school land This has grown to be an important question since the discovery of potash in lakes on school lands has led to immense returns for royalties The lessees of the land claim the potash also in royalties

Mr Reed was ordered three weeks ago to begin the suit He does not think such an action could be maintained When the board talked of hiring outside counsel he told them they had no right to do so Treasurer Hall sprung several supreme court decisions to the contrary and the row which continued for some time was not settled when the attorney general withdrew

The other state officers insist they are not required to accept his advice as final but have the right to hire attorneys if they think he is wrong The other state officers were also peeved because the attorney general insists on their paying costs of actions begun in the interests of their department when the legislature gave the attorney general $12,500 for the expenses of special prosecutions.

LUFBERY WINS FIGHT THREE MILES IN AIR

Pilot Killed, German Observer Goes to Death Trying to to Kill Enemy.

Headquarters of the Lafayette Escadrille on the French Front Oct 20.—Lieut Raoul Lufbery of Wellingford, Conn member of the Lafayette escadrille fought the latest fight, in which he brought down a German machine (reported yesterday as his 13th) at an altitude of 5 000 yards and directly over the trenches

When first seen the German airplane was several hundred yards above him, but the American was able to make a near approach to the German biplane before being discovered The German pilot was killed at the first burst of fire from Lufbery's machine gun and the enemy returned the fire despite the fact that his pilot had been killed and that his own death was imminent One bullet from the German machine gun punctured the radiator of Lufbery's monoplane and lodged the carburetor so that he was compelled to land immediately

While on a low patrol protecting a photographic machine Sergt Walter Lovell of Boston was attacked three times and his machine badly shot up by machine gun bullets

BOND SALES APPROACH $2,000,000,000 MARK

Estimates Place Subscriptions at Start of Today's Sales at $1,750,000,000

Washington, Oct. 20 - The Liberty loan campaign continued its gains today and treasury officials announced that many estimates placed the total so far subscribed at above $1,750,000,000 and "within striking distance" of the $2,000,000 000 hoped for by Saturday night

Unofficial figures made public by the department show that a minimum of $1,535 000,000 has been subscribed up to the close of business Wednesday night Officials were optimistic that the $5,000,000,000 mark would be attained by the close of the campaign October 27.

THREE WEEKS' STRIKE OF RAIL MEN ENDED

Buenos Aires, Oct. 19.— For the first time in 24 days some trains are running today, marking the government's success in combatting the general strike. All trains in operation today were under strong military guard.

Even if the present paralysis of business because of the strike is ameliorated, leaders predict another similar movement about the first of the year Presumably the government, having started trains running, will turn its attention to other industries tied up by the strike.

WOMEN FAINT AT LIBERTY BOND MEETING

New York, Oct. 19.—Several women were overcome when they were jostled in the crowd attending a Liberty loan meeting on the steps of the United States sub-treasury building here today. KEY TO GERMAN PEACE POLICY IS MADE PUBLIC

Copenhagen, Oct. 20.—The key to the policy of the German government in refusing to make any definite statement of peace terms is furnished by Herr Hoch, a socialist member of the reichstag. The deputy told how Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, before his retirement as imperial chancellor, declared that he could not commit himself, but must pull out in the peace negotiations whatever could be obtained for Germany.

Herr Hoch cited this as proof of the ambiguous game the government is playing with its various indefinite peace declarations.

PALMER NAMED FOR ALIEN JOB

Former Congressman Who Refused War Secretaryship Is Made Alien Property Custodian With Wide Powers.

Washington, D C, Oct. 20.—A Mitchell Palmer, of Swarthmore, Pa., former representative in congress, was today appointed alien property custodian under the trading with the enemy law

The alien property custodian, whose powers are defined by the president's proclamation putting the act into effect, will act as trustee for all enemy property within the United States or issue licenses exempting enemy concerns from his supervision He may require the transfer to himself of any property held for or any debt owed to an enemy of an enemy ally, and any person holding such property or owing such money may transfer the property or pay the money to the custodian with his consent

The alien property custodian will hold such property or money until the end of the war and then deal with it as congress may direct All funds or ready money taken by the custodian may be invested in Liberty bonds and held in that form

Mr Palmer until his retirement from congress was one of the administration spokesmen in the House. He came near being nominated for the vice presidency at the Baltimore convention which nominated President Wilson and was the president's choice for secretary of war in his first cabinet, but declined the portfolio because he is a Quaker

AUSTRIANS GIVE UP TO FIGHT WITH SERBS

Entire Regiment of Jugo-Slavs Surrenders to Rumanians and Re-Enlists.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 20.—An entire Austrian regiment, with officers at its head, has surrendered to the Rumanians on the Russo-Rumanian front, according to cable advices received here today.

The report stated the regiment was composed almost entirely of Mohammedan Serbs from Austria. The colonel declared all were Jugo-Slavs and that they surrendered voluntarily. They were ordered to enlist with the Serbs.

EGG SPECULATORS TO UNLOAD ON SOLDIERS

With Price Now Out of Reach, Speculators Complain of Probable Losses.

New York, Oct. 20.—The use of cold storage eggs as army rations will be suggested to the government, it was learned today by representatives of the butter and egg exchanges of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and New York, and the Mercantile exchange of New York. Egg packers are said to own millions of cold storage eggs for which there is no demand because the supply today greatly exceeds that which existed the time the eggs were put aside.

The holdings are said to be 13.2 per cent greater than a year ago, and the market value is considerably less than when they were put in storage.

Wholesalers are said to be facing millions of dollars in losses.

KAISER AND KUEHLMANN IN BALKANS FOR PEACE

Zurich, Oct. 20.—"The journey of Emperor William and Foreign Secretary von Kuehlman has been regarded in a certain sense as a preliminary step toward peace," says the Neueste Charsten, of Munich. "The emperor's conversations at Sofia and Constantinople certainly mean the examination of every possibility in that direction, although the peace by conciliation which we desire has nothing in common with that of Lloyd-George and Asquith."

DECLARES BERNSTORFF DIDN'T KNOW PASHA

German Paper Hints That U. S. Falsified, While Another Charges Forgery.

Amsterdam, Oct. 20.—Count von Bernstorff, former German ambassador to the United States, did not know Bolo Pasha, the French man held as a spy in France, according to the Tageblatt. Discussing the Bolo affair, the newspaper says

"It is established that the name of Bolo Pasha was never made known to Von Bernstorff and his banker interdiaries did not mention him. Consequently the passage in the alleged telegram published by Secretary Lansing in which Von Jagow asked Von Bernstorff 'what is new about Bolo?' is false.

"This warrants the obvious deduction regarding the trustworthiness of other details in this telegram."

The Taglische Rundschau says that the mention of Bolo's name in the Von Jagow dispatch is "another forgery of Secretary Lansing's for transparent purposes."

In the inquiry into the Bolo affair in New York early this month it was learned that Bolo had an accomplice in Switzerland through whom he had learned the terms on which Germany would conclude peace with France. Bolo Pasha is said to have received more than $1,700,000 from Von Bernstorff to aid in carrying out his plot.

TRIES TO LOOSEN TRANSPORT RIVETS

Norwegian Chef on Whitney Yacht Turned Over to U. S. Officials.

New York, Oct. 20.—The police turned over to the federal authorities today Charles W. Walnum, a Norwegian, 32 years old, suspected of trying to get aboard a United States vessel, formerly an interned German liner, with intent to loosen some of the rivets. The ship is being converted into a transport.

Walnum has been employed as chef and pantryman on a yacht owned by Harry Payne Whitney. He was to be arraigned later today before a United States commissioner

CONSTANTINE DYING FROM HIS OLD WOUND?

Paris, Oct. 20—A Zurich dispatch to the Matin says the old wound of former King Constantine of Greece, has reopened and that an operation was performed at the Sauerbruch clinic in Zurich yesterday. His condition is said to be most grave.

Two operations were performed on Constantine in 1915, the first not resulting in healing of the wound and for a time his life was despaired of. Reports were current at the time that he had been stabbed, but they were denied and it was said he was suffering from pleurisy.

INDIAN REVOLT PLOT EVIDENCE CLOSES TODAY

Chicago, Oct. 20—Testimony for the government in the case against Gustav H. Jacobsen, et al, charged with attempt to foment revolution in India, nears the end. United States District Attorney Cline announced that Richard Herrmann, who resumed his testimony this morning would be the last of his witnesses.

"BAD MAN" IS HANGED DESPITE SUICIDE ATTEMPT

Baton Rouge, La., Oct. 20.—Helaire Carriere, Louisiana "bad man," was hanged today in the state prison here for the murder of Sheriff Swords last July.

Run down in the canebreaks after a sensational man hunt of weeks, Carriere resisted his execution to the last moment, even to the extent to attempt suicide in his cell last night.

MILITARY CONFERENCE SCHEDULED NEXT MONTH

Washington, D. C., Oct. 20.—An allied military conference will be held in London early in November. This is to be supplemental to the coming Paris conference and will be almost strictly a military conference.

INTERNAL STRIFE FAILS TO ALTER GERMANY'S AIMS

Squabbling by Socialists and Others Characterized Mere Struggle for Political Control.

NO PEACE MEANING SEEN

Congress at Wurzburg Devotes Itself to Criticizing Individual Members and Opposing Factions.

By United Press.

London, Oct. 20.—The present German political crisis is due to a purely political squable and has no significance from a peace standpoint, according to best informed men here today.

Socialist activities in Germany it was declared, were due to the fact the radicals has been stung into energetic measures by attacks on them by conservatives and the pan-Germans. They have been fighting hard for control, after having tried Dr Michaelis as chancellor and found him wanting.

SOCIALISTS IN FINE ROW.

Washington, Oct. 20.—Recrimination and factional strife mark the daily progress of the German socialistic congress at Wurzburg, according to official cabled reports received today. That the war has greatly injured the socialist party was asserted by prominent members, who pointed to great reductions in the amounts received from dues, and alleged that the membership had decreased 70 per cent. Many orators reproached the bureau heads for the lack of skill and tact they had shown in dealing with the members who now constitute the minority socialist party and much resentment was expressed that the party leaders had permitted the arrest of such notable socialists as Dr. Liebknecht, Rosa Luxemburg and Zietz.

Scheidemann himself was openly accused of undue government leaning and altogether the congress is being characterized by much ill feeling.

UP TO PEOPLE TO FORCE PRICES LOWER

Wholesale Food Costs Will Be Published So Consumer May Know Retailer's Profit.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 20.—Unreasonable discrepancies between prevailing wholesale and retail prices on foodstuffs may be reduced materially, if consumers bring sufficient pressure to bear, Food Administrator Hoover intimates in an announcement of the approaching end of the high prices period. A gradual price decline is predicted between now and the end of the year. Inability of the food administration to act in the case of retailers doing a business of less than $100,000 a year, makes it impossible to control the great bulk of retailers.

It is planned, however, to ascertain and publish wholesale prices in 700 cities for comparison with retail figures, in order to reveal to the public the extortionate practices of some dealers.

TO LEAVE CAMP DODGE PROBABLY MONDAY

Iowa, Dakota and Minnesota Men to Be Sent to Deming, N. M.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 19:—National army men from Iowa, Dakota and Minnesota who have been ordered to Deming, N. M., to fill out the national guard will start Monday, it was said today. Other contingents will follow Tuesday and Wednesday. Three thousand men will be transferred exclusive of 1,000 from Illinois, who go to Houston.

SOCIALIST OR MURPHY MAN TO BE ELECTED

New York, Oct. 20.—Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany hall, declared the contest for mayor lies between John F. Hylan, the democratic candidate, and Morris Hillquit, the socialist nominee.

Mr. Murphy said the reports showed a very heavy trend of votes to Mr. Hillquist in all sections of the city.

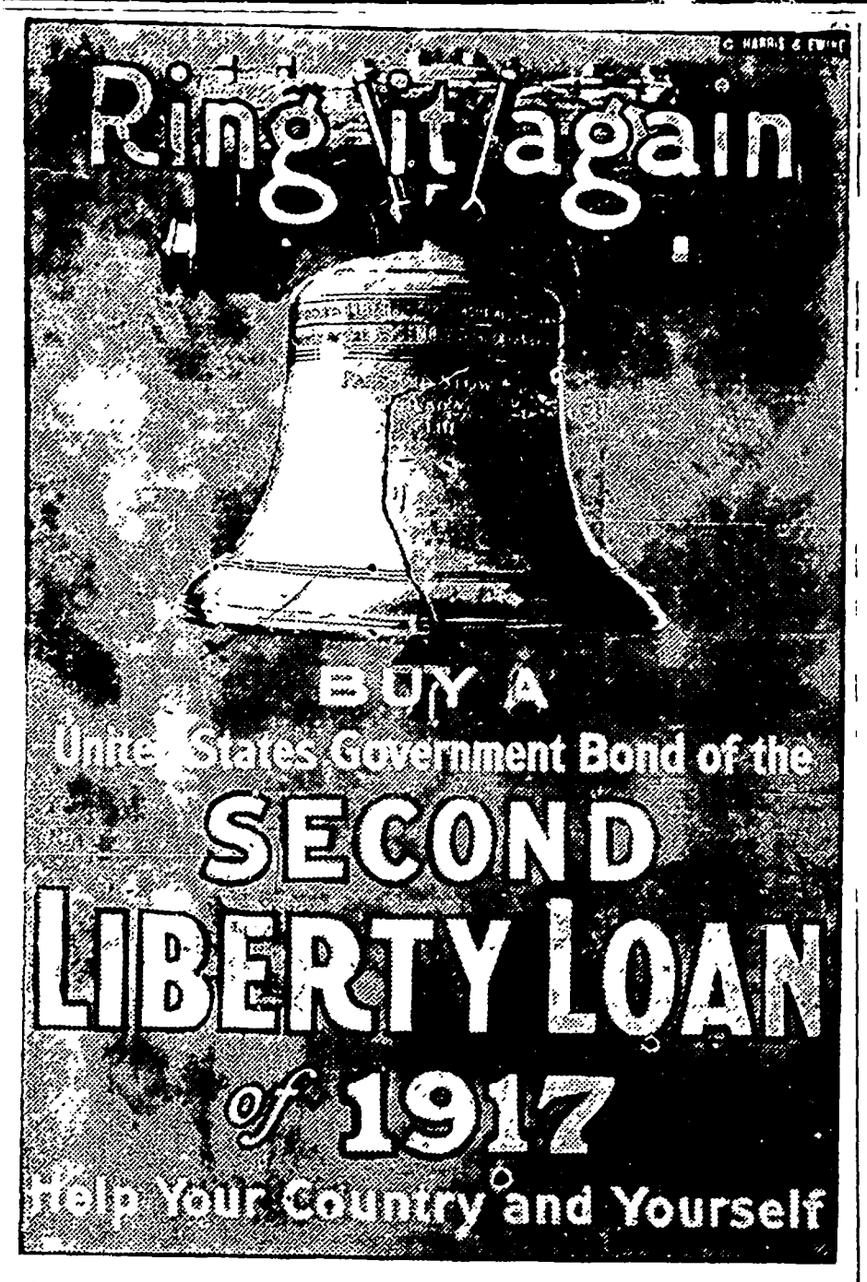
ALSATIANS SHOW THEIR LOVE FOR "FATHERLAND"

Washington, D. C., Oct. 19.—Advices reaching here today from Switzerland say the people of Strassburg, Metz, and other points in Alsace-Lorraine, responded with a general outburst of anti-German feeling to attempts to float part of the new German war loan and celebrate the birthday of Von Hindenburg.

On the occasion of the birthday of Von Hindenburg, October 2, many posters bearing the likeness of the marshal, were scratched out and torn down overnight in Strassburg. At Metz the advertisements and posters of the new war loan also were torn down.

U. S. REMOUNT SERVICE IS ORDERED ORGANIZED

Washington, D. C., Oct. 19.—Army orders today authorized organization of a remount service, a veterinary corps for the national army, 100 additional machine shop truck units for the quartermaster corps, and 300 additional units of the Graves registration service. Thirty-three auxiliary remount depots are authorized for national guard, and national army cantonments, one animal embarkation depot for duty at an embarkation port also is authorized, and one field remount depot of the character is planned for duty in France.



Does America Know?

(Ruth Wright Kauffman, special correspondent of The Vigilantes, sends the following appeal from Paris:)

DOES AMERICA KNOW—

That there is a WAR going on in Europe?

That the WASTAGE on the British front alone is 2,000 MEN A DAY?

That a present of 100,000 AIRSHIPS to the allies will do no good unless the ENGINES are of the sort THAT CAN BE USED at the front?

That when America sends MEN to France, the men must be FED and CLOTHED and given GUNS?

That the MAINTENANCE of an army at the front is the maintenance of a city as big as Chicago suddenly dumped in the middle of a desert?

That England has had to build her own DOCKS in northern France to receive her transports?

That it's like offering A LIVE ELEPHANT to a baby to offer to France American troops without maintenance?

THAT EVERY DAY THERE ARE FEWER MEN LIVING IN THAT THIN HUMAN WALL WHICH DIVIDES GERMANY FROM NEW YORK?

That there REALLY are such things as SHELLS and BOMBS and POISONOUS GAS and LIQUID flame, and that when these things strike you, they HURT?

That either

IT'S UP TO AMERICA TO STRAIN EVERY NERVE OF EVERY INDIVIDUAL AND FINISH THIS WAR PROPERLY.

Or:

IT'S UP TO EVERY WORKINGMAN IN THE UNITED STATES TO HAND OVER SO MUCH PER WEEK OUT OF HIS WAGE FOR THE REST OF HIS NATURAL EXISTENCE INTO GERMANY'S POCKETBOOK, AND PAY FOR THIS WAR PROPERLY

MUST WAR PUT ITS IRON FINGERS ON THE THROAT OF EACH SMALL TOWN OF THE UNITED STATES BEFORE AMERICA RUBS ITS EYES AND YAWNS AND TRIES—TOO LATE—TO JUMP OUT OF BED?

QUICK VICTORY WILL HELP FARMERS

By ARTHUR C. PAGE,
Editor, The Orange Judd Farmer.

So many farmers' boys have joined the military, so many more may be called if the war continues, that our farmers have the keenest of blood interest in securing an early victory. On the economic side, a sure market at fair prices for the produce the farmer has to sell, with reasonable prices for the commodities he has to buy, also depends upon a victorious peace.

For these personal and selfish reasons, farmers are vitally interested in the second Liberty Loan. They are ready to subscribe their share, according to their means, now that terms of payment have been made so convenient.

Over and above all other considerations, however, is the farmer's deeply rooted patriotism. His devotion to the American flag was shown by his unlimited sacrifices in the war to preserve the union, and again in the Spanish war, and in these latter days, by the great numbers of farmers already serving in army and navy. Indeed so many farmers have been anxious to go to the front that it is now suggested that the rest of them be required to stay at home as food producers. Every dollar that farmers subscribed to Liberty Bonds now helps by so much to win the war and to clear up labor conditions which are giving farmers so much concern. As an investment the money should be safe and yield a good return free of tax. Important as is such financial profit, it is the lease of the other and more powerful appeals that Liberty Bonds make to the patriotic farmer, and to every member of his family. As one of them writes: "All that I am or have is thine, Oh my country."

Had Narrow Escape.

"Did you attain the high ideals you set for yourself when you were young?" asked the friend of his boyhood. "No," replied the millionaire; "and I'm glad I didn't. I see now there was no money in them."

The Jeffery "Six"

---Two Power Ranges---

The "Loafing" Range

Economical Operation

In it's loafing range it exhibits all the admirable traits you would expect in an eighty horse power eight of real class.

And through all its varied performance in it's "loafing" range, it is automatically operating on half fuel rations--in fact it uses fuel so sparingly as to shame many a lesser powered six--even many a four.

The "Sporting" Range

Extravagant Performance

You have only to open the throttle wider to release her double popets and give her full rations--and utterly change her whole character.

Now you have brute power and speed that puts all ordinary contenders at your mercy--you have nothing to fea from even the few cars that rightly claim the distinction of real class.

See the Jeffery--ride in it--compare it for appearance, power, flexibility and economy with any other six or eight--and we will leave it to your judgement if it does not deserve it's name--"Amerrca's Greatest Six."

The Chevrolet

The actual worth of a motor car is in proportion to its performance under the most trying conditions. And this means in climbing ability and negotiating the roughest roads.

Chevrolet cars have sufficient power for any emergency.

See the Chevrolet and pass judgment on it.

This is the fairest way of presenting a product to you in these days when competition is keen and at a time when so many automobiles are made to fit a price.

RED CROSS NOTES

The property where Emersons have been living has been sold so Emersons are compelled to move into rooms above Frank Gruetzmacher's, now occupied by the Red Cross Society. But the Society has secured rooms in Schaffer's building, which they will occupy in a few weeks. They will meet with Mrs. Emerson until rooms are ready for use.

The spirit of loyalty displayed by one of the small girls of Klemme is to be commended, and more of us ought to get some of the same spirit. On Loyalty Day a quarter was thrown on the flag she was holding and the idea came to her that she would start a Red Cross fund Relatives and friends have donated until she now has five dollars which she is going to give to the Klemme Red Cross society. Let's more of us get the spirit.

The Red Cross will occupy the rooms in the Schaffer building after the next two meetings as the Emerson family have moved into the F. Gruetzmacher rooms.

The Red Cross benefit given in the Idle Hour Theatre last night was well attended and a nice little sum was add d to the Red Cross funds.

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

God says. "Today is the day of Salvation." And we know that time waits for no man, therefore each of us ought to do our bit, and work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work.

The first Quarterly Conference will be held Saturday evening at 7:30. Every member of the board should be present.

Preaching service at 10 o'clock a. m. Dr. Clegg will preach and administer the Lord's Supper at this service. Let every member of the church be present. We cordially invite all to hear our District Superintendent.

Sunday School at 11 o'clock. Every child in Klemme ought to be in Sunday School. If you do not attend elsewhere, come with us. We will do you good.

There will be no service in the evening but all are urged to attend the German church where there will be a union service.

Preaching service at the Hayside School house at 7:30 o'clock Sunday evening, and every other Sunday evening thereafter.

Pray r meeting at 7:30 o'clock each Thursday evening. Bring your Bibles.

The Win One class will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Schaefer for their regular monthly class meeting, Wednesday evening, October 31. Notice this is Hallowe'en night and we would like to have all present and to have a good time. A hearty welcome to all.

"The paper I showed you yesterday should have told you that," said Pachman quickly. "The affair has been in my hands from the first. The prince was sent along because his father wished to separate him from a Berlin bar maid.

"Ah, so," said the captain, without smiling. "I understand. Be seated." He did not like Pachmann, and also, perhaps, he found the jesting reference to the royal love affairs in bad taste. "A very strang thing has occurred," he continued. "I stationed one of my men outside the door, last night, in order that you might not be interrupted."

"Yes," agreed the admiral, "and he did his duty very well. We were not interrupted."

"He was found this morning, unconscious, in one of the boats on the upper deck."

Pachmann looked at the speaker in some surprise.

"Well," he asked, "what of it? Some sailor's row."

"I thought so too, at first. But he became conscious just now and declares that he was struck down from behind."

Pachmann shrugged his shoulders.

"He is probably lying. In any event, it is of no concern to me. He was on duty at the door when the conference closed."

The captain stared at him as though not understanding.

"What is it you say?" he asked.

"I say," repeated Pachmann, impatiently, "that he was on duty when we left your cabin. What happened to him after that is of no importance."

"At what hour did you leave?" asked the captain still staring.

"About midnight. Why do you look at me like that?"

"The man swears," said Hausmann, slowly, "that he was struck down after you entered the cabin."

Pachmann jumped in his chair.

"He says that!" he gasped. "But that is impossible—he is lying!"

"Perhaps you would wish to interrogate him?" Hausmann suggested.

Pachmann nodded mutely, and the captain touched a bell.

"Send Schroeder here," he said to the man who answered

The man saluted and closed the door again, and the captain and his visitor sat looking at each other in silence. Both were disturbed, but Pachmann was by far the more dismayed of the two. To his companion, it was merely a fracture of the discipline of his ship, but to Pachmann it was the end of the world! Try as he might to maintain his self composure, he could not stop the nervous trembling of his hands; and from time to time he moistened his lips and swallowed with great effort. He felt himself stricken to the heart, he scarcely dared permit himself to think what it meant for him, and his king, for Germany, if this man spoke the truth.

And then the door opened and the man himself entered—a typical German sailor, with bronzed countenance, and short curly brown beard, and honest blue eyes—not too intelligent, but faithful, strong and dependable. Yes, and honest—one could see that. He was barefooted and clad in a suit of duck, which had been white originally but was now much soiled. About his head was a bandage. He saluted and stood at attention, while Pachman looked him over.

"Tell us what occurred last night," the captain ordered "Think carefully and omit nothing."

"There is not much to tell, sir," the man replied. "You yourself gave me my orders. I was to stand out there, before the door, and prevent any one knocking. To all who asked for you, I was to say that you were on the bridge.'

The captain nodded.

"That is right," he said. "Continue."

"You then went up on the bridge, and I took the station you had assigned me. I did not know who was in the cabin but I could hear voices."

"Ah!" cried Pachmann, with a frown. "You could hear voices! Could you also hear words?"

"I do not know, sir; I did not listen. I know better than to listen when officers are talking."

"Continue," said the captain again.

"I stood there for perhaps 10 minutes. There were a few passengers strolling about further down the deck, but you had caused a rope to be stretched across to prevent any one coming as far as your cabin."

Again the captain nodded.

"Yes, I took that precaution, also," he said.

"Then," concluded Schroeder, "something struck me a great blow on the head, and I knew no more until I awoke to find the doctor working over me."

Pachmann looked at him searchingly for several minutes, but the man met his gaze without flinching.

"Are you sure that is all?" he asked.

Yes, sir"

"You do not remember standing at the door, when it was opened and saluting the gentleman who came out?"

"No, sir; I remember nothing of that."

"You say you were at the door only 10 minutes?"

"It may have been a little longer than that, sir; a very little."

"Have you had a quarrel with any member of the crew?"

"No, sir; I am on good terms with all of them."

"Think carefully, is there not one who might have wished to revenge himself?"

But Schroeder shook his head decidedly.

"It was no member of the crew, sir; not one of them is my enemy."

"Then who was it?" Pachmann demanded.

"That I cannot say, sir."

"You heard nothing before the blow was struck?"

"Nothing, sir. I have told you all I remember."

"And you persist that you have no idea who struck the blow?"

"I have not the slightest idea, sir."

Pachmann looked at Schroeder again, and then turned away.

"That is all," said the captain, "and remember, you are to speak of this to no one."

"Yes, sir," said Schroeder, and withdrew

Pachmann took a turn about he cabin, frowning heavily.

"What do you make of it?" he asked at last.

"It seems plain enough," Hausmann answered. "Some one knocked Schroeder down and took his place at the door"

"Yes, yes," cried Pachmann impatiently, "but who was it, and what was his purpose?"

"His purpose, also, seems clear to me," said the captain, quietly. "He wished to hear what was going on in my cabin."

"He was a member of your crew," said Pachmann. "I saw him—he was barefooted—he wore a uniform."

"Did you see his face? Would you know him again?"

Pachmann hesitated.

"I fear not. He was standing in the shadow, and I was preoccupied and barely glanced at him I cannot even say that it w Schroeder."

"I did not believe it w member of my crew," sa captain.

"Then who was it?"

"That, of course, I cann But why should one of m do such a thing?"

"There may be a among them."

"We know the history o man. They are all good Ge We are very careful. Bu if there was a traitor, how he know of this conferenc

Pachmann threw up his with a gesture of despai dropped into a chair.

"How would any one k he demanded. "I mentione no one but the prince an self. Vard himself did no of it till I summoned him.'

Hausmann looked at the r steadily.

"I trust that you are not insinuating that it is I who am the traitor?" he asked.

"No, no," protested Pachmann hastily. "I tell you this in order that you may realize how incredible this is to me. After all, it may have been a member of the crew who knew nothing of the conference—who was there by accident the at the moment we came out."

"I do not see," the captain began, but a knock at the door stopped him. "Come in," he called, and the wardrobe stewart entered. "Well, what is it?"

"I have to report, sir," answered the stewart, "that a suit of white duck has been stolen."

Hausmann could not refrain from casting a glance of triumph at the admiral.

"When did you discover it?" he asked.

"Only a few minutes ago, sir. I reported to the head stewart and he told me to come at once to you."

"That was right. Do you know when it was stolen?"

"Sometime during the night, sir. It had been washed and returned to me yesterday evening not quite dry. I hung it before a ventilator and when I went for it this morning, it was no longer there."

"Very well," said the captain "I will investigate the matter," and the steward left the cabin. Hausmann looked at his companion. "You see, it was not one of the crew," he said.

Pachmann was out of his chair and striding savagely up and down, his self control completely broken down. He had fancied himself quite safe, and here he was tottering on the edge of an abyss.

"It is evidently the work of a spy," added Hausmann, who, perhaps, was not wholly displeased that the admiral should have met with a reverse. "There can be no doubt of it. We know that Lepine suspects something. This is probably one of his men—and a most daring and resourceful one."

"If that is true," said Pachmann, hoarsely, "he must not leave the ship alive. We must find him. And we must watch the wireless. Every message must be most carefully inspected."

"I will see that that is done," Hausmann agreed. "But to find the man—how do you propose to accomplish that?"

"When do your officers start their examination of the passengers for the immigration record?"

"They can start at once, if you wish."

"I do wish, and I wish also to be present."

"Very well, agreed the captain. "We will start immediately after breakfast."

"You could be of very great help, captain," Pachmann added, "if you would go over the passenger list and check off the passengers with whom you are personally acquainted. No doubt you know a great many of them?"

"Yes, but the purser knows even more. Shall I ask him also to check the list?"

"If you will. It would save much time."

"You will understand," said Hausmann, slowly, "that I feel I should know more of this affair before I consent to take an active part in it, but I can, at least, save the passengers whom I know, and who are friends of mine, the annoyance of needless questioning. There is one thing more I might do; there are also on board a few men who have crossed with me before, but who, I am convinced, are not the gentlemen of wealth and leisure they pretend to be. They may be only sharpers—or they may be something else. In front of the name of each of them I will place a cross."

"Thank you," said Pachmann. "On one condition," added the the sea will be at an end—you will find all Germany closed against you."

"I will take the responsibility," said Hausmann, quietly. "You agree, then?"

"Yes, I agree," said Pachmann, and hurried away to get his breakfast.

And all that day, he sat beside the assistant purser, while the first cabin passengers were called up, one by one, to make it clear that they were entitled to land in America. The questions are always searching, for the immigration laws are very strict and there are many spaces to be filled in on the great blanks which the immigration bureau furnishes; but that day they were more searching than ever—so far, at least, as the male passengers were concerned. In the women, Pachmann did not interest himself, for he took it for granted that no woman could have struck Schroeder senseless with a single blow; but on every man he directed the severest scrutiny.

Even if the name had been checked by the captain or purser on the list he held in his hand, he never failed to satisfy himself by a few questions; and the unfortunate possessors of the names before which a cross appeared had reason to remember that interrogation all their lives. With some three or four of them, the interrogation was continued in private and even extended to a search of their belongings and a scrutiny of every document in their possession, but, while some of them were forced to confess at last that they were adventurers, gamblers, with only such means of livelihood as their wits procured them, there was nothing to show that any of them was the agent of any government.

All day Saturday the examination was continued, and by dinner time the first class list was completed, much to the relief of the passengers, who came away from the interrogation with ruffled tempers and a feeling of humiliation. All sorts of rumors were afloat among them. There was an absconder on board, a murderer, a political refugee, an eloping couple—the customs authorities had got wind of the fact that there was a celebrated smuggler on board, and every passenger was to be searched when he reached the pier—the rumors ran the gamut of all crimes and all scandals, and made every one extremely uncomfortable, but none of them touched the truth

And Pachmann had to confess himself, thus far, defeated. There remained the second class, and he determined to scrutinize it even more closely than he had the first. The thought that he might fail, after all, dismayed him. To fail meant disgrace—personal, irremediable disgrace, it meant the betrayal of his emperor; worse than that, in his failure France would triumph' He trembled with anguish not wholly for himself, for he was a brave man and a patriot—but for his fatherland.

So Saturday evening came, and with it the hour of the second conference.

For the other personages of this story, those two days had been rather eventless ones. The weather continued fine and the great ship ploughed steadily westward. The passengers got to know each other; little cliques were formed, centering about mutual acquaintances; there were card parties, dances, the inevitable concert, dinners in the cafe, the usual pools, the usual night long games of poker, the usual excitements of passing ships and schools of dolphins—in a word, the usual procession of trivial incidents which make up life on a great liner.

But in this life, Ignace Vard and his daughter had no part. Their meals were served in their sitting room, so that they missed that great acquaintance maker, the dinner table. Kasia, remembering the warning she had received, kept aloof from every one; and Vard's ironical manner was enough to keep every one aloof from him. However he did not notice it, for he had discovered, among the books in the library, three novels by Mr. John Galsworthy, and they absorbed him. He had been looking through the books rather hopelessly, when the title, "The Island Pharisees," had caught his eye. He opened the book, read a page, took it to his room and finished it at a sitting. Its irony expressed him precisely, and over the letter of apology and adieu from the wandering Frenchman to the lady of the manor he fairly wept with joy. After that came "Fraternity" and "The Man of Property," so that for him the two days passed quickly. One thing about these books he could not understand—that they should have been written by an Englishman!

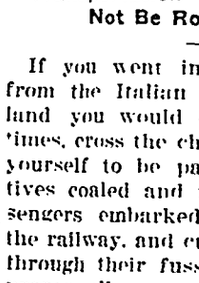
Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.



You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or Aircraft Promises Such Swift and Easy Transportation That Peoples Will Not Be Rooted in Soil.

If you went in the ordinary way from the Italian city Turin to England you would change trains three times, cross the channel by boat, force yourself to be patient while locomotives coaled and took on water, passengers embarked or alighted along the railway, and customs' officers went through their fussy examinations. A proper allowance of time, we would say, would be 36 hours.

The other day, Captain Laurlat of the Italian aviation corps made the journey by airplane in 12 hours and two minutes. For him, there was no such thing as frontiers, no delays except those he himself willed, no officials in seedy uniforms to make a mess of his baggage unless he elected to let them

It is the idea of internationalists that we'll have a world state when everything is so mixed that there is no straightening it out by national command, when borders can be crossed as one would county lines, when transportation is so swift and easy that no peoples can be or will desire to be rooted in the soil. WHAT IS A GOVERNMENT BOND?

Issued by the Committee on Public Information

Q. When I lend my money to the United States government, what do I get in return?

A. You get a promissory note given by the United States government and bearing interest. This note is called a "bond."

Q. What then, is a United States government bond?

A. It is the direct and unconditional promise of the United States of America to pay upon a certain date a specified sum of money in gold, together with interest at a specific rate, payable at specific dates until the bond matures, or is called for redemption.

Q. In what form is this promise?

A. It is engraved upon a sheet of distinctive paper used only for the money and securities of the United States, and is executed by the secretary of the treasury and by the registrar of the treasury and sealed with the treasury department seal.

Q. When are bonds of the second Liberty loan dated?

A. November 15, 1917, is the date they will bear, because that is the date on which they will be issued by the government and the date on which interest begins.

Q. When will these bonds be paid by the government, that is, when will they become due?

A. November 15, 1942, but the government has the right to pay them any time after 10 years from date of the bond?

Now the second Liberty loan is launched. The greatest business house in the world—the United States—asks you to be a stockholder. The money you invest will earn you 4 per cent. It will make you one with the patriot who penned the declaration of independence and wrote that "our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor were pledged to liberty."

It is your duty, as it is mine, to invest every dollar we can spare in the Liberty loan, which is truly government preferred.

Above all, as we value the future and the citizenship of the future, encourage your children and your neighbors' children to form Liberty loan clubs and pool their savings in these bonds of our government.

Canada's Grain Crops.

United State Consular Report

According to the preliminary estimates of the census and statistics office for the end of August, 1917, the Canadian wheat crop will amount to 249,164,700 bushels from 14,755,800 acres, with average yield per acre of 16.88 bushels as compared with 17 bushels in 1916 and 29 bushels in 1915. This represents an increase of 19,851,700 bushels or 8 per cent over the crop of 1916.

The total yield of oats in 1917 is estimated at 399,843,000 bushels from 12,062,000 acres harvested, as compared with 365,553,000 bushels from 10,178,000 acres in 1916. The yield per acre of the harvested area (after deduction for areas not ripened into grain) for all Canada is 33.18 bushels as compared with 35.91 bushels in 1916 and 45.81 bushels in 1915.

The estimate for rye is 4,194,950 bushels from 211,870 acres as compared with 2,967,400 bushels from 148,620 acres in 1916, the yield per acre being nearly 20 bushels in both years. The estimate for barley is 59,318,400 bushels from 2,592,200 acres as against 42,647,000 bushels from 1,768,700 acres in 1916. The total yield of flax seed is placed at 10,067,500 bushels from 1,242,000 acres as compared with 7,216,300 bushels from 622,000 acres harvested in 1916, the average yield per acre being 8.11 bushels in 1917 and 11½ bushels in 1916.

At the end of August the condition of field crops for Canada expressed in percentage of a standard representing a full crop was as follows: Spring wheat 73, oats 76, barley 75, rye 82, peas 76, beans 81, buckwheat 95, mixed grains 88, flax 63, corn for husking 73, potatoes 77, turnips 84, mangolds etc. 83, alfalfa 87, corn for fodder 81, sugar beets 89, pasture 87, and hay and clover 96.

Hoisted by His Own Petard.

From the Milwaukee Journal

Among the tales and arguments used to excite sympathy for Germany in the United States is the oft repeated complaint that we did not force Great Britain to let shipments of foodstuffs reach Germany. "Washington is helping Great Britain to starve the people of Germany," is a cry that originated in Germany and has been repeated in this country times without end.

In his narrative, "My Four Years in Germany," ex-Ambassador Gerard clears up this point very conclusively. The German government it will be remembered, tried to justify the sinking of the American schooner Frye, laden with wheat, on the ground that its cargo was destined for an armed port of the enemy. Parenthetically it may be stated that the sinking of the Frye, as has been pointed out before, was a clear violation of an existing treaty between the United States and Germany, and that the Frye's cargo was not consigned to an armed port in Germany in the sense at least that that port was a fortress or a military establishment.

Talking to Von Jago, Germany's foreign minister, Mr. Gerard shattered the German case. He pointed out that all foodstuffs shipped to Germany would have to be landed at armed ports. In other words, all of Germany's ports were armed, and Germany's arguments in the Frye case was justification for Great Britain's stopping shipments of food to Germany. It is quite a typical end to typical German diplomacy and propaganda.

King Hog Will Win.

From the Omaha Bee.

"The hog will win the war," said Gifford Pinchot, special lieutenant to Food Administrator Herbert Hoover, in an address before visitors at the Second National Swine show now in progress at the South Omaha horse and mule market.

"The wheat situation has been taken care of. It is now up to the housewife to conserve the bread in the home. The cattle situation is not alarming. The hog men now occupy the center of the stage and they have more to do with the settling of the war than any other body of men in the world.

"The gravest danger in France and England today is shortage of stock. This shortage will be felt here soon, as the season is now at hand when the farmer sells his hogs to the packer. We must prepare to raise 25 per cent more hogs than we have now. This means that we will have to raise between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 more hogs. The hog situation will be the most acute within the next 30 days.

"The most critical situation in the war today is the meat situation and I am here to get your opinions as to the most feasible way to relieve it. The quickest way to secure meat is through the hog and for that reason we believe that you men are best situated to give advice for relieving the meat shortage. I am here to get your opinions and trust that you will frankly tell me of any plans you may have in mind."

The Patriotism of Song.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Major General Bell has happily succumbed to the catch phrase that "a singing man is a fighting man." To prove that this is true, he has already started a public subscription fund with which to purchase musical instruments and copies of popular songs for the soldiers to be trained at Camp Upton, Yaphank, Long Island. When that chorus gets going it will be the mightiest ever heard on this continent.

Similar movements ought to be inaugurated in all the cantonments. The psychological effect of a good song well sung by a fighting army is terrific. That intangible factor of victory called morale has no better ally than spirited music. Germany employed this asset to the fullest extent when her troops broke all marching records with the conquest of 25 miles a day during the early rush through Belgium. Such advances, even with melody to help, are, of course, out of the question under the present conditions of warfare, but even when the playing of a weary waiting game is demanded, the patriotic inspiration of song is invaluable.

GERMANY ORGANIZES ENTIRE AIR SERVICE

Paris Aug. 9.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—The entrance of America into the war and the probability that it soon would be lending the allies tremendous aid in the aerial department of the struggle has led Germany to reorganize and strengthen its own aviation branches materially, according to the Temps. This reorganization does not date exclusively from the break with the United States, but rather from the battle of the Somme, but it has been accelerated and intensified by the reports that hundreds if not thousands of airplanes, with the corresponding aviators to mann them, are soon to be supplied to the entente forces.

The reorganization of the German aerial forces has taken the form of creating four principal divisions into which the fliers are now placed, roughly as follows:

1. Army squadrillas or "army fliers' division," which are directly under the command of the army chief of aviation and the work of which consists mainly of expeditions far to the rear of the lines. They also are employed for bombardments, night flights, photographic work, and the airplanes employed are of the most varied type, according to the character of the work they are to do.

Recently captured prisoners say that a recently constructed biplane of the Albatross type is vastly superior to anything heretofore used by these squadrillas. It is equipped with a 260 horse power motor and attains a speed of from 100 to 115 miles an hour. It can rise to an altitude of more than 2,000 yards in nine minutes and carries two machine guns. The machines travel in groups of six or eight, according to the position and needs of the army to which they are attached.

2. Corps squadrillas or "troop fliers," which are attached to the staff headquarters of the various German armies and which are commanded by captains. These generally remain within the sector of the armies to which they are attached and are used in general for reconnoissances, photographing trenches, batteries and making patrol flights.

3. Hunting squadrillas, as they are called both by the French and the Germans, are the main attacking instruments of the German air forces, and for chasing enemy machines which venture over their lines. They are charged with the destruction of the destruction of the stationary balloons.

On the west front, it is estimated, there are about 40 of these squadrillas, with about a dozen machines to each. Others in the same category have as their duty the protection of the large German cities that lie within airplane flight of the French and English, such as Strasburg, Freiburg, Mulhouse, Friedrichshafen, Stuttgart, Essen, Cologne and Treves. The pilots of these squadrillas are carefully chosen from among the best of the German aviators, and their exploits are encouraged by frequent mention in the general staff reports.

4. Battle squadrillas or "flotillas" are under the direction of great headquarters, and shift from army to army to carry out bombardments on military establishments behind the front, as well as ever and again upon open towns.

There are three of these squadrillas now. Formerly there were more, but the others have been dismembered and their units attached to other arms of the aerial service. Squadrillas one and two are generally transported by train from place to place, wherever they are most needed.

There are from 40 to 50 machines in each squadrilla, which when complete and ready for action is divided into four or five sections. Each airplane is armed with two machine guns and each carries bombs weighing 20 to 100 pounds apiece. Some are said to carry bombs that weigh more than 200 pounds.

While perfecting their service in the air, the Germans have also rapidly bettered their anti-aircraft measures and weapons. The 77 billimeter guns have given way to rapid firing guns of 105 millimeter caliber, and at certain points along the front they use shrapnel guns of 240 millimeter size.

They possess special bullets for the destruction of captive balloons, but in many instances have used them with great cruelty against opponents in airplanes. At least one squadrilla captain, a Lieutenant Ellers, finally forbade his men to carry these bullets with them unless they were definitely charged with raiding balloons.

The Germans, it is said, are constantly putting new types of machines into the field. The famous Taube went out of style long ago, and it has now been followed by the even more famous Fokker, which less than a year ago was considered the last and final word in attacking airplanes. Its inventor, a Dutchman, is now said to be devoting himself to the perfection of a machine with a 260 horsepower motor which will break all records for speed and efficiency.

Today the Rumpler seems to be the favorite machine, though those with 160 horsepower motors are not fast enough to suit, and yet the machines will hardly stand up under a heavier motor. The raids on London were accomplished with Gotha machines, but these, though so recent that little is known about them in France, are already giving way to faster airplanes, especially to powerful Rumpler biplanes which have tremendous speed and rising power. These machines, of which there are not fewer than 30 in the third battle flotilla, can make great distances both because of their powerful motors and because of their huge gasoline tanks.

London 'Phone Girls Brave.

From the London Telegraph and Telephone News.

Scenes of bravery among the girls of a London telephone exchange during the recent air raid are vividly described by J. W. Kennedy, who was present. He says:

"Bombs were actually dropping in the immediate vicinity, while the presence of airmen over and on both sides of the building was reported and while the smoke from exploded bombs was distinctly seen from the windows, and through it all the supervisor nearest to me hovered over her section like a strong spirit seeking to help those under her charge.

"I can paint no picture of stoical insensibility. Some nervous cries there were as the bombs dropped, white faces were the rule, but in many of these the lines of determination were the strongest. Silent tears were dropped, but only for a moment. No one near me left her post, and calls were passing and cords connected with the music of death in our ears.

"So near and insistent was the horrible thud of the bombs that most of us thought that some part of the building had been struck. It seemed to us that the rattle of guns continued longer than even during Zeppelin raids. Some day it may add some value to our lives to know that there were times when, for duty's sake, we faced the chance of death. It must add infinitely more to the lives of women, whose finer nervous and physical organization makes them feel more acutely."

Overworked Women must learn not to neglect their health

How Women are Restored to Health

Spartanburg, S.C.—"For nine years I suffered from backache, weakness, and irregularities so I could hardly do my work. I tried many remedies but found no permanent relief. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I felt a great change for the better and am now well and strong so I have no trouble in doing my work. I hope every user of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will get as great relief as I did from its use."—Mrs. S. D. McABEE, 122 Dewey Ave., Spartanburg, S. C.

Chicago, Ill.—"For about two years I suffered from a female trouble so I was unable to walk or do any of my own work. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers and determined to try it. It brought almost immediate relief. My weakness has entirely disappeared and I never had better health. I weigh 165 pounds and am as strong as a man. I think money is well spent which purchases Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Jos. O'BRYAN, 1755 Newport Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A Saxon-French Cigar Lighter.

Several years ago the then new minister of France, M. Klotz, decided to impose a tax of two francs, or 40 cents American money, on each cigar lighter used in that country. The reason for this is that the sale of matches in France is in the hands of the government monopoly and the portable lighters interfered with the sale of the matches. On the other hand the matches have become so bad in quality that they are subject of complaint and ridicule. The law has become unpopular and there is an effort now being made to have the order rescinded. Notwithstanding the fact that an increased tax was placed on tobacco by the French government several years ago, it has caused a tendency to increase smoking and that is proven by the many smokers to be seen in public places and thoroughfares.

They Just Had to Wait.

Something was the matter with the stop-signal bell of the Toonerville trolley car, and the conductor had to whistle to the motorman, that trip—one whistle to start, two whistles to go ahead.

This wasn't the real Toonerville trolley, but a certain suburban "dummy line" which is so denominated by the facetious car riders.

At one place, the other morning, the car made a long stop, and some of the passengers began to get uneasy. One sought the rear platform and found the conductor eating a frugal luncheon.

"Say, how long we goin' to stand here? What are we waitin' for?" asked the passenger.

The conductor swallowed hard and was understood to reply:

"Looky here, I ain't got nothin' but dry crackers fer my lunch. An' you'll hafter wait till I git 'em all swallered good before I kin whistle!"—Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

Kept His Word.

"I haven't any case," admitted the client, "but I have money."

"How much?"

"Sixty thousand dollars."

"Phew! You have the best case I ever handled," said the lawyer. "I'll see that you never go to prison with that sum."

And the client didn't—he went there broke.

Unable to Read.

Recruit Didn't Have It.

While we are on military matters it might be just as well to give forth to a palpitating world, all eager for anything that has to do with a gun, the latest thing that the enterprising press agent of the Marine Corps has turned out. This soldier of the sea tells many stories. You can believe them or not, just as you please, writes a correspondent.

He says that knowledge of the rifle and all its parts is an important part of the training given to the marines at their League Island camp. To the raw recruits the rifles are pretty puzzling.

During the morning inspection recently one of the future sea soldiers handled his rifle poorly. The recruit was taken to task by his officer.

"Are you acquainted with the parts of your rifle?" asked the officer, sternly.

"Yes, sir," the recruit replied.

"Well, where is the balance located?"

"I don't know, sir," said the marine, glancing nervously at his rifle. "It was all here this morning."

His Profits.

"How did your patriotic garden work out?"

"I've just figured it out. We got at least twenty cents' worth of radishes out of it."

A CHALLENGE

We have a man living a few miles east of Klemme who is very fast at picking corn. We believe he is the best corn picker in our territory. He seldom picks less than 150 bu. any day, besides doing chores and unloading his corn. He is 31 years of age, strong of muscle and quick of action. We refer to Guy Dodd of the Tindon Ranch.

Mr. Dodd claims that he can pick more corn than any man in Hancock or Cerro Gordo county and will bet the value of the corn picked by him in a contest that he can do it.

We have several fields of good corn adjoining Klemme where we would like to have several of our fast pickers meet and settle this question as to who is the best picker in our territory.

Everyone in Hancock or Cerro Gordo County who can pick over 150 bushels in ten hours is invited to take part in a huge contest, each picker in the contest to have two wagons and drivers and the drivers will attend to the unloading. The contestant will only pick for all he is worth for ten hours. The date and purses and other arrangements will be determined when we hear from all those who desire to enter the contest.

All fast pickers in Hancock and Cerro Gordo should write at once to C. W. Wiles, President Commercial League, Klemme, Iowa.

HALLOWE'EN PARTY

The Misses Hulda and Esther Gruetzmacher invited about thirty of their friends to a Hallowe'en Party which was held last Friday evening at the John Gruetzmacher home in the south part of the city.

On entering the house one was confronted with jack-o-lanterns on the porch. Entering the door the guests were escorted with a number of ghosts and witches up a flight of stairs darkened in a witchy fashion. Reaching the top the victim of the ghost or witch was nearly taken off his feet when a section of the floor seemed to roll away from him and sending him forward.

The house was beautifully decorated in Autumn's latest fashion of corn stalks, black cats, witches, ghosts, dimmed lights and last, but not least, a very realistic fire place added the finishing touches to the Hallowe'en scene.

Numerous games were played in accord to the Hallowe'en spirit. Many tricks were also played by the witches —mostly playing tricks on the men present who, it seems, were the victims of this occasion and it seems the witches took pride in playing pranks on the young men. Fortunes were told by a witch dipping fateful messages from a boiling caldron.

After numerous games had been played and various "stunts pulled off" the guests were treated to a real Hallowe'en lunch consisting of pumpkin pie, doughnuts and coffee.

At a late hour the happy gathering departed for home each expressing the good time had at this Hallowe'en party.

Meat Diet and Bad Temper.

Do you know that meat eating is said to be responsible for bad temper? The philosophy of this is that meat is a stimulant, and that after the brief happy effect of this stimulant has worn off there comes a long effect of ill-humor and irritability. All heavy meat eaters are said to have bad dispositions because they are always suffering from their food's aftermath. That is what the vegetarians affirm. Meat eaters consider the charge purely fanciful.

Czechs Branch of Slavs.

The Czechs are the westernmost branch of the Slavs, their name being derived, according to tradition, from that of a noted ancestral chief. The term Bohemia was applied to the country probably during the Roman times and was derived, like that of Bavaria, from the Boii, who for some time before the Christian era occupied or claimed parts of these regions.

Paris Postwomen.

Paris, France, is putting its entire mail distribution system into the hands of women carriers. Experiments in two districts proved highly successful, so the plan is to be made general. Women made the rounds faster and delivered more mail in less time than men. Women carriers are to have a severely plain special uniform and are to be paid $1.19 a day more than men received before the war.

SCHOOL NEWS

Oscar Schuldt, Editor

Howard Terhufen was absent from school Friday.

Enough snow fell last Saturday night to hinder basket ball practice.

Rev. Howdeshell visited school last week Thursday afternoon and made his visit very interesting by entertaining the boys at recess. Why not appoint him as scout master?

Oscar Schuldt returned to his school duties after an absence of several days.

The basket social which was held at the "Idle Hour" theater wsa well attended. Thirty-five baskets were sold for which we received $52.91, through the efforts of Mr. Rasmstma, the local auctioneer. We hereby thank him very much.

Herold Ridder was absent from school Monday.

The bust of James Whitcomb Riley and the oil painting of the famous "Old Swimming Hole," arrived the early part of this week.

The storm windows were adjusted the early part of this week which makes it more comfortable in the school room.

The program which was held last Friday afternoon was attended by four visitors, but we hope to have more next time for we like to see our patrons take an interest in our school affairs.

RED CROSS NOTES

The benefit given for Klemme Red Cross Society on last Wednesday was well attended and we were glad to see so many people show their loyalty and support by patronizing our first benefit.

The Red Cross Society wishes to thank the Editor for printing tickets for which he would not take a cent. Also the young people who furnished the music, which we are sure was appreciated by all.

Mr. Koerner gave telephone call on rural lines thereby doing his share in helping a good cause.

The Society received $41 as their share of the proceeds which was one-half of the proceeds, Dr. Parson bearing all expense which we are sure was very generous.

On Wednesday when the reels came Dr. Parsons found them in such shape that he could not use them. But he proved equal to the emergency. He got busy and through kindness of Garner was able to get pictures. Though not the pictures intended for that evening they served the purpose.

The following is a list of our members. Have your name here next week. Where could a person be more proud to see it than listed as a worker for the soldiers of their country?

Lillian's father had been traveling for his health and the little girl hadn't seen him for a year. When he went away he was thin and pale and wore a Vandyke beard and a mustache. Lillian was called downstairs and looked the big, clean-shaven man over shyly. When asked if she knew who it was, she answered thoughtfully: "I—I think it's a friend of my papa's."

"WHERE HAS THE MONEY GONE?"

Face to face with a new month and nothing on hand but bills, Bills, BILLS!

That is the situation that confronts many men and women in Klemme the first of every month, and most of them make good money, too.

The reason is that they do not keep an accurate account of how their money is being spent. A check-account at this bank is a check on expenditures.

Pay by check and you can have a receipt for every purchase—and an accurate account of to whom, for what and how much money has been paid.

A Modern Refrigerating System Keeps Our Meats in Excellent Condition

THE SOMME AND THIRD "WIPERS"

By FRANK H. SIMONDS,

Copyright 1917—The Tribune Ass'n (The New York Tribune).

In recent articles I have described the geography and the recent war history of the Ypres salient. In the present article I shall try to outline the actual achievement and the eventual purpose of the attacks now being made on the Flanders front and also to compare them with the first offensive of the "new" British armies—that at the Somme last year.

At the outset it is necessary to recall that the British in Flanders, with useful and gallant but relatively inconsiderable French aid, are now engaged in driving a wedge between the German armies along the Belgian coast and the main German forces in line from Lille to the Swiss frontier.

At the moment when these lines are written the point of the wedge has almost attained Passchendaele and the immediate objective is Roulers, rather less than half a dozen miles northeast of Passchendaele. As the wedge is thrust forward there is a pause from time to time at the apex and attacks are made upon the sides to widen the wedge itself. The recent French attack east of Langemarck, which coincided with a British thrust at the apex, was for this purpose, and we may expect an early attack toward Becelaere, Gheluvelt and Zandvoorde for the same purpose.

A two-fold strategy is here disclosed. As he drives this wedge forward Haig will cut the lines of communication connecting the Germans on the sea coast both with the mass of the German armies and with their own bases of supplies. Already the advance has approached the Lille-Ostend railroad, one of the two vital lines of communication, and the British guns are as near this railroad as were the Germans to the main Verdun line, that coming up from Chalons, which their guns blocked.

Strategic Railway Crippled.

We may regard this railroad and the parallel highway as now practically out of business. When the point of the wedge arrives at Roulers, British guns will in the same fashion cut a second and only less important line from Ghent through Thielt and Thourout to Ostend. There will then remain only the trunk line from Ghent through Bruges to the coast, which runs a dozen miles to the north of Roulers. Were this cut, then all the German positions on the coast from the Dutch frontier to Nieuport would have to go; they would be isolated. In point of fact, before the British reached this Ghent-Bruges line German retreat would be inevitable, since the peril of envelopment and capture would be very great.

This aspect of the British strategy has been apparent from the outset and has been freely discussed in the press and foreign comment. It acquires importance from the fact that the submarine base of Zeebrugge, one of the most troublesome of the German submarine nests, would be abolished should the Germans be compelled to leave the Belgian coast. There would be less air raiding of London, too, once this base on nearby Belgian soil was disposed of.

Yet, recognizing the importance of abolishing the submarine base at Zeebrugge, it still seems to me that too little attention has been paid to the far more important threat this British advance carries to the whole German position in France from Lillie to Verdun. For as the British advance they are slowly but surely encircling Lille, moving across its northward lines of communication and reaching for those to the eastward, which are life lines.

When the British reach Menin, as they are now sure to do, for they have mastered the dominating ridge to the westward of this town and nearly all the high ground on the west bank of the Lys, they will be nearer to Brussels than the Germans in Lille are and will either hold or by their artillery cut many of the Lille roads, including that railway line leading to Ghent and Antwerp which is only less important than the Lille-Brussels main line to the eastward.

Now, recall for a moment the events at the Somme. The British and French were then operating on the northern side of the great salient of which Noyon was the apex. They were aiming at the railways and high roads serving this salient and moving across the rear of the salient itself. The operation was quite the same as the British operation north of Lille today By November 1 of last year the British and French were close to Bapaume and Peronne, just as now the British are approaching Roulers and Menin.

Teuton Retreat Imminent.

The threat to the Noyon salient last year produced the great German retreat of this spring, a retreat from all the German lines between Arras and Noyon, which was expanded by reason of the French attacks at the Aisne and the British victory at Arras Now, when the British get Roulers and Menin the peril to the Germans east and west of the wedge will be unmistakable, and before the British reach Courtrai, half a dozen miles east and down stream from Menin, the Germans will have to clear out of the Lille salient

A German withdrawal from Lille would mean the evacuation of all French territory between Verdun and Lille—that is, all French territory west of the Meuse—and such an evacuation would be wholly analogous to the retreat from the Noyon salient last spring. Actually the whole German position from Lille to Verdun is a great salient, many times larger than the Noyan salient, but not otherwise differing from it, and the British attack at Ypres this year corresponds exactly with the Anglo-French attack at the Somme last year.

Lille is the anchorage of the whole German line from Switzerland to the Flanders front. Its forts, partially dismantled, its railroads and highways give it very great value. It cannot be attacked without certain destruction, and it is one of the great cities of France. But once the Germans are out of it, their next good line is from Antwerp to Namur, covering Brussels, and thence behind the Meuse right down to the hills they hold on the east bank of the Meuse below Verdun. If Lille is lost, then, although there may be a temporary halt behind the Scheldt from Tournai north to hold the Zeebrugge base, the Germans will have to retire to the Antwerp-Brussels-Verdun line with little delay.

This, as I see it, is the larger and the real meaning of the British thrust in Flanders, which is moving down the Lys valley toward Menin, with Ghent as a remoter objective, and also toward Roulers, with Bruges as a similar goal. Long before the line of Bruges-Ghent is reached the Germans will be behind the Scheldt and the Meuse. Whether the British will reach Menin and Roulers this year or not depends almost wholly on the weather, but as this has turned bad there are some doubts in all minds now as to the future of this year's operations. But, bad weather and all, the British have been moving at a rate of something like a mile a week for the last month, a rate far swifter than anything they achieved at the Somme. With a little luck they may yet get to Menin this fall; anyway, they should get as near to that town as they did to Bapaume last year, and as they approach Menin their threat to the Lille position will be quite as immediate as the threat to the Noyon salient incident to British advances at the Somme last autumn.

Now, as last year, the Germans are plainly making a desperate effort to hold on until bad weather ends the campaign. To retreat now, to make such a retreat as they would have to make if they were turned out of Lille, would be to let the cat out of the bag; it would be to disclose their defeat on that map Bethmann-Hollweg once talked about. This retreat would abandon some 6,000 square miles of northern France, three-quarters of what they hold, together with 3,000 or 4,000 square miles of Belgian territory. Last spring they gave up only 1,000 square miles, and were able to explain this, after a fashion, as a strategic retreat. No such explanation would do for a retreat behind the Scheldt and the Meuse; this would be a confession pure and simple.

Berlin Plans Peace Campaign.

Germany is planning a peace campaign this winter. She hopes to be able to assert that the war has become a deadlock and that her lines cannot be pierced, although at the cost of great losses they may be bent back here and there. Precisely this claim is being supported by many thoughtless writers upon the military situation of today, just as the last ditch of the confederacy before Richmond was heralded by southern writers and by their northern dupes as "impregnable." The same sort of nonsense is being talked now, and Germany will turn it to her advantage a little later.

The truth is otherwise. Germany will have to retreat in the spring, if she escapes the necessity this autumn because of the onset of bad weather. When she retreats the world will perceive that she has lost the war. There will be no further possibility of concealing the fact, because the retrreat will be so considerable. But for the winter, if she can hold on, Germany will have a show of an argument for her assertion that the war is a hopeless deadlock and a useless slaughter that can end only in stalemate. Actually her appeal will be made to the pacifists, the weak-kneed and the disloyal in all countries fighting her.

We are seeing one of the greatest campaigns of human history, we are seeing the fight between two great races. What the Germans hoped would come eventually, but not until they had disposed of their continental rivals first, has happened. Briton and German are fighting a contest surpassing the Napoleonic drama, and in this struggle the German, already weakened by his struggle with the French, is losing surely, if slowly The British army has now taken over practically the whole offensive task in the west. France did her work at the Marne in 1914, at Verdun in 1916. Britain began at the Somme last year still aided by the French, but now she has arrived and is "carrying on" until that hour when, if necessary, our millions shall arrive to relieve her.

Every comparison that one can make between the achievement of Haig's army this year and last demonstrates the enormous improvement that has been made Last year the British began at the Somme with a green army, their artillery was but little trained, they had men, munitions, machinery but they did not have a machine. When they finished this battle, which was, in fact, a training school, they had the machine, although they had paid dearly to assemble it. At the taking of Beaumont-Hamel last November the British demonstrated that they were superior in men, guns and aircraft; they had wrested the superiority from the German's hand: he has not regained it.

Britons Have Gained Heavily.

This year the British began where they left off a year ago. The German had abandoned his old style of defense. The Somme had doomed the defense based upon huge redoubts, deep dugouts and similar works. The Somme had proved that these could be destroyed at a greater cost to the defender than to the assailant. Therefore the German had recourse to a new system. He held his front by light works, concreted shell craters, little machine gun shelters, he put few troops in the front line and counter attacked vigorously when the British advance had slowed down.

But this method has failed, too. Today the British are getting on more rapidly than they ever did at the Somme. The "elastic" defense has gone the way of last year's system. The British have got the Messines-Passchendaele ridge, as they took Albert ridge, they are approaching Roulers, as they approached Bapaume. Only the weather remains the sure Teutonic ally; bad last autumn early, it is worse this year even earlier

The British army is at its best this year; it will be little weaker next year, but thereafter its decline will be relatively rapid, as its losses exceed its reserves. Next year the United States can do little; less than the British did in 1915, much less But in 1919, if the war reaches that year, we shall be able to deliver the knockout blow, replacing the British as they have this year replaced the French. Next year it will still be the British who will have the heat of the day, but our contingent will be growing, and its aid to France, comparatively small though it will be, will give the French a greater reserve than the Germans can possibly have in 1918.

Meantime no one should make the mistake of judging the results from the map alone or mainly. Here we are in late October and the campaign of 1917 is drawing to a close without a single considerable German success or even a respectably impressive offensive east or west. In 1914 we had the Marne and the bid for Calais; in 1915 the great Russian campaign and the push through Serbia; in 1916 the drive that wrecked Rumania and destroyed all allied hopes of a decision last year. Everywhere on the western front where there has been action the German line has gone back. Nowhere on any front, save about Riga, has there been anything like an attack; such gains as were made in Galicia were due solely to the collapse of the Russian armies.

The Russian collapse has set free many thousands of German troops for use in the west; it has released many guns and huge stocks of munitions, but with all these the Germans have not been able to hold their own, much less attack. From Verdun to the sea they have recoiled before each attack, and they are now recoiling on the anniversary of the opening of the first battle of Ypres, which was to open the road to Calais. Germany affected to believe Britain would never arrive in time Britain has arrived and we are coming. Meantime there has been no German victory, and Germany, having fought France and Russia for more than two years while Britain was preparing, has now to face a relatively fresh Britain, while still a fourth foe, the United States, is training her millions and equipping them.

Unmistakably we are over the crest of the hill. Only weakness in spirit now, only the failure of those behind the front in France, Britain and the United States, can prevent the realization of the fruits of the great sacrifices and the splendid devotion of recent years. And unless there is a decisive military victory over Germany the real goal will not be attained and the work may have to be done again. The German army must be decisively beaten upon the battle field, beaten so that its defeat will be obvious, first in Germany and then elsewhere. Once this has been done the end of the war will be within sight. It is not necessary to occupy Berlin or cross the Rhine; but if the German menace to civilization is to be abolished it must be abolished by such an allied victory as will strip the German military machine of the last claim to invincibility, a claim nowhere recognized now save in Germany and among the faint hearts and pro-Germans in allied countries.

The Somme deprived the Germans of the offensive in the west. The battles of Arras and the Aisne this spring deprived them of the power to attack on any front on a considerable scale. The Ypres campaign has demonstrated unmistakably German inferiority in the field and the rapid decline alike of German numbers and German morale. Their machine, the great Prussian military machine, is slowly, but surely, going to pieces.

On the military side the defeat of Germany has been made certain, as certain as anything in the future can be, if the war is continued for another campaign. The greatest German retreat since the Marne has already been made practically inescapable, either this fall or next spring, with the date depending upon the weather and not upon German efforts.

In the history of the world war 1917 may not possibly have the same value that 1864 had in the history of our civil war. On the map and in the mouths of disloyal northerners, the civil war then seemed a deadlock. The Richmond newspapers trumpeted forth claims identical with those that come from Berlin today. Yet 1864 broke the back and the heart of the confederacy. The south had not the men to replace its losses in the bloody battles from the Rapidan to Cold Harbor—battles far less satisfactory to Grant than British struggles this year must be to Haig. Germany shows equally clear evidences of failing man power and decaying material strength. She has lost much, won nothing and talks peace with ever growing passion. This is her military history in 1917. If one could bring one's self to read what the Germans forecast before the war for their armies, the extent of the disaster would not be hidden.

A Warning to France.

John Galsworthy, in the Atlantic Monthly

France! Be warned in time by our dismal fate! Do not lose your love of the land, do not let industrialism absorb your peasantry, and the lure of wealth and the cheap glamour of the towns draw you into their uncharmed circles. We English have rattled deep into a paradise of machines, chimneys cinemas, and half penny papers, have bartered our heritage of health dignity, and looks for wealth, and badly distributed wealth at that.

You were trembling on the verge of the same precipice when the war came, with its death and wind of restlessness the war bids fair to tip you over Hold back with all your might! Your two dangers are drink and the lure of the big towns. No race can preserve sanity and refinement that really gives way to these. You will not fare even as well as we have if you yield; our fiber is coarser and more resistant than yours, nor had we ever so much grace to lose.

It is by grace and self respect that you have had your pre-eminence, let these wither as they must in the grip of a sordid and drink soothed industrialism, and your star will burn out. The life of have their roots and being in the realities of life close to nature, and keep a sort of simple dignity and health that great towns destroy Take care of your peasants and your country will take care of itself.

Our Street Car Manners.

From the Yale Review

As for manners, we are kind hearted as a people and civil when appealed to but no one would suspect it if our bearing in thoroughfares and street cars be a criterion. The spirit of the age is first come, first served, to be waived only in favor of the crippled and the positively infirm. Courtesy in the old fashioned sense—the deference of the young for their seniors, of the stronger for the weaker sex, of the vigorous for the frail—if not extinct is so sporadic as to be noticeable when manifested.

The young men who push their way to the fore in public conveyances retain without compunction the seats for which they have struggled Here again we have the philosophy of the tired business man—'I got there first; we are all equals in the United States, and I want to read my newspaper' The apotheosis of naturalness, and in self defense we all more or less subscribe to it; but after all it is natural for pigs to struggle for places at a trough. Well may we ask ourselves if it is impossible to safeguard independence, initiative and equality except at the cost of all the social graces that prevailed when society was more artificial.

A New World Coming In.

From the Chicago News.

Before the war came, in the comparatively fat years of peace, Woodrow Wilson delivered the following comment in the form of dramatic criticism upon this present decade "We live for our own age—an age like Shakespeare's, when an old world is passing away, a new world coming in—an age of new speculation and every new adventure of the mind, a full stage, an intricate plot, a universal play of passion, an outcome no man can foresee."

It would be interesting to know what added form of plot and passion the president would care to include after three years of the world war and the development of the highest boiling point of historic forces of which there is human record.

If the president before the war began felt intensity and variety in the play of human forces about him what must be now his sensations!

Truly, never before was there such an intricate plot, such a universal play of passion, the outcome of which "no man can foresee." And yet deeply and certainly abides the faith of "a new world coming in."

Beauty and Loveliness.

From the Louisville Post.

"Beauty," at least as distinct from "loveliness," is a big word. It has a certain splendor, it has a certain amplitude, You use it for the great things of the world; for the Parthenon and the host chryselephantine figure of Jove and of Athene; for the epics of Homer and Milton, as for Troy and the first host of Lucifer, for the music of Bach and Beethoven, for the face of Helen and the body of Brunhilda or of Siegfried.

But "loveliness" is a very different word—a smaller word and slighter, a word more delicate, more tender. It applies to the more human things; Helen is not lovely, she is beautiful—but, with rare exceptions, the women of Shakespeare have a certain appealing loveliness. Juliet is lovely, for all her strength and courage; the loveliness of Rosalind is piquant and that of Beatrice also; Miranda's is a wild and timid loveliness, that of Desdemona is most tender, that of Ophelia most tragical and touching. Portia, too, is lovely and Olivia—though these two, we admit, do barely escape being beauties; Viola, like Celia, has a sort of dainty loveliness, while Cordelia, Lear's daughter Cordelia, is as lovely as Juliet herself.

WAR AS AID TO DISEASE.

Among the bye effects of the war will come many improvements in methods of fighting disease. Kenwood, one of the great sanatoriums of England, prophesies that some of the capacity for organization to destroy life developed during this war stimulated by the need for regeneration of the stricken races will be employed in the development of machinery for the prevention of disease when the war has passed.

A minor suggestion that may add something to our comfort and incidentally to the control of certain diseases is that heat be used to destroy insects. Our methods of destroying bedbugs are far from satisfactory. Our methods of killing flies, mosquitoes, fleas, moths, roaches, lice, and weevils are scarcely more so.

Corlette found that bugs, mosquitoes, and fleas are killed by a temperature of 113, roaches by 120 degrees of heat, lice and their eggs destroyed by 131 degrees, and ordinary weevils by 122 degrees.

It is not difficult to get temperatures as high as these in ordinary rooms in either summer or winter. If an ordinary room be tightly closed and a brisk grate fire be run for an hour the temperature will go high enough in summer to kill all insects contained therein and even to destroy their eggs. The temperature should be noted by exposing a thermometer in different parts of the room. One must be certain that the temperature needed is attained in the parts of the room where the insects are. The difficulty in raising the temperature to the point required will be greater in cold weather.

These are not high temperatures. Fabrics and furniture are not harmed by them. Nor will they be unbearable for the operator. Firemen work at higher temperatures for hours at a stretch.

To prevent flies from breeding in manure Copeman proposes that the pile be so constructed that fermentation will raise the temperature beyond a point where fly larva are killed.

Hewitt found that fly larva could not stand a temperature of more than 104. Howlett suggested 106 as the temperature beyond which they could not live.

Copeman's plan is as follows: A concrete floor is made (earth soaked with oil and stamped hard will answer). On this manure is packed in a sloping pile five feet high. The packing is done with shovels. In such a pile Copeman found the temperature 1 inch below the surface to be as high as 106. At a depth of 10 inches a temperature of 164 was reached. Repeated examinations showed that there were no larva present. Manure thus fermented loses none of its fertilizer value.

Tomorrow.

From the Oklahoma City Oklahoman.

Americans will undoubtedly take a much keener interest in European politics after the war, as Vice President Marshall observed in his address at the golden jubilee celebration of the Scottish Rite Masons. We'll "keep up" with European affairs generally The day of isolation in thought, as well as in fact, has gone Provincialism has passed. Cosmopolitanism swings in, an earnest, true soundly informed cosmopolitanism.

Before the war Europe, to most of us, was a vague, hazy place. It existed, of course. We had all known persons that had actually been there — and could never quite overcome the habit of inadvertently mentioning it on every possible occasion England' We knew George was king, that Lloyd-George was an incorrigible with whom we sympathized, that George Bernard Shaw was a literary vagrant, a highbrow that affected to be a hobo. The kaiser was a diversion, a harmless sort, that took the pinchbeck of royalty seriously Nicholas was a joke, to be really candid, a boob. The regular arrival of a new baby at Madrid kept Alfonso's name familiar Old Francis Joseph doddered around feebly through the splendors of Vienna. Rumania meant about as much to us as Graustark. The Frenchman was a perfumed flaneur, given to gesticulation gold tipped cigarets and absinthe, and Paris was the capital of folly Such was Europe to most of us before the war

How different now and forever more. A common struggle has made us brothers of the blood One of the great educational forces of the future will be our American soldier who, shoulder to shoulder with many nations, has looked death in the eye New textbooks will be written for our schools. The newspaper executives of today are seeing and planning for a truly world news service that will make the gossip of yesterday's cables seem but aimless chatter Parliaments, chambers of deputies, dumas—we may not know them quite so well as our own congress, but the day of portiere diplomacy is gone.

Before the 20th century reaches its fin de siecle the world will be talking and thinking in a sure-enough Esperanto.

Why War Services Americanize.

From the Hartford Times.

President Luther said wittily that the roster of our new army "resembled the payroll of the tower of Babel." There are certainly a good many Polish and Servian and Russian names on it, but they will be borne by loyal Americans before the war is over There is nothing like service in the army to consolidate a man's patriotism The high spots on the names will be rubbed off in the daily life of the camp. Private Deponatowski will be christened Dupont. Czesanouvitch will find himself known as Charles Sandow, and Corporal Philandropolis will be dubbed Philip Andrew In dropping their old names and becoming units in the army of freedom they will take on the character of American soldiers Let them keep their family names if they like, the sense of having served in a United States regiment will never leave them.

The "Slippery Rail" Season.

From the Boston Globe.

I notice that street railway managers are warning the conductors that the "slippery rail season," due to wet leaves on the tracks, is fast approaching, and urging the motormen to exercise care to avoid collisions. It might be well to remind teamsters and motorists also of this fact, so that they may be on the alert to avoid collisions.

Mexican Coinage in Bulk.

From the Youth's Companion.

The soaring price of silver has brought about the curious result that Mexican dollars are worth more as bullion than as currency. Last month a New York dealer bought 50,000 of them and consigned them to the melting pot.

PERPETUAL HONEYMOONS.

From the Ohio State Journal.

A woman writer asks if a perpetual honeymoon can exist in this modern day, and quotes in connection with the question what another woman said, towit: "Any woman who has lived with a man 11 years can find ground for divorce." There is much talk of this kind and there are many divorces, all of which are the product of materialism, which doesn't see the difference between pleasure and happiness. That fact in its real working is behind all divorces and married infelicities. The fact is that pleasure is material and soon wears out; happiness is spiritual and lasts forever. Every marriage must note these standpoints, for they are swayed by one or the other. This is the age of divorces, because materialism flourishes as never before. It makes the husband impatient and the wife intolerant. When a couple reaches that state they should sing old hymns together and go to prayer meeting. Cigars and dry goods won't save them.

The Lincoln Statue Controversy.

From the October Art World.

The daily press has printed many letters from persons who are horrified to think that the "Lincoln" by George Gray Barnard might be placed in London near Westminster Abbey and the buildings of parliament, and also in Paris on some prominent square, such as that city's government assigned to French's statue of George Washington.

Now the October number of the Art World publishes several letters from the only surviving son of the martyred president, Honorable Robert T. Lincoln, also one from the late Joseph H. Choate, written a week before his death, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Cyrus T. Brady, "Marse" Henry Watterson and others of note, all of whom are outspoken in condemnation of the plan to afflict London and Paris with so ugly and discordant a statue. The Art World says:

Mr Barnard is a very competent craftsman and sculptor, and, among some things that many can not understand, he has done some which any one may applaud. No doubt he worked desperately to make a grand statue of Lincoln, but he went astray in his philosophy of life and art, and he could not see that one can not express in one figure the great Lincoln, who dominated his age—and any sort of democracy He has lost himself in an aesthetic jungle like Rodin, his precursor, who is also a first class craftsman and also went astray in his philosophy and aesthetics, and who, because he made the mistake to imagine that one can treat a nude figure and a portrait statue in the same way and make a figure more "significant" and "expressive" by a "deformation of the form," deformed his statue of Balzac into such a monster that an indignant public howled it down in the Paris salon, and, though he had worked long and hard, it had not occurred to him that—as his friend Henri Rochefort is said to have written him: "One can not express Balzac and the whole Comedie Humaine in one portrait statue"

It is said: "No one is a hero to his valet" True—if the valet has the soul of a flunky. But history proves that many valets have worshiped their heroes and laid down their lives for them.

No common sense man wishes to see Lincoln stupidly idealized and represented as a demigod, as Canova modeled Napoleon in Milan, but we object, just because he was not a "dude," to have him shown as a woeful, wallowing Willie, mourning for mother and complaining of a colic—this under the plea of symbolizing a "meek and lowly" Christlike (?) democracy'

But when all this fuss about this statue is expressed the fact remains that George Gray Barnard is a great artist, measured by any test, and that nothing that may now be said can establish that Abraham Lincoln was pretty, natty, smart, dandified or soldierly in appearance He was great in every way but only beautiful in morals, and Mr Barnard has kept what was beautiful and kept away from what is only "smart." He has kept him a great democrat He could not have remained an artist and depicted him as a Stuart In the dispute precipitated by idealists the artist's voice is not heard. But if he must defend his work there is no room to doubt that he can produce from contemporaneous history such a mass of evidence as must overwhelm those who are asking for an ideal portrait. Mr Barnard was presenting the statue of a democracy in the person of a democrat to set up at the court of the oldest kingdom of the race. He did not present a headless monster as another great artist did when he pictured a democracy.

In criticising great works of art it may well be recalled that before their acceptance nearly all the greatest of them have been denounced, and not infrequently by other artists of less talent. Artists are not objecting to this Barnard statue. Politicians who have bowed to the Lincoln intellect and descendants who have been flattered by a world untutored in perception of majestic beauty are condemning it. There censure does not convince.

Back Door Etiquet.

From the Atchison Globe.

It is backdoor etiquet for a woman to send back the dish, in which her neighbor has sent her something to eat, full. As a result of trying to observe this rule two Atchison women are on the verge of nervous collapse.

Sunday morning one of the women sent her neighbor a pan of string beans. Promptly the woman receiving the beans returned the pan filled with some plum butter The other woman returned the pan filled with fresh doughnuts. Her neighbor sent the pan back with some raisin bread in it The other woman fired the pan back filled with tomatoes. The neighbor quickly stirred up a cake and it was no time until that pan was sent back filled with little hot cakes.

The other woman was ready for the pan and sent it over filled with pickled beets. The other neighbor flew to her pantry and perked up some sliced ham and sent the pan back, but the other woman's men folk met that pan before it reached its destination, there is not enough left for the junk man.

Tommies Have Poor Teeth.

From the Boston Post.

"The teeth of the British soldier are a horrible shock to the American dentist. They are the worst he ever has seen," Dr. Samuel A. Hopkins, a Boston practitioner, told the metropolitan district of the Massachusetts Dental society.

Doctor Hopkins has recently returned from serving with a Harvard unit "somewhere in France." He said that it is an inexplicable fact that notwithstanding the deplorable condition of the foreign soldier's teeth, he is in very good health, aside from his wounds. Few of them use tooth brushes except to polish their buttons, and most of them haven't been able to masticate their food properly for 10 years, the while they have been absorbing the most poisonous toxins.

Old Irish Bagpipes.

From the London Chronicle.

The Irish soldier has always yielded to the magic of the bagpipes in war. In 1745, for instance, the Irish Brigade in the service of France, which included the old Irish Guards of James II., marched on to the field of Montenoy to the skirl of the pipes.

Yet in Ireland herself little was heard of the instrument after the revolution of 1688 until its revival over 30 years ago. The old Irish Volunteers and the old Ninetieth Irish Light Infantry had bands of pipers, but they disappeared, and it is to the Militia of Ireland, now known as the Special Reserve, that the Irish soldier is indebted for the restoration of the pipe in its place of honor in the army.

October 19 rks the end of the advance to- enin and the crossings of the that night Sir Douglas Haig Ypres, and the next day his my corps came up. At once as posed the question as to it should be put in to the east, t the Seventh division on the -Zonnebeke ridge north of the oad, or sent north to cover the ssen Zonnebeke through Lange- to Bixschoote. Unless it was support of the Seventh di- here was now danger that Raw- would be overwhelmed, but if it ent thither, then a gap would the allied line between Zonne- d the marshes, and the Germans coming south through Langemarck would outflank both the British and the Belgians, drive a wedge between them and have an open road to Calais and Boulogne.

Sir John French chose to risk the former peril and sent Haig north. When he was in position the allied line from Switzerland to the sea was complete, but from the Lys to the Yser it was incredibly thin, and for some days no reinforcements were available, as the French troops Joffre was sending up would not arrive before the 23rd and did not all come until the 24th As the first battle of Ypres began, then, the British held the front from the inundated district at Bixschoote along the Pilkem and Gravenstafel ridges to the Messines-Zonnebeke ridge east of this town, and thence south along the ridge through Becelaere and Zandevorde to the Comines canal South of the canal Allemby's cavalry held the Messines-Wytschaete sector with ridiculously insignificant cavalry screens October 20 the real battle opens.

From October 20 to October 31 the fighting about Ypres was intense On October 23 and 24 the arrival of the French Ninth corps permitted Sir Douglas Haig to bring His First corps from the Pilkem-Gravenstafel to the Messines-Zonnebeke ridge and thus reinforce the Seventh division which was rapidly approaching the point of annihilation But, despite all effort the British were slowly but surely driven from the crest of the Messines-Zonnebeke ridge, and on October 31 their line was actually broken on the Menin road, near Gheluvelt This was the crisis of the whole battle, the moment when Sir John French himself sent the cooks, the hostlers and every available man to the front line

Worchesters Save the Day.

A lost battle was saved by the sudden appearance of the Second Worcesters on the flank of the Germans advancing on the Menin road west of Gheluvelt The line was restored, but Gheluvelt was lost, as Zandevorde had been, and the front now ran from Zonnebeke south through the Polygon wood to a point on the Menin road just west of Gheluvelt. Like Meade after the first day of Gettysburg, French had been battered into a new but strongly defensible position, from Zonnebeke to the Menin road the new front was now to endure for many months and never to be lost to a direct attack. But it was an exhausted and almost annihilated force which now held the line.

On November 1 the Germans shifted their attack to the Messines-Wytschaete front and seized the southern end of the Messines-Wytschaete ridge This was their greatest success in the whole battle, and a French army corps which arrived the next day and retook both Messines and Wytschaete was unable to hold either The capture of Messines and Wytschaete really created the Ypres salient Henceforth the Germans, from the highest ground in the whole region, looked down upon the rear and commanded the communications of the British in the east of Ypres. After November 1 the battle of Ypres continued with diminishing fury up to November 11, when the Prussian guard made its celebrated attack, temporarily pierced the British line between Gheluvelt and Veldthoek, on the Menin road, and was thereafter annihilated.

The 11 days between October 21 and November 1 are the days of the great stress on the British front, and in this time that portion of the British expeditionary army which fought about Ypres was practically exterminated The Seventh division alone lost 356 out of 490 officers, and 9 664 out of 12,000 rank and file At Ypres alone the British losses were 40 000 The German loss has been placed as high as 250,000, and probably exceeded the loss at the Marne For three weeks the British fought an enemy five times as numerous and equipped with heavy artillery and machine guns both of which weapons were lacking to the British in any useful number Probably 60 per cent—perhaps more—of the British army were killed, wounded or captured, but in the end they still held Ypres and the lines before it For such an achievement all praise is inadequate And at Ypres Britain's professional army perished, but its tradition became henceforth imperishable Unlike the Spartans, who died in defeat, the British army had held its gate.

The close of the first battle of Ypres saw the allies holding one of the most remarkable positions in all the front from Belfort to Nieuport Pushed eastward from Ypres was a sausage shaped salient or bulge, extending northnortheast to its greatest depth at Gravenstafel, six miles from Ypres. The base of this salient was the Ypres-Comines-Yser canal, and between the two points where the German line touched the canal, north and south of Ypres, was barely seven miles. South of this canal possession of the Messines and Kytschaete hills gave the Germans direct observation and splendid artillery sweep of the whole rear of the salient. But north of the canal the British still clung to the western slope of the ridge from the vicinity of Gheluvelt to a point east of Zonnebeke, and from Zonnebeke westward they held both the Gravenstafel and Pilkem ridges as far as the western limits of Langemarck. Between Langemarck and the canal at Steenstraete a division of French colonials was in line.

In April, 1915, the British were preparing for their subsequent offensive southward near La Bassee The French had recalled their best troops from this front to participate in Foch's great Artios operations and most of the few heavy British guns had likewise gone south. There was no expectation of any considerable German operation in the Ypres sector, and allied journals were heralding the coming of the spring offensive, which was to throw the Germans out of France and Belgium. Toward the last of the third week in April an attack, preceded by the explosion of a mine, had given the British a brief hold on Hill No. 60, a mound near the point where the Ypres-Comines canal crossed the battle front. Heavy attack and counter attack on this point occupied the attention of the world in the next few days.

Gas Wins for Teutons.

But on April 22 came one of the most dramatic and terrible episodes of the war. Toward evening the Germans suddenly loosed vast quantities of chlorine gas against the French colonial division standing between Langemarck and the Ypres-Yser canal at Steenstraete. The result was a natural and inevitable panic. The black troops fled south and west toward Ypres and across the canal. Within a brief period the allied front was broken and for four miles between Langemarck and the canal there was a gap. The German road to Ypres was at last open.

East of the colonials were the Canadians. When the French troops fled the Canadian flank was left in the air, while the troops themselves exposed to gas fumes, and suffered severe losses from this cause, Yet, despite all the circumstances, the Canadians hung on. They drew back their left flank, forming in a half circle, and fought on, holding up for many hours the onrush of the Germans. Here, on this front, the Canadian contingent won their title to rank with the old British army which had held the Ypres position in the autumn, and with their Anzac brethren, who were soon to win equal glory at Gallipoli.

The next morning, Friday, April 23, the situation was critical in the extreme. The Germans had forced the crossing of the Yser canal, between Boesinghe and Steenstraete, and taken Lizerne, while they were in possession of Langemarck and Pilkem and crowding down the roads from these towns toward Ypres itself. Could they push on for but three miles more Ypres would be in their hands and all the troops in the salient east of Ypres would be caught like rats in a trap. That they did not do this can only be charged in part to the bravery of the Canadians and their British supports. In point of fact, the true explanation appears to be that the Germans had not expected so tremendous a success and lacked reserves at the decisive point of the favorable moment A better chance than the British had had at Neuve Chapelle therefore slipped through their fingers

In the next few days the situation slowly improved, although it remained critical during the first days of May First the French threw the Germans back to the east bank of the canal. At the same time the British brought up troops from all points of their line and closed the gap between the canal and the flank of the Canadians Even the Belgians from their side of the Yser river sent over reinforcements. Meantime German heavy artillery destroyed the beautiful buildings of Ypres so far little injured and the British army suffered from shellfire as it had not suffered even in the first days of the battle about Ypres in the preceding year To this heavy gunfire it had neither the artillery nor the ammunition to make answer

By the first of May, the day on which the Germans were to win their great victory of the Dunajec, it was plain that the old Ypres salient could no longer be held It had become a rectangle three miles wide by six long thrust forth into the German lines. From the Pilkem ridge as well as the Messines-Wytschaete ridge, the Germans had now a sweep over British communication Accordingly, in the second week of May the British sullenly drew back from the Gravenstafel ridge, from Zonnebeke, from all the ridge between the Roulers railroad and the Menin road, and occupied a new front in a narrow circle, rather more than a mile east of Ypres.

Allied Peoples Disappointed.

Almost all the high ground was now lost. All the salvage of the first battle of Ypres, defended with such great gallantry and obstinacy, was surrendered. Second Ypres had been far more costly than the first in territory given up, although it must be remembered that for this the British were not responsible. It was the collapse of the French, under the first gas attack of the war, that precipitated the disaster Yet even this was a small solace for the allied publics which had expected news of a great victory, both in the east and in the west, and in the same hour read of the Dunajec and the surrender of all the ground made memorable in the first battle of Ypres.

By May 13 the second battle of Ypres closed The German purpose had been accomplished, there had been greater success than in the earlier attack, but the purpose of the April operation was far less colossal than that of the October campaign. When the road to Calais had been sought. Now the Germans aimed merely to weaken the allied offensive to the southward by drawing from it men, munitions and guns They sought also to impress the neutral nations, Italy most of all, with their great strength on both fronts. This strength was proven, but Italy was already lost and the use of the poison gas served to arouse the indignation of all nations outside the central alliance It was one more circumstance in the indictment of civilization against Germany After Ypres quarter was neither given nor taken for many months on the Ypres front, and before very long the Germans, in their turn, were compelled to endure the suffering incident to a gas attack

Without the gas the German success would have been unlikely As it was, the success was limited and the moral consequences evil in the extreme for the Germans The sinking of the Lusitania while the second battle of Ypres was still proceeding was instantly associated in all minds with the crime of the poison gas And just as the Zeppelins were the best recruiting agency in Britain, German savagery roused Canada to new effort, and in the first three years of the war more than 400,040 Canadians crossed the sea to fight in Flanders and Artois.

Such, briefly, is the history of the origin and development of the Ypres salient. In the first battle of Ypres the Germans, attacking east of the town, mainly on either side of the Menin road, gained the hills of Wytschaete and Messines. In the second they took the Pilkem ridge at the other side of the salient. Henceforth they held it as in a vise between these two ridges until June and August, 1917, when the British first retook Wytschaete and Messines, and then, with the aid of French divisions, swept the Germans off the Pilkem ridge, retook Pilkem, Bixschoote, Langemarck and St. Julien, and thus abolished the whole salient. Until this time the Ypres salient remained the worst point on the whole allied front, and for a long period there was a sharp debate in British military circles as to the advisability of holding Ypres or retiring to the hills behind it, Scharpenberg and Kemmel.

Ypres was not evacuated, mainly because of the moral value that attached to it as a result of the two great battles. Only Verdun could rival the old Flemish citadel, now gone to dust and ashes, in sentimental value in the first three years of the war, and the return of the British to the offensive in this region in the fourth year of the struggle makes it probable that Ypres will remain for the British and Canadian public the greatest incident in the war. Even the Australians, who came to Flanders ultimately, and rewon Zonnebeke and its surrounding woods in the last days of September, 1917, will probably rank it with Gallipoli, and thus Ypres will retain a place in British imperial history above all other battlefields, for here the solidarity of that empire Germany sought to destroy was proven by its sons from all the lands about the Seven seas.

Next week I hope to discuss in detail British progress in recent days in the Ypres salient — the most brilliant achievement of British arms in the war. As these lines are written the British now hold all of the ground on which they stood in October, 1914, save a salient between the Commines canal and Becelaere. Zandevorde, Gheluvelt and Becelaere are all that remain to be taken—then the road to Menin and to Roulers will be open, and the advance begun and ended on October 17, 1914, can be resumed. Then the third anniversary of first "Wipers" should be a cause for pride and rejoicing everywhere in the British empire.

Thanks to China, the war poets now have Chang to rhyme with bang.

Pershing As I Know Him.

Z. C. Collins, in Association Men.

What an inspiration to one who has known th man is the picture that memory paints of that brilliant soldier who commands our American troops in Europe As one recalls that personality and strength of character that dominated all with whom this soldier came in contact, he understands why there is only one General Pershing One that recalls General Pershing as a severe disciplinarian also remembers that the general is always just and ever thoughtful of the welfare of others. In his Moro campaign in the Philippines he was so interested in the welfare of the enlisted men under him that he welcomed the work of the Young Men's Christian association secretaries and ordered their equipment brought up the trails with pack mules when others claimed it could not be don In Jolo nothing done for his men pleased him more than their entertainment on the plaza of that walled city by the Young Men's Christian association secretaries at his suggestion One might think it was Pershing's grim sense of humor that caused him to have the association man play the graphophone to the band of Moro chiefs and their followers when they visited him at his headquarters In fact it was the sense and sand of a soldier that never took snap judgments that caused him to entertain the treacherous Moros General Pershing understands man's moral problems When a young man related to him came to visit him in his home at Fort William McKinley, he immediately asked the association secretary to cultivate his acquaintance and to interest him along Christian lines. When a prominent representative of the international committee called on him at his home, it was difficult to persuade the general not to turn out the entire post in his honor, and later when the financial campaign was on for the Manila association, a good sized sum was raised in the post through his influence

A trained military man, a trained lawyer, a master in all he undertakes, nothing in that grand character of his should so appeal to thinking men as his interest in the moral welfare of his men and his faith in the steadying power of Christianity

Preparedness in the Kraal.

A letter from a South African mission school tells a story

"There was a little boy at our school —a child about 5 years old. We called him Tommie. Our next door neighbor had a son about the same age, and the two children used to play together.

"The sun was just setting at the close of a lovely autumn day when the two households were thrown into a fearful state of commotion. The two boys had disappeared! No one had seen them since shortly after lunch. But the consternation was not of long duration, for just as the shadows of evening were closing around us we preceived the two little forms approaching us, drawing a small wagon which contained something white. As they reached us we saw that the something white was a bible.

"'Why children!" I cried, "how could you go away without telling us? You know that there are many Kafirs about —they might have stolen you and carried you away!"

"Tommy's reply surprised me. 'No,' he said, 'we thought about it before we started, and then we decided that if we took the little wagon and opened the bible and kept it open in the wagon all the time, the Kafirs would not touch us!'"

The Second Liberty Loan.

"Help Liberty!"
What's that I hear
In plaintive tone?—
The call is clear;
Is she alone—
In need—and cries—
For help? Is none
At hand—nor tries
To her enthrone?

"Help Liberty!"
Again I hear
That mournful word
Is still none near
Nor aught has heard?
What means her cry—
Unanswered yet;
And must she die
While men forget?

Help Liberty!"
Will never men hear
Nor heed that cry"
For gain for greed
Would see her lie
Enchained unthroned,
Yet pleading still,
With blood atoned
Though done no ill?

'Help Liberty!
Shall heartless lord,
In secret scheme
To draw his sword
That some dire dream
For lust for power
Be realized
While freedom's hour
Is thus despised?

'Help Liberty!
What! Calling still?—
Perhaps it be
It is God's will
She's calling me
Though long the way
And wide the sea
I'll fight I'll pay
For Liberty

People.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Perhaps advisedly, perhaps not, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle credits the report that Germany is going "monstrous lengths" to increase her population Every little while some writer reminds us that French soil is now invaded because the French have preferred small families to large families. Mr Roosevelt is again attacking race suicide. Everywhere the lesson of this war is that in order to be safe a nation must be numerous.

We boast of our population. One hundred millions "listens well." It is impressive. But what would 100,000,000 amount to against an always possible combination of hostile empires? Little though the most of us have realized it, America needs people. The military argument, kept in the background until of late, is now the supreme argument for numbers. And, despite the economic factor, the personal factor, and factors more obscure, it is within the range of practicality for America to increase her population. Six hundred thousand Americans die annually from preventable diseases. Every year 35,000 workers are killed in industry. Of the 300,000 infants that die each year one-half might be saved. Murder, now the safest of crimes and accounting for 10,000 deaths per annum, might be enormously reduced.

Mere moral and humanitarian considerations have ruled hitherto in our treatment of matters affecting the havoc of population. They take on a new importance today. They may have a still greater importance in days to come, when some foe, now weak, has succeeded in outnumbering us. For it is not only on the battle front that numbers count, it is back of the lines in industry and agriculture and commerce. We are coming to understand that and to insist that the wastage of human material through disease, accident, stupidity, and crime must cease. It is no longer solely a plea for mercy and brotherly love. It is a plea for national safety. We must be strong in numbers. We must maintain a population that will insure victory if we are attacked and make outsiders profoundly reluctant to attack us.

Creating a Room.

From Good Housekeeping.

To create a room, one may commence, perhaps, with one interesting piece of furniture, and build the whole room about it. It may be a beautiful desk or chair, but whatever it is, study the history of its time, find what used to be used with it, and hunt for the pieces you need most. If these are not to be found in the original, good reproductions of the original can be made.

Having decided upon the type of room you wish to create, study the special one you have in mind—its size and shape. Perhaps it is a room with a low ceiling; if so, it will have many charms, but in its furnishing many difficulties will be encountered. Where the ceilings are very low, they should be tinted to match the side walls. The trend today is toward paneling and painting the walls, but this is not always possible, as much depends upon the shape and size of the rooms, and the condition of the walls. There are many beautiful wall papers made now, and in some instances their use is preferable to any other mode of wall decoration. Instead of painting the walls of formal rooms, very often fabrics such as silks or damasks are used in the panels. Beautiful tapestries, too, are set in. I know of a delightful room where a toile de jouey (printed linen made in France) is put into the panels and heavily varnished. The effect is novel and charming.

A sense of greater space, as well as a decided leading on of interest, may be obtained by making every doorway of a room a vista. There may be only a passageway beyond, but by carrying the color scheme through, or placing directly opposite the doorway a good picture, or a mirrow with a console table beneath it, the imagination is immediately taken beyond the confines of that one room.

"Attaboy."

From the Brooklyn Standard Union.

There is one purely American cry which was heard on the battle fields of Europe before our first troops arrived there. It is the baseball yell, "Attaboy," which is the brief and sharp way of saying "That's the boy."

This word may become the battle shout, the rallying cry, the yell of the charge when the boys go into action. Certainly it has been frequently used along the western front from the channel to Switzerland, and also on the Italian front. Carried abroad by English, French and Italians who lived in the United States, but who returned when the war broke out, this distinctly baseball expression has often echoed in the trenches.

American newspaper correspondents visiting the front in Flanders and in the snow buried Italian Alps have time and again been gretted by this word. It was like a message from home and was intended to let the visitors know that someone from home was there doing his bit. It has been a cry of recognition and welcome.

All baseball fans are familiar with this word made famous by Hugh Jennings, and doubtless a majority of them firmly believe he coined the expression. Perhaps he did, although it is stated on fairly good authority that it came into use in the days of "Pop" Anson But it was Jennings who fastened it upon the public mind, and Jennings always will be associated with popularizing it.

Conflict of Authority.

A Dutch journalist, Mr. J. M. de Beaufort, tells in his book "Behind the German Veil," of an amusing incident that interrupted a drive with a German staff captain through Johannisburg on the Prussian-Polish border.

In front of a house stood two soldiers, a private in the landsturm about 45 years of age and a beardless lieutenant. They seemed to be in hot argument, and suddenly the landsturm man shook his fist in the officer's face.

The captain stopped the car, called the private to him and bawled:

"Man, have you lost your senses—threatening a superior officer? Do you know that you can be shot for that?"

"At your orders, sir!' replied the landsturm man jumping to attention. "He may be my superior officer, but he is also my son!"

Of Slight Importance.

TAMPICO, MEXICO.

Washington, D. C.—But little of the history of Mexico has been recorded in which Tampico has not figured. Recently it came into public notice because of the rumor that the Mexican government contemplated placing an embargo on shipments of oil which leave that port in vast quantities consigned to Great Britain. Tampico was the scene of the incident which resulted in a demand from Admiral Mayo for a salute from Huerta. Of this Mexican metropolis a bulletin of the National Geographical society says:

"In 1682 the town was sacked by corsairs, probably a part of the notorious Nick Van Horn's band. In 1829 an expedition set out from Havana for the Spanish reconquest of Mexico, following the final decree of expulsion of the Spaniards from that country, signed by President Victoria in 1827. The Spaniards effected a landing a few miles from Tampico, the vessels were sent back to Havana, the troops, under Barradas, entered the city, but after several bloody encounters with the Mexicans under Santa Ana and Teran, the Spaniards capitulated, were treated with the honors of war, nearly 2,000 of them reembarked during November and December, and Spanish political influence in the richest of her new world possessions, which had extended over a period of 300 years, was brought to an inglorious close. Teran, who had so distinguished himself in this repulse of the Spaniards, in 1832 led an attack against Gen. Estevan Montezuma, commandante of Tampico, who had hoisted the flag of federalist revolt, but so severely defeated was Teran in that engagement that in chagrin he plunged his sword into his body. Again, in 1838, a federalist uprising took place at Tampico, and Canalizo was sent to reduce the town. During the assault a terrific explosion occurred, Canalizo's troops became panic stricken and were driven out; but when in 1839 the federalist revolter, Urrea, took refuge in Tampico, through the treachery of Barbarena the town was taken—a heavy blow to the federalist cause.

"After the capture of Monterey by the United States troops in 1846, the United States contemplated a descent on the gulf coast and an invasion by way of Tampico of the rich state of Tamaulipas, but Santa Ana, through an intercepted dispatch, got wind of the plan, hastily evacuated, and the town was occupied and garrisoned by Commodore Perry.

"Once more, in 1866, Tampico occupied a page in Mexican history, when certain of Maximilian's troops surrendered the port to General Pavon. This was followed a month later by the surrender of Tuxpan, so that Vera Cruz remained the only port in the imperial, or French hands, and that they soon relinquished.

"Tampico is situated near the mouth of the Panuco river, about midway between the port of Vera Cruz and the mouth of the Rio Grande. Prior to the improvements undertaken by the Mexican Central railway, at this port, the building of the Mexican railway from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico had drawn most of the commerce to Vera Cruz, to the detriment of Tampico. The Central line puts the capital within 12 hours of Tampico, and the project of eventually extending this road to follow the coast to Matamoras and connecting with the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico line has been broached, an extension which would be of enormous value in the trade between Mexico City, New Orleans and the southern states of this country. The port of Tampico is not exactly on the coast, but several miles up the river Panuco, "in which the navies of the world could ride at ease" and which accommodates the largest and deepest ocean steamers. Loading and unloading can be carried on practically all the year round, except when the "Northers" are on, which make it difficult to cross the bar, but these "Northers" put a stop to work at Vera Cruz. Moreover, the cost of handling cargo at Tampico is about two-thirds that at Vera Cruz, from ship to railroad car, in normal times, being about $2 per ton. Between Tampico and Tuxpan stretches a canal running from the Panuco river into the great Tamiahua Laguna, through Lakes Mojarras and Tampanchoco, thence into the Tuxpan river.

"As a place of residence Tampico is fairly attractive, despite the somewhat trying heat. The yellow fever, which was once prevalent there, has been driven out. One of the finest sea beaches in the world is to be found at La Barra, to which trains run several times a day. The hotels are comfortable, as tropical hostelries go, and the lover of antiquities will find in the Sierra de la Palma, near Mount Miradores, and Altamira, all within easy travel distance, some interesting pre-Columbian ruins.

"As a commercial center Tampico will take chief rank when the political disturbances of Mexico are over. Prior to the outbreak of those disturbances the town was fast approaching the quarter million mark in population, and it is the capital of Tamaulipas, which, of all the states of the republic, is one of the fairest and most richly endowed with fertile soil, vast timber tracts, large deposits of minerals and seemingly unlimited quantities of oil. It will be an interesting center for the tourist or trader when Mexico once more comes into its own."

Bananas Not Ripe Until Turning Black.

Bananas have a higher caloric value than any of our other common fruits. Unlike most other fruits they are always in season.

Such is the first conclusion come to by Drs. Victor C. Myers and Anton R. Rose, after a careful analysis of bananas and of their effects upon persons fed with them. The studies werer made at the Laboratory of Pathological Chemistry, New York Post Graduate Medical school and hospital, and the report is published in the Journal of the American Medical association.

But the bananas must be ripe, and bananas as generally sold are not nearly ripe. A yellow banana is not ripe. "When the yellow of the peel turns a golden hue and begins to speckle on the brown shades, it may safely be considered fully ripe," says the report, "and the spread of the brown discoloration does not condemn the fuit as over-ripe as long as the pulp inside shows no signs of fermentative decomposition."

The unripe banana consists largely of starch: this starch changes into sugar as the fruit ripens, and to sugar in its most easily assimilated forms.

"The composition of the banana and the potato," says the report, "shows an interesting similiarity both as regards total carbohydrate and the amount of the different mineral constituents. While the banana can hardly be regarded as a potato substitute, the fact that it has practically the same calorie value as the potato is worthy of note."

Didn't Need 'Em.

From the Dallas News.

While a traveler was waiting for an opportunity to show his samples to a merchant a customer came in and bought a couple of nightshirts. Afterward a long, lank laborer, with his trousers tied below the knees, said to the merchant:

"What was them things that chap bought?"

"Nightshirts. Can I sell you one or two?"

"No. I should think not. I don't sit about much o' nights."

AN ARTIST TRIO COMING

The Josephine Dominick Concert Company is an exceptionally entertaining company. Their program shows much variety and is interesting from the opening number to the good-night. When we attend a concert we want to be entertained and rested by the variety of selections.

Josephine Dominick is at the head of the company She is well known throughout the Middle West having filled several lyceum seasons, giving full evening programs alone She specializes in dialect selections, being proficient in the Scotch, Irish, Scandinavian Italian, French and our American dialects. This season she will give spoken songs of the nations with violin and piano accompaniment

Miss Lillian Rudeen is an American girl who received her musical education abroad. Among other instructors she has studied with Madam Marchesi of London The cornet is her favorite instrument having been her hobby from childhood She was in London when the war broke out and appeared in concert with Saranoff the Russian violinist for the English soldiers who were leaving for the front She returned to America on the Lusitania on its last trip.

ETHEL PAUL.
With Dominick Concert Co.

Ethel Paul the violinist, is a native of Wales She is known as the "Gypsy Violinist" and is a musician of great ability She has directed some of the best orchestras in the country and has appeared in violin recitals in many of our cities. Her years of professional work together with a natural musical instinct makes her a truly exceptional violinist

LILLIAN RUDEEN.
With Dominick Concert Co.

The program of this trio of versatile artists will include readings, both dialect and humorous, vocal, violin and cornet solos, vocal and instrumental trios and spoken songs with violin and piano accompaniments. All three have good voices and sing, and all three play the piano, making ensemble numbers a prominent part of the program. Their program is not a disconnected conglomeration but a logically arranged whole, keeping you in pleasant expectation as to what is coming next. Each number you think must be the best; still a better one follows.

Regret is painful; you will regret it if you fail to hear this delightful company Attend and save yourself the pain of regret

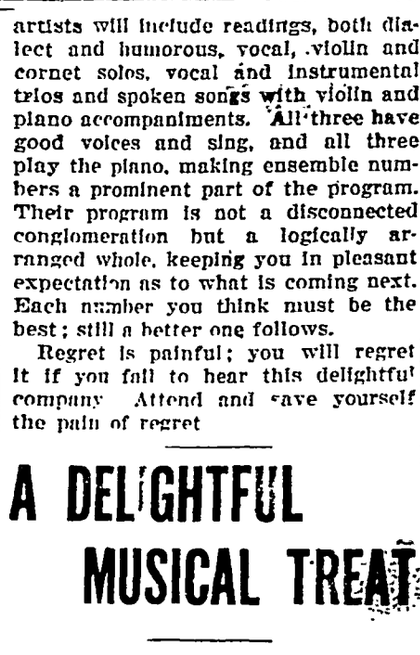
The Varallo-Gross Orchestra Company is to be a most delightful treat, judged by what they are doing elsewhere as voiced by the press.

John B Varallo is the violinist and manager of the company. He has made



JOHN B. VARALLO.
With Varallo-Gross Orchestra Co.

music his profession and has spared neither time nor effort in his preparation. He has done little else all his life than play the violin. He is able to do many beautiful and interesting things with his violin In one of his encores he imitates the song of a bird. His thorough knowledge of music makes him a most competent leader of the orchestra.

His brother Michael Varallo, has made the harp his life study and you may judge for yourself as to his proficiency. After all is said, it really takes a son of sunny Italy to get the best there is out of a harp. He has been playing with John B for so many years that their duo work is perfect

MICHAEL VARALLO.
Varallo-Gross Orchestra Co.

His display of technique in one of his popular solo numbers is but little short of marvelous.

Miss Gross is a little body of just twenty summers, just as sweet as she is talented. At the age of ten she was regarded as a child prodigy on the piano and cello in the city of New York. She received many fine articles of praise from such journals as "The Musical Courier" and other high-class musical publications. Several prominent musicians of New York City predicted great things for Miss Gross. That she has fulfilled these predictions we leave you to judge.

To be in the best sense of the word an entertainer calls for a variety of natural gifts, careful judgment, good taste and the all-inclusive gift of personality. These Miss Claire Coutant the reader, has in unusual degree and has developed and enhanced them by long and careful training She has been giving full evenings of dramatic and humorous readings together with costumed dialect numbers, and has specialized in spoken songs and monologues She is a valuable addition to the orchestra and will add some variety to their already varied program

Hear this excellent company when they appear here on the Lyceum Course

VARALLO-GROSS ORCHESTRA COMPANY.

Will Appear Here Soon in a Musical Program.

John B Varallo manager of the Varallo Gross Orchestra Company though not out in years has done little else but entertain the public musically He was first introduced in the lyceum by that shrewd judge of talent and men Giffen and for years John B. and his brother Michael with two others, made up Giffen Troubadours.

After leaving the Troubadours and for about five years the Varallo brothers and Miss Gross the cellist did vaudeville work giving wholly musical programs As their work was legitimate and high class it was only a short step back into the lyceum work Besides the two men John B and Michael Varallo there are two ladies in the company Miss Goldie Gross cellist, and Miss Claire Coutant reader.

The combination of violin cello, harp and piano is certainly a most excellent one and the popularity of this company cannot be overstated In addition to the variety possible in the instruments Miss Claire Coutant will present costumed readings.

The Jeffery "Six"

---Two Power Ranges---

The "Loafing" Range

Economical Operation

In it's loafing range it exhibits all the admirable traits you would expect in an eighty horse power eight of real class.

And through all its varied performance in it's "loafing" range, it is automatically operating on half fuel rations--in fact it uses fuel so sparingly as to shame many a lesser powered six--even many a four.

The "Sporting" Range

Extravagant Performance

You have only to open the throttle wider to release her double popets and give her full rations--and utterly change her whole character.

Now you have brute power and speed that puts all ordinary contenders at your mercy--you have nothing to fear from even the few cars that rightly claim the distinction of real class.

See the Jeffery--ride in it--compare it for appearance, power, flexibility and economy with any other six or eight--and we will leave it to your judgement if it does not deserve it's name--"Amerrca's Greatest Six"

Treason and the Liberty Loan.

By Theo. H. Price.

Do you know why treason is punishable by death and is the gravest crime of which a man or woman can be guilty? It is because it strikes at the stability and authority of government without which the "law of the jungle" would prevail and the strong would be continually preying upon the weak. Without government we should revert to barbarism and bestiality. Without government, our houses, so long as they were undestroyed, would be plundered every night. Without government our wives and daughters could not go out in safety or remain at home in security. Without government our children would be murdered or stolen and most men would die violent deaths.

The support of the government is therefore the citizen's supremest duty. It transcends every obligation. To neglect it or fail in its performance when the nation is at war is treason.

There can be no treason when we are at peace for it is defined by the constitution in these words: "Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort." We may give the enemies of the United States aid and comfort indirectly as well as directly, negatively as well as positively. To withhold the financial support that we are able to give when the nation is at war is to be guilty of treason whatever the courts may say, for in no other way could we aid and comfort Germany so much.

It should therefore be made clear that everyone who fails to subscribe to the Liberty loan to the full extent of his ability is guilty of treason.

There is no option about it. It is a duty imposed by the organic law of the land. To disregard it is a crime against the government, our fellows and ourselves.

And the extent of our ability to subscribe to the loan is not to be measured by our excess of income over outgo in times of peace.

By conscription we are compelling our young men to join the army and face possible death. They are allowed no choice. Of them we demand absolute self surrender. If it is refused or evaded to jail they go.

Can we, should we, will we who are left behind in the comfort and safety that their valor secures to us hesitate a single moment to deprive ourselves of anything and everything that we can do without that they may be provided and equipped with all they need and whatever is necessary to bring this frightful carnage speedily to an end?

The man or the woman who now fails to reduce his or her expenditures to the lowest possible minimum consistent with decency and health and to buy government bond with all that he or she can save or make is guilty of treason. Let there be no mistake about this. Bring yourself to an understanding of this fact and act upon it. Then make all those you come in contact with understand it also. When the roll of those who have helped the nation with their money according to their ability to make or save is called every adult in the United States should be present or accounted for. Those whose absence is unexplained will be unworthy citizens of this country and unentitled to enjoy the protection and benefits of the best government that men have yet devised.

When Americans Went by in Paris

Dorothy Canfield Fisher, in Everybody's Magazine.

We stopped finally just before the turn into the little Rue de Prepus, where Lafayette's tomb is situated, and waited for the troops to come.

When they arrived, they were walking boquets, having been showered with flowers all along the way. Every button had a flower stem twisted around it, their hats were all wreathed, and every rifle barrel had a boquet on it. The officers in front had their saddles banked with flowers, and what was even more significant of the warmth of the welcome given to them was that their Anglo-Saxon self consciousness and stiffness had entirely disappeared, and the men whom we had seen on the Rue de Rivoli, slouching along with a rapid, powerful American gait, without a glance to right or left, were now flushed and smiling, nodding and exchanging inarticulate greetings of friendliness with the people who rushed out from the side to give them more flowers and to shake their hands and to touch the big American flag which they carried.

We were swept along by this crowd, and were not at all sorry to find ourselves, all three of us, marching rapidly beside the soldiers in the midst of the dense crowd of working people who accompanied them, filling the street solidly from the houses on the one side to the houses on the other side.

I listened with all my ears, as you can imagine, to the comments that were made, and as everybody was talking at the top of his voice, to be heard above the din, I caught a good many, some of them amusing. A great many times they said: "Oh, ils sont fameux"—they're fine. I heard several times: "How tall and thin they are!" Once or twice, with a hearty emphasis, almost of admiration: "Heavens, how ugly they are." (And this was really true. I didn't realize, until I saw a mass of them together, how the Lincoln type of powerful, raw boned, sincere ugliness has persisted in many Americans), and of course a thousand time "Vive les poilus d'Amerique."

One working woman walking in front of me, carrying a baby, kept saying: "It makes me want to cry when I see their flag here," and an old man said: "I hope there is a German spy on every street corner."

But what pleased me most of all was what a middle aged, middle class woman on the street car going home said to me after she noticed John's uniform. She said: "Every time I see the American flag it makes me think 'No, the Germans were wrong. Ideals are the realest things there are.'"

The flowers were still showering down just like something you read about. I never saw it before. The soldiers were really walking on flowers and had their arms full besides. A big rose fell into Sally's hands, and I called to her, above the roar of the cheering, to give it to the American soldier by whose side she was trotting and to tell him she was a little American girl. She handed it to him, but was too shy to say anything, so I called out to him: "It is an American child." I saw his lips moving as he called the attention of the other men in his line, and as they marched they all leaned forward with a very friendly look of surprise and pleasure at Sally. I suppose in that utterly foreign crowd it must have seemed very strange to them to see a child of their own nationality."

French Immorality a Fiction.

John Galsworthy in the Atlantic Monthly.

The English have always had a vague idea that France is an immoral country. To the eye of a mere visitor France is the most moral of the four great powers—France, Russia, England, Germany has the strongest family life and the most seemly streets. Young men and maidens are never seen walking or living about half embraced, as in puritanical England. Fire is not played with openly, at least.

The slow fly amorousness of the British working classes evidently does not suit the quicker blood of France. There is just enough of the south in the French to keep demonstration of affection away from daylight. A certain school of French novelist with high colored tales of Parisian life is responsible for the reputation of his country. Whatever the Frenchman about town may be he seems by no means typical of the many millions of Frenchmen who are not about town. And if Frenchwomen as I have heard Frenchmen say, are logic, they are the best mothers in the world, and their 'frightness' is not widely obtruded.

They say that many domestic tragedies will be played at the conclusion of the war. If so, they will not be played in France alone, and compared with the tragedies of fidelity played all these dreadful years, they will be as black rabbits to brown for numbers. For the truth on morality in France we must go back, I expect, to that general conclusion about the French character—the swift passage from head to heart and back again which, prohibiting extremes of puritanism and of license, preserves a sort of balance.

But She Didn't

She was a very newly fledged baroness or duchess, or something like that, and, somehow or other she became thick with a professor, as the classical blokes would have it, and he invited her to come to his observatory to see the eclipse.

She arrived about two hours late.

"I've come to see the eclipse," she told the professor's assistant. "Professor Squashnoodle invited me to come."

"I'm sorry, but the whole thing was over an hour ago," said the assistant, contritely.

"Then," said the dignified dame, "I will wait for the next."

Making It Worse.

From the Washington Star.

"When I say a thing I mean it," exclaimed the emphatic man.

"But sometimes," replied Miss Cayenne, "that only makes it worse!"

Wilson Aids Army Library.

From the Washington Post.

There will be more or less lottery spirit about the books for soldiers containing autographed bookplates by the President and Mrs. Wilson. The president made the first cash contribution last week to the library war council's fund of $1,000,000, with which to provide books and libraries for our soldiers and sailors.

Each book purchased with the president's money will contain a bookplate, autographed either by the president or Mrs. Wilson. Undoubtedly these volumes will take on an added interest to whosoever is lucky enough to come into possession of one of them. The library war council, appointed by the secretary of war, says that these volumes will take their chances with the rest and will be sent abroad to our men at the front with other volumes autographed by distinguished authors and statesmen. For the soldier who receives one of these it will be simply a question of good fortune.

Wooden Soled Shoes for Soldiers.

United States Consular Report.

The commander in chief of the Dutch army notifies the corps commanders that an experiment is to be made with wooden soles for shoes, in consequence of the increasing advance in the price of leather.

For the experiment 5,000 pairs of shoes will be made. 2,000 are now ready. The wooden soles will be on new shoes, each pair having an extra set to replace worn-out soles.

The wooden soles are first soaked in water to lessen their flexibility.

When a definite judgment of the experiment can be formed, and if it is found feasible it will be extended on a large scale.

RELIGIOUS CONGRESS MEETS IN PITTSBURGH TO FRAME WAR PLANS

Five hundred delegates from every section of the country are in attendance this week at the religious conference in Pittsburgh, the purpose of which is to frame plans for social and religious betterment, and particularly to meet the problems of the war. Among the more prominent delegates are Fred B. Smith, head of the Men and Religion Forward Movement; Dr. Daniel A. Poling, associate president of the Christian Endeavor; John R. Mott, one of President Wilson's commissioners to Russia, and general secretary of the International Y. M. C. A., and Dr. Frank Mason North, president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

WHAT WE LEARN FROM SOLDIERS.

In the civil war typhoid fever took the lives of thousands. In 1898, among our 150,000 troops, there were more than 20,000 cases of typhoid and almost 3,000 deathes from the one disease. In 1916 among our 170,000 troops at the Mexican front there were 17 cases of typhoid fever and not a single death. Among our several hundred thousand troops now in camps there will be no typhoid fever. Typhoid will not be a menace to our soldiers in the field. Every soldier is vaccinated against typhoid.

The typhoid rate in the rural districts among the civilian population is not far from 35 per 100,000. The city typhoid rates range from 1 to 100 per 100,000. The civilian population can learn from the army that typhoid fever is an unnecessary disease. The way to prevent it has been demonstrated now on several million people. It has worked in all the great European armies as well as in that of the United States—it would work almost equally as well in the civilian population.

The army has no smallpox. They have had none for nearly 20 years. Smallpox has not troubled a single European army on the western front. The soldiers are all vaccinated against smallpox. The civilian population is considerably menaced by smallpox. In Chicago there heve been more than 100 cases this year. Cases have continued to develope right through the hot weather. It will be remembered that smallpox continuing to develop through the hot season in an unvaccinated community was the basis of my prediction of an epidemic of smallpox at Niagara Falls several years ago, a prediction made several months in advance.

While most of the smallpox is mild, occasionally an outbreak is as virulent as in the olden days. The lesson to be learned from the experience of the millions of men now under arms is that smallpox is quite unnecessary, that vaccination prevents it, and that any community that now has smallpox does so because it wants to have it or does not care.

The sickness disability rate keeps below two. The sickness disability rate of a well run factory with a developed welfare department should be about 2½. The sickness disability rate of a general population is materially higher than that of a working force in a well regulated factory. That which the civilian can learn from the soldier is that his sickness rates are too high and that by regulated living they can be reduced thus saving money, increasing efficiency and adding to the sum total of human happiness.

The armies of 1861 were devastated by malaria. While there was some malaria among the troops on the Mexican border in 1916, the rate was not high. The European armies on the western front have had very little malaria, though among the men rushed to the colors were many malaria carriers. That which the soldier can teach the civilian as to malaria is that while we are not ready to entirely eradicate the disease, the present incapacity of labor due to malaria in certain sections is wholly unjustified.

FEUDALISM TO DEMOCRACY—PROHIBITION.

The civil war was a needless libation of blood poured out primarily for a handful of arrogant slaveholders who would not sell their human property. The present world conflict is a criminal reversion to savagery due primarily to a handful of Prussians intoxicated with unwarranted power. Prohibition is a recrudescence of Puritanism due primarily to the imbecility of a handful of brewers and distillers. As all shared in the responsibility for the civil war who had not lived the life of freemen, so all are involved in the sanguinary price the world is paying today for the failure of democracy, and all America is tainted with the habit of intemperance in weal as well as woe. Yet the civil war did make the union indissoluble; the European war is speeding up the organization of the world: so prohibition will inspire new and less destructive forms of exhilaration and intoxication.

Constitutional and scriptural arguments were made in defense of slavery. Germany's plea for a place in the sun is unanswerable, but no word of defense is offered for the American saloon. The year book of the United States Brewers' association is as critical as the anti-saloon year book. Prohibition is not merely a puritanic revolt against alcohol, it is a democratic revolt against saloon politics, gambling and prostitution. One cannot believe that prohibition is doomed to failure in Christendom when it has succeeded for centuries under Mohammedanism, but prohibition is an incident of the rebellion in America against an institution that has no apologies even among the defenders of alcoholic beverages.

The war is speeding up prohibition. Yet it is incumbent on patriotic Americans to recognize the danger that our prohibitionists may be as intemperate as alcoholics. Russia has stirred the world by abolishing vodka, but Russia only prohibits the sale of beverages with 12 per cent alcohol. Germany's restrictions are solely for the purpose of conserving grains. Canada, most of whose provinces have now gone "dry," discriminates in favor of beer and wine. In the United States, however, many states have laws so drastic that they forbid all malt liquors including nutritious "near beers." The recent debates in congress show how little intelligent thought has been given to intemperance and prohibition. Prohibition is not being discussed on its merits; all of the amendments are merely riders to the food bill. The problem of law enforcement in large urban populations of foreign born is to be met by the temporary pressure of war necessity. The successor to the saloon in "dry" territory is ignored by the "drys" as it has been by the "wets" in "wet" territory.

How then is prohibition related to democracy? It is the crude answer of the native American, commonly a believer in equal suffrage, the referendum and home rule to the oligarchy of the saloon politicians. Mere prohibition may be as negative and undemocratic as war, but alcoholism, militarism and all other forms of sensualism can be met only by a passionate democracy.

TWILIGHT OF ARISTOCRACY

The Counties of Warwick in the Bookman.

We who must go are the aristocracy of England in our position of hereditary land owners. How far fairer it would be for us to recognize and accept the truth and go as the Moors went from Spain, where they, too, had become an anachronism, though the beauty that made their sojourn remarkable lingers to this day.

State ownership alone will serve to yield the best results and to repopulate the countryside. The great land owners have had their chance for centuries. Their failures outnumber their successes until these last are felt to be quite inconsiderable. In the light of our latter day crisis it can be seen beyond all possibility of doubt that there is no salvation in them. It is time that they should go, and only the state can replace them if England is to respond to the needs of the immediate future. I have written with full knowledge of the facts.

BEGINNING TO UNDERSTAND.

From the Chicago News.

This war has established irrevocably the fact that there is a community of interest between capital and labor, and that they are not "natural enemies," as some agitators declare them to be. While throwing up fortifications for defense against the common enemy outside, each is agreeably surprised to find the other patriotic, energetic, grave, resourceful, idealistic.

Labor discovers that capital is not a ravening monster subsisting on the blood of the oppressed, but a very human sort, and capital realizes that labor is not a class conscious ignoramus bent on making society a chaos, but an intelligent student of art, literature and social organization.

Capital and labor are getting acquainted, and that is the chief thing necessary to the solution of their alleged "problems," people of sound mind and morals who know one another do not quarrel. They have the same ideals and interests and they quickly harmonize the means of attaining these when they take counsel together as friends. It was not without reason that the wisest of men advised his son to get wisdom but above all to get understanding.

Holding Wheat.

From the Indianapolis News.

Passing over the questionable patriotism of the farmers who are holding wheat for a price higher than that set by the government, there is a strong probability that their course will prove, from a business standpoint, unwise. There is little likelihood that the government will permit a higher price for wheat. The government has set out on a policy of fixing prices based on the actual cost of production and allowing only normal profits. If this course should be pursued in the case of wheat how many farmers could show that their cost of production had considerably more than doubled since the war?

Doubtless the farmer paid more for seed this year than in normal years, and probably he is paying his help more than the average wage of other years. But it is hardly likel ythat both costs have doubled, that the $30 a month hand, for instance, is getting $60. Yet the price of $2.20 represents to the farmer more than double a high average price. A Kansas State College of Agriculture investigator estimates that the cost of producing wheat this year was 99 cents a bushel, making allowances for all costs. If this figure is correct, the former is doing a highly profitable business.

Some farmers are reported to take the attitude that the government can set a price, but that it can not force them to sell, and that if the price of wheat is not satisfactory the farmer can "get back" at the government by planting corn, the price of which, in some instances, has already passed wheat. But it is extremely likely that the price of corn will also be fixed, and at a level below that of wheat.

There is no indication that farmers, generally, are taking an undue advantage of the present situation or are any less patriotic than any other people. Only a few are accused of holding wheat to defeat the ends of the government, and only a few have complained of the price set. These few might find it wiser and commercially more profitable to cooperate wholeheartedly with the government.

A Tribute to German-Americans.

From the New York World.

If the Frankfurter Zeitung were as closely censored as some other newspapers in Germany it never would have published the discoveries and confessions of Rudolf Kommer. Herr Kommer resided long in the United States, where he must have been saturated with the spirit of German propaganda. Writing now with information before him of American war preparations, he marvels at conditions so much at variance with all his former conclusions.

"The first half year of war," he says, "has brought a tremendous and wonderful solidarity in the enormous crucible, and the uniform domestic front must be recognized as the greatest triumph of Americanism." In plain English this means that a shrewd observer knows and is able to say in one of the most important of German newspapers that the people of the United States are with one accord bringing their vast resources into the conflict against autocracy.

No more eloquent tribute has ever been paid to the substantial unity of the American people or to the well-recognized loyalty of the very important element among them having Germanic origin. All the hopes of Prussianism in this war, so far as we are concerned, were based upon the belief that through preoccupation with money getting, political and racial jealousies and, above all, the defection of citizens of German blood, the United States never could become an important factor in opposition to the ambitions of kaiserism.

Every German dollar spent and every German crime committed in this country had that inspiration. When Herr Kommer speaks of our tremendous and wonderful solidarity he admits the failure of German intrigue and forecasts the collapse of the militarism that supports it.

Woman Night Watchman.

From the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Women have demonstrated that there is no ordinary vocation in which they could not replace their masculine rivals, if necessary. But the ranks of the night watchmen stood fast. No woman afraid of the dark had the courage, they argued, to stalk through deserted, sepulcherlike buildings in the eerie hours of the night.

And yet there is a little woman out at the new $50,000 Latona school who is disproving any such theory. Mrs. Ida Hanna goes to work at 4:30 o'clock every afternoon and stands guard over the partially constructed school building until the workmen report for duty the next morning.

During the long night hours she watches alone, and, wat's more, she likes her job; there's not an ounce of fear in her constitution. She had a companion once, an Airedale dog, but he died.

"Nervous?" I should say not," the night watchwoman says. "I feel capable of meeting whatever emergency that may arise. I warn prowlers when they come around, and they don't stay long after that. Of course, I wouldn't hurt anyone unless it were absolutely necessary."

The superintendent of building construction, J. H. Young, thought Mrs. Hanna was joking when she went to him three and a half months ago and asked for the night watchman's job. After she got it the men smiled knowingly. They didn't think she would be there long.

"She's all right," Mr. Young says. "Lots better than a man—more steady and dependable. She not only does all her work well, but insists on keeping my office spick and span, too."

The work of Mrs. Hanna's husband takes him away at night. He is employed in South park. Little Mrs. Hanna concluded she might as well be doing something, too.

To pass spare hours during her night watch, Mrs. Hanna admits she crochets, for the light is too poor, she says, for reading or embroidering.

The Donkey and the Ballot.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

According to an old New York law, the right to vote was restricted to persons worth at least $250, which at that time was the value of a donkey. If a man had a donkey he could vote. Defeated candidates and their partisans, smarting with disappointment, were wont to raise the question as to which had done the voting, the man or the donkey. In course of time the distinction was lost sight of and the two were merged, men feeling that it was quite unnecessary to inquire or even raise the question, so certain were they that the opposing votes came from just the one class.

One is reminded of the old time question when one sees men like John Purroy Mitchel defeated at the primary election and the very limited intelligence exhibited by certain men who ostensibly represent great states in the United States Senate.

Honesty is the first chapter in the book of wisdom.—Thomas Jefferson.

Has $1,000 Swagger Stick.

From the Dallas News.

Probably one of the most expensive gifts a noncommissioned soldier ever received was presented the other night to Sergt. William Wadewitz, of Battery C, 121 heavy artillery, Racine, Wis., and now located at Camp McArthur, Tex. He was 27 years old, and at a dinner party tendered him eight of his fellow soldiers gave him a $1,000 swagger stick.

The stick is ebony, tipped with ivory and is set with a 3-caret diamond.

WOMEN ARE NEEDED TO HELP IN WAR.

Women can be usefully employed nursing the wounded, in making the soldiers' kits, and a thousand other ways. Many American women are weak, pale or anemic from womanly ills. For young girls just entering womanhood, for women at the critical time; nursing mothers and every woman who is "run-down," tired or over-worked—Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a special, safe and certain help. It can now be had in tablet form at most drug stores, or

Sioux City, Iowa.—"Some time ago I became all run down, weak and nervous, caused by my having womanly weakness. I had severe pains in back and sides, also bearing-down pains. I had doctored but did not get relief of my ailment, and began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I only had to take two bottles to cure me of my weakness and build me up in a strong, healthy condition. 'Favorite Prescription' is a fine medicine for women."—Mrs. A. McKenzie, 1 Wall Street.

Council Bluffs, Iowa.—"As far back as I can remember, when a girl at home my mother always kept Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets in the house. She had liver trouble and the only relief she ever found was in the 'Pleasant Pellets.' My husband also has liver trouble and has never failed to get quick relief when he takes the 'Pellets.' I give them to the children, too, as a purgative medicine for bilious attacks and they always give relief. I have never known them to fail. They are a fine medicine and a most wonderful regulator of the stomach, liver and bowels."—Mrs. R. E. Day, 902 Ave. C.

OLD VERERAN IN NEW ARMY

Seventy-Two-Year-Old Man Is Somewhere in France Serving Uncle Sam as Cook.

Age seems to be no barrier for service in the army.

For instance, says the Indianapolis News, there is Charley June. All the old-timers remember June, who years ago supplied the fish and game for hundreds of Indianapolis tables. He had a place of business was opposite the traction terminal station, and it was his boast that he could furnish anything that could fly or swim.

June is a veteran of the Civil war and when war with Germany was declared his old fighting spirit was revived. Because of his age, seventy-two years, he did not feel qualified to shoulder a musket and go forth to slay, yet he wished to do his bit for Uncle Sam, so he went out to Fort Harrison as a cook.

He served during the first officers' training camp and made good with a vengeance. Then an entirely unexpected honor was thrust upon him. He was invited to go to France and cook for the boys in the trenches. The proposition nearly took his breath away, but it did not take him long to make up his mind.

"During the Civil War I carried a gun and fought with the boys," said Mr. June, "and why shouldn't I cook for them now? I realize it is no Sunday picnic over there, but I do not fear the outcome. I am healthy and strong for a man of my years, and I guess I can stand it. At any rate, I am willing to take a chance for Old Glory."

Mr. June is now somewhere in France."

Some Sick.

"He came to me in the midst of a storm off Vera Cruz,' said the marine corps major. "His eyes were rolling and his blubber lips were trembling.

"'Ah want to go home,' said he. 'Ah's sick.'

"'Sick?'

"'Yes, sah, sick,' says he, 'Ah's homesick, and Ah'm seasick, and Ah'm lovesick—and dat snakily is sick.'"

Peculiarities of the Hen.

"Hens are funny creatures," observes a poultry fancier. "They have their likes and dislikes—especially dislikes. If you move a hen she turns crusty and won't lay eggs. She likes her old nest, and takes an abominable time to get used to the new.

"If you wave a cloth within sight of the occupants of your fowl run you will hear a shocking row. This particular noise is known as the 'danger cackle,' and sometimes will be indulged in without a single break for as long as twenty minutes.

"If you take it into your head to rearrange the nest-boxes, depend upon it Biddy will pay you out. She will miss that day with her usual egg

"Provided they are good, it's wisest to stick to old things in poultry-keeping, and not to shift them unless you are compelled to do so. At least there's one thing you can change, and that's the fodder. Hens won't object to that at all, in fact, they like it."

Should Make Soldiers Happy.

"When I was first admitted to the bar I pictured myself as engaged in delivering impassioned addresses to juries," writes Emerson Hough. "Later I found that a lawyer had a great many things to do besides making impassioned addresses. We picture to ourselves a soldier as engaged always in the imminent deadly breach, his sword flashing above his head. As a matter of fact, a soldier has to do a great many things besides wave his sword. He has to eat, drink, smoke, play cards, sew on buttons, wash, shave—and read. The soldier who does not read is neither as good or as happy a soldier as he might and ought to be. It is our duty to make our soldiers not only good ones, but happy ones. Ergo books, and plenty of them, for the boys at the front."

CARE IN FIRST AID.

The scene—a courtroom.

The occasion—the trial of a case in which the cause of action was an automobile accident. A man had been run over by an automobile causing a fracture of the hip. One year later he died.

The witnesses were two—physicians who had drawn the man from under the machine. The testimony was that the man had lain where he was hurt on the street for 10 minutes while the nearest police ambulance was reaching the point where the accident occurred. The man was unconscious and his pulse was beating somewhat rapidly, but strong. The crowd wanted to do something. Some wanted to give him medicine. Some wanted to lift his head. Some wanted him carried into a drugstore diagonally across the street. The physicians had refused to allow any one to lift his head or to pick the man up and carry him to the drugstore. The ambulance arrived within 10 minutes and the man was placed on a stretcher, loaded into the ambulance, and carried to a hospital. Such was the testimony.

The lawyer for the defendant roared. He bellowed like a bull. The inhumanity of the doctors! The crime of not giving this man first aid! And a lot more slush for jury consumption. The fact is that to have moved that man to the drugstore would have been the rankest kind of malpractice. The torn end of the broken bone would have lacerated the structures of his leg. To have raised his head might have cost him his life, might have been the straw which broke the camel's back.

A favorite story of John B. Murphy's related to meddlesome first aid. He said that when he was an interne in the county hospital no doctor had done his duty in shooting a case until he had probed for the bullet. He had even seen the policeman on the wagon spit on the probe and probe for the bullet. A few years before he saw the policeman on the wagon push aside a doctor who started to probe for the bullet, bawling him out as an ignoramous. "Doctors who know their business do not meddle that way, and so long as I have this man in charge you keep your probes out of him."

Meddlesome attention in emergencies has cost a great many lives.

A person loses consciousness and falls. Some kindly disposed person rushes up and pours some whisky down his throat. It does no good. It may do great harm. Or maybe water is poured into the mouth of the unconscious person. It does no good. It may strangle him. Some person lifts the head of the unconscious person and holds it in his lap, when nature plainly says: "I can best keep this man alive best take the strain from his heart, by having him lie flat." Or he has a broken arm and somebody picks him up and carries him off, the jagged end of the bone cutting and tearing his muscles, tendons, nerves and arteries.

In the case of emergencies the humane thing to do is to loosen the clothing, put the man in a natural, unstrained position, give him plenty of room and air, and do nothing more until it is known what should be done. The chances are three out of four that acts of hasty, ill considered relief will do harm rather than good. And what is more, a goodly part of the people know that meddling in emergency cases is unwise. Witness the policeman in the bullet case.

Seals Alaska's Greatest Treasure.

"Of all the treasures in Alaska, the seals are probably among the most valuable," writes Prof. G. H. Parker, of Harvard in the Scientific Monthly. "Unlike mineral wealth, they need never run out, for, in consequence of their powers of reproduction, they can yield under reasonable control a large and continuous revenue for an indefinite future."

The greatest seal rookeries are on St. George and St. Paul islands, in Bering sea. There are probably about a third of a million now. The terminology used in describing them is incongruous. "Full grown male fur seals are called bulls and the mature female cows. Their offsprings are known as pups. The young males are termed bachelors. A bull with his assemblage of cows is called a harem, and a succession of harems on a beach constitutes a rookery."

The bulls begin to arrive at the rookeries in May and June. The cows arrive in June, July and as late as August. Each bull collects a harem of from one to 100 cows, the average being about 60. A day or so after coming ashore each cow gives birth to a single pup. The harems begin to disintegrate in August. During the two or three months of the breeding season the bulls never taste food. Early in August the bulls take their departure. The rest of the colony soon follows, and by November they all have gone.

For the next six to nine months the seals never set foot on land, but swim about the Pacific ocean, feeding and turning their fat into muscle.

Seals live from 12 to 14 years. The cows produce one pup each season, beginning to breed when two years old. The bulls are not mature until the sixth or seventh year. In their first two years the bachelors associate with the pups after that they occupy shore quarters adjacent to the harems, until in their sixth or seventh year they begin to establish harems of their own.

Sweetheart Leads Police to Embezzler.

Philadelphia—As he clasped his sweetheart in his arms, Richard Asch, of New York, was arrested by detectives in the trainshed at Broad street station while hundreds looked on.

He was charged with forgery and embezzlement of upward of $100.00, and it was the blond girl who greeted him that led to his arrest, after he had successfully eluded the authorities for three weeks.

The girl, Miss Margaret Anderson, barely out of her teens and said to be a manicurist in New York, led detectives straight to the man wanted on charges preferred by his employers. In response to a letter from Asch, she set out from New York. Shadowing her was Detective Whelan.

As the train came into the station, the woman searched the faces of the crowd.

Espying Asch, she rushed into his outstretched arms.

A moment later the detective stepped forward and placed Asch under arrest.

For a time the girl appeared to be bordering on hysterics. Then she said: "I am Mrs. John L. Jones, of Washington, and this man is my husband. What right have you to arrest him?"

But for all her bravery, her sweetheart was taken to the city hall, and she was sent back to New York.

According to the police, Asch was a trusted employe of the brokerage firm of Moyse & Holmas, in New York.

ARE YOU SAVING FOOD?

The following requests from Mr. Hoover I noticed first on a bill of fare on the Nickel Plate railroad. Since then I have seen it on many bills of fare. I thought I could see where the Nickel Plate was trying to follow Mr. Roover's suggestions. Since then I have observed closely to see whether attention was being paid by hotels and restaurants and eating places generally to these suggestions. I have come to the conclusion that they are accomplishing very little.

A large proportion of the housewives have signed the little card requesting co-operation in the kitchen and dining room with the work of the food director. I have observed to see what changes have been brought about. I find that there has been little change—scarcely more than can be explained by the increase in prices.

The conclusion at which I have arrived is that so far as food conservation is concerned, Mr. Hoover will not get very far until he adopts more of the methods of Dr. Batocki.

Food administrations rules suggested for dining cars—Your cordial and thoughtful co-operation is earnestly requested in helping to win the war by conserving our food. Each one has a part to play. If we cannot fight we can avoid waste and eat wisely and in accord with our country's needs. All food served on the table and not eaten is wasted.

1. All wheat bread and butter portions are to consist of not more than two medium sized slices of bread or toast and one pad of butter, and a charge should be made for them. A charge should also be made for all crackers or biscuits. Charge for each extra pad of butter.

2. Serve no wheat bread, crackers, or wheat cakes for lunch or breakfast. Use instead corn bread (baker thin), corn muffins, corn cakes, fried mush, rye bread, oatmeal, oat cakes, buckwheat cakes, rice cakes. Serve honey and sirup with cereal stuffs whenever possible as substitutes for cream and sugar.

3. Make tarts instead of pie leaving off top crust.

4. Avoid entirely use of wheat bread, toasted, to be served under chops, squabs, chickens, entrees, game, etc.

5. Serve beef, mutton, or pork not more than once per day. Reduce the size of all meat portions by one-half, making same charge for second portion. The average meat portion should not exceed five ounces served. Increase fish and sea food courses and make specialties of them. Make special dishes of hases, cooked over meats croquettes, etc., to avoid waste.

6. Serve chickens, eggs, pigeons, squabs, rabbit, fish.

7. Serve no veal, lamb, squab chickens, or squab turkeys.

8. Serve cottage cheese.

9. Use no butter in cooking. Fry foods in animal fats or vegetable oils. Serve cream in individual portions with special charge.

10. Serve liberal portions of all vegetables and fruits in season. Encourage use of potatoes. Make a specialty of baked beans and brown bread.

11. Avoid waste by serving smaller portions, particularly of bread, butter, meats, milk, cream, sweets.

Baby Has Gone to School.

Baby has gone to school today, gone
Tripping away from me
And only a mother can understand how empty the world has grown
The toys are scattered about the swing out under the apple tree
And where the light of the baby song and happiness used to be
Is only silence, the rope swing hangs,
slow swing in the wind today,
And the kitten is stretched on the porch asleep, the baby has gone away
With a little lunch and a little frock and a little curl to the school house down the lane
And the mother waved when the baby turned, and her eyes were dim with pain

The mother waved when the baby turned
The baby was proud today
But there was pain in the mother heart
when baby has gone away
The baby-going away to school-adventuring alone
And only a mother can understand how quiet the world has grown
The toys are scattered, the kitten sleeps,
there isn't a laugh or call,
No footsteps come through the kitchen
now, or patter along the hall
And the mother arms on the window sill and head on her arms—sits long,
For hours the world is an empty world,
unknowning the baby's song.

The heart of a mother! Who's big enough to fathom a mother heart?
Who, watching the baby go trudging off,
can tell why the teardrops start?
Can tell why the smile on the mother's lips is trembly and full of pain,
As the little figure that turned to wave grows smaller along the lane?
The baby going away to school. She looks to a farther day
And a baby, grown to be tall and straight, out in the world away,
And the lonely minutes she knows today are presage of lonely years—
And the baby form and the lane are blurred and lost through the shine of tears.

—Mortimer Lewis, in Houston Post.

How Titles Are Made.

From Everybody's.

A group of northerners at a hotel in Louisville were poking fun at the partiality of southerners for the titles of "Colonel," "Major" and "Judge."

"What is a colonel hereabouts?" asked one of the group, and there immediately followed a discussion. Finally a colored attendant was drawn in.

"Well gents," said the negro, "dere's lots of ways to answer dat question. Ise knowed folks what was born kunnels—it jest run in de blood foh ginerations. An' Ise knowed folks what was jest app'inted to be kunnels. An' yet others what was made kunnels by bein' kind to niggehs. Why gents 'any man dat gives me $1 is a kunnel to me hencefo'th foheveh!'"

In Bad.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

"Many of our girls marry well," said the head of the store to the new saleslady. "A millionaire just married a girl in our fur department. Settled $50,000 on her, too."

"Dear me, and here I am at the bargain counter."

Getting at the Facts.

From the Birmingham Age-Herald.

"Miss Peacher says she has never given a young man permission to kiss her."

"I'm willing to believe that."

"Yes?"

"What I want to know is the kind of fight she puts up when a young man tries it."

His Hearing.

From the Liverpool Post.

Officer—Is your brother, who was so deaf, any better?

Bridget—Sure, he'll be all right in the morning.

Officer—You don't say so?

Bridget—Yes, he was arrested yesterday and gets his hearin' in the morning.

Easily Explained.

From the Birmingham Age-Herald.

"Your friend was suspected of being a counterfeiter or a bank robber when he tried to get a $1,000 bill changed."

"So he was, but he soon straightened matters out."

"What did he do?"

"Proved he was a motion picture star and seldom got a bill of smaller denomination in his week's salary."

False Economy.

From the Washington Star.

"Dar's a great temptation," said Uncle Eben, "to think you's economizin' when you decides to go 'wifout sumpin' you didn't keer nuffin' 'bout in de fust place."

HOW HE SAW THE BALL GAME

Man Carted Dry Goods Box and Brass Kettle to Grounds to Prevent Repetition of Injuries.

"I am a cautious man," said Mr. Slowboy, "and rarely place myself in danger without taking great precautions," and he lifted out of his wagon a dry goods box and a brass kettle. "I came out here to see a match three weeks ago," the old man explained, "and during the game a red-hot ball, right from the bat, struck me like a cannon shot between the eyes, bent my spectacles down, broke both glasses, disarranged my ideas, obstructed my view of the game and knocked me down. Then the catcher and shortstop ran together and stood on me, and jumped to catch the ball, and when they came down they both kicked me for getting in the way and making them miss the ball. And now I have brought along this dry goods box to sit in and this brass kettle to wear on my head."

And, placidly, safely, but a little warm, withal, he saw the game clear through. — Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Kept Parents in Ignorance

A kindly conspiracy kept an aged couple in ignorance of the fact that their son—an officer in the army—was facing the dreadful ordeal of being tried for murder says a London correspondent. The parents live in a remote part of the country, and as they are not in very good health, they receive few visitors. The man's sister established a censorship of all letters and papers coming into the house. Any letter that bore any reference to the trial was suppressed, while they were sometimes hard put to it to explain why the papers were so ruthlessly mutilated. During the process of the trial the man wrote letters home in which he pretended to be at the front. Eventually he was triumphantly acquitted, but the parents were kept in ignorance of even this fact, as it was feared the shock would have too great an effect upon them.

Christians in Japan.

Of Japan's 54,000,000 people, about 200,000 are Christian believers. This figure includes Roman and Greek Catholic converts. Protestant church members number 97,350, of whom 11,886 were baptized in 1915-1916. The gain was about 14 per cent.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS.

Every woman takes great pride in having her home well kept, in having the family wash done early in the week. Good bluing is needed even more than good soap. Be sure to use Red Cross Ball Blue.—Adv.

A Near-Membership.

"Does he come under the head of organized labor?"

"Well, he plays for a church choir."

His Wish.

"Do you wish the kaiser ill?"

"Do I wish him ill? I wish he were dead."

A Superior Place.

"I was driving through southern Indiana last week," relates a friend, "and I stopped for refreshment at a little town which has not yet felt the effects of prohibition. There was a regular saloon in the place—only a sign on the window read 'Sample Room.' And I entered to get a sample.

"There was quite a bunch of men in the place, leaning up against the bar. But there were no tables, and not even a chair. As I ordered my light refreshment, I spoke to the bartender, whom I judged to be the proprietor. I told him that I thought I'd come in and take a sip and maybe a bite, but that I didn't see any place to sit down. And I asked him why he didn't have any chairs. He said:

"'Young feller, this here is a first-class place. An' we don't have no chairs because we don't aim to let one man drink any longer'n he kin stand.'

"Properly rebuked, I went away."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

If ever there was a time in the history of the world when Christian people needed to be true to the church and make their lives count for God and His Kingdom, it surely is now. The whole world is feeling it's way to find a religion that can give peace to the heart, while the nations are in the throes of conflict. This church seeks to prove its divine right to be, by bringing you the message of the Gospel of Christ, the message of "Peace on earth, and Good Will to Men." You will find a hearty welcome in all the services of this church.

A HALLOWE'EN PARTY

Tuesday, October 30th, was the evening when the members of the class "Altruists" hunted the sign of the Jack-O-Lantern and found it at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lau As one by one they arrived "bewitchingly" arrayed they were greeted by smiling Jack-O-Lanterns guarding the porch. Mystery beckoned but the sign on the door read "Enter by the back door;" the back door sign said, "Thanks, now enter by the front;" there greeted by Ghosts and the Witch.

They entered rooms whose decorations, combined with the weird strains of Hawaiian music gave all a feeling of true Hallowe'en mystery and geniality We will not recount the scenes occurring before the ghosts became acquainted but after introductions, properly termed guesses, as to the identity of the ghosts present, games began, the most fun being had when the Witch told the fortune of each person by means of a cleverly designed fortune telling board.

The guests were invited to the dining room, each found his place at the table by means of neat Hallowe'en place cards. Luncheon consisted of turtle sandwiches, pickles, marshmallow salad, wafers, cake and coffee. One of the guests received a note which set him hunting and at the end of the hunt he found a big basket of fudge which all enjoyed.

After luncheon games were resumed until a late hour. The opinion of all was expressed by the fellow who said "Gee! Some home, some cook, and some time!"

IN MEMORY

It hath pleased God in His wise providence to take out of this world the soul of our deceased father, August Stroemer.

August Stroemer was born on the first of April, 1835, in Karzin Provnce, Pommern, Germany In that place he was instructed in the Christian religion and grew up to manhood.

In March, 1851, he was married to Johanna Halfpap who preceded him in death by ten years. This union was blessed with seven children, of whom one daughter died about seven years ago.

He lived with his family in Germany until the 7th of October, 1883, whereupon he came to this country and settled in this region.

He died Friday evening, October 5th, at about ten o'clock and brought his age to 82 years, 6 months and 5 days. Six children and many grandchildren remain to mourn his death.

May his memory be blessed

HALLOWE'EN WEDDING

Just as the clock struck six last Wednesday evening, Mr. Elmer Schaefer and Miss Gertrude Stille, two of Germantown's best, and most popular young people, joined hands in the English M. E. Prasonage while J. M. Howdeshell spoke the solemn ceremony that joined them together for life.

The bride and groom immediately retired to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Schaefer, a brother of the groom where they met the young people of the English M. E. church and the young people of the German M. E. church in a social meeting of the two classes.

The meeting was opened with songs and prayer ... which ... couple was introduced to their friends ... relatives as bride and groom. This was a surprise to ... one had got next till then. Congratulations followed.

Many games were participated in which was enjoyed by all. These two bands of young people surely know how to enjoy an evening together.

After all were tired out at play they were commanded to sit down in numbers about sixty-five. Then came the best, for the best was kept till the last, and that was sandwiches, cake and pumpkin pie. Now everybody was quie and busy for a while and did justice to the bountiful luncheon prepared by the young ladies together with the hostess

We are about to forget the charivari which was well done by he boys present.

Taking all things together we presume that this crowd has not spent a beter Hallowe'en in years.

IOWA BOY KILLED IN FRANCE

Iowa Boy Among First to Lose Life Fighting in France With Pershing's Forces

Three American Infantrymen are dead, five wounded and twelve captured as the result of a sharp attack by the Germans on a front line French trench, is the report to Government Officials by General Pershing on November 3. It is reported that the Americans took one German prisoner.

Those killed are Private Merle Hay, Glidden, Iowa; Private James Graham, Evansville, Ill.; Private Thos. Enright, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Among the wounded is Private Dewey Kern, Collins, Iowa.

The Germans attacked the Americans before daylight under the protection of heavy fire, cutting the trench salient off from the rest of the line and took them before reinforcements could reach the Americans. A trench salient holds about twenty-five men. That a German prisoner was taken shows the Americans were game stickers and put up a good scrap before being taken.

NEW PRESS TO BE INSTALLED

We have bought a new newspaper press of the cylinder type and the same has been shipped out of the factory. The new printing press will perhaps reach here the latter part of this week and a factory man will install it so we will print our next week's issue on it. The press will take the place of the one we are now using. It is an up-to-date cylinder press of the latest type and will be a valuable addition to our plant. We plan to make many changes in the equipment of our news office, it takes a lot of money but with the co-operation of the citizens and business men of Klemme we can put out the best paper in north Iowa. A well equipped newspaper office is a valuable addition to a little city like Klemme. We are here to boost for Klemme and we want Klemme to help boost for the Times.

RED CROSS NOTES

There was a good attendance at the meeting October 31st and quite a good deal of work was done. We had several visitors, Mrs. Sam Wessen, new chairman of Garner chapter, Mrs Clarence Barnes, chairman of organization committee, and Mrs. E. T. Wessen, also a member of that committee. Dr. Parson's mother was also a visitor bringing her knitting with her. She has already knit several pairs of socks for Red Cross. We always welcome visitors and appreciate the interest shown by these visits.

The Red Cross Society settled their bills on Thursday and the merchants of Klemme certainly did the right thing when they discounted our bills.

The following is a statement of our financial condition:

Membership Dues	$40.00
Knitting Needles	1.00
Picture Show	41.25
Donation, Viola Sampson	4.61
Discount on Bills	6.08
Amount Received	$92.94
Dues to Garner Chapter	$20.00
Outing Flannel	12.95
Muslin	9.36
Huck Toweling	10.81
Turkish Toweling	3.80
Yarn	28.83
Needles and Pins	.20
Thread	.55
Knitting Cotton and Tape	.45
Oil Cloth	1.18
Knitting Needles	3.40
Broom and Dust Pan	.90
	$92.43
Cash on Hand	.51
	$92.94

Viola Sampson turned in her donation which was appreciated very much. It enabled us to meet every bill.

The rumor has been circulated that soldiers have bought Red Cross garments. Now this would bear investigation as Clarence A. Hough, director of publicity for central division of Red Cross has offered $100 to the first person furnishing proof that any garment contributed to the Red Cross for the use of the soldiers has been sold by the Red Cross chapters with sanction of national or division officers. Mr. Hough does not restrict the offer to this or any other state.

The Society expects to meet in the Schaffer building in the future.

KLEMME, IOWA

The selective draft law in operation reveals some kinks for official ironing A case in New Jersey provoked much adverse comment Four of five sons of a widowed mother entered various branches of the service as volunteers. The fifth son was drafted and denied exemption The governor of the state has interceded in this and similar cases, pleading not only dependency but the equally strong reason of the families doing more than their bit through volunteering.

Women workers who may enter American munitions factories in the near future will save much trouble by taking note of warnings of British doctors to women in that class of work. Some of the thoughtless used powder at hand to impart a Titian red color to their looks. In many cases the result was facial jaundice and other diseases. Eagerness to improve on nature with dangerous tools usually defeats the object.

There has been added to the London regiment a new draft of 50 men remarkable for their splendid physique. It is the result of a newspaper paragraph announcing that there were openings for recruits. The average height of the new recruit is 5 feet 11½ inches, but many of them are considerably taller, and one is 6 feet 5 inches. The average age is 24½ years.

Automobile dealers in Greensburg, Pa., find it more profitable to sell machines to coal miners than to operators Since miners are making as much as $200 to $300 a month they have affected many of the styles of their employers. Never in the history of the mining industry in Westmoreland county has such prosperity been enjoyed by the miners

IOWAN TO BE TRIED ON KIDNAPING CHARGE

W. G. Karschner, of Logan, Must Answer to Court at Salem, Neb.

Logan, Ia., Nov. 3.—W. G. Karschner, of near Logan, goes to Salem, Neb., Monday to stand trial for an alleged kidnaping. Some time ago Mrs. Karschner, in Mr. Karschner's absence, left the attractive farm home near Logan, and took three children with her. Mr. Karschner effected a reconciliation and Mrs. Karschner went to a sanatorium at University Place and he brought one of the children home, and later went for the second, and when 18 miles out from Salem, Neb., he was overtaken by a deputy sheriff with a number of assistants armed with guns, in a high power motor car, arrested and taken back to Salem for the alleged kidnaping of his own daughter. All of this Mr. Karschner charges up to the unwarranted activity of the grandparents and others, regardless of the fact that there had been no order of court as to the custody and care of the child He also charges that the grandparents went so far as to change the name of the child and so register her in the Salem schools.

MANY SUBJECTS ARE BEING DISCUSSED

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 3.—Thirty round table discussions and meetings of auxiliary organizations, together with a general session this forenoon and another set for tonight, marked today's program of the Iowa State Teachers' association, which began its 63d annual convention here yesterday

The general session this forenoon at the coliseum was addressed by Henry H Goddard, of Vineland, N. J.; President Henry Suzzallo, University of Washington, Seattle, Supt. J. J. McConnell, of Cedar Rapids, and Miss Julia Lathrop, head of the children's bureau, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Suzzallo's address was on "The American Schools and National Character" and Miss Lathrop's topic was "The Highest Education of Women." Mr. McConnell gave a ten-minute presentation of the teachers' pension bill.

Sectional meetings were held on agriculture, typical children, bible teachers, chemistry, city superintendents, commercial topics, consolidated schools, drawing, English, French, Spanish, German, Greek, higher grades, high school principals, history, civics, home economics, kindergarten, Latin, manual arts, mathematics, music, normal training, physics, physical education, primary, psychology, public speaking and science. The Iowa Federation of Teachers' Clubs also held its annual meeting

ANTI-HAVNER INFLUENCE CONTINUES ACTIVE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 3.—The Iowa Protective Association of Montgomery County, which is financing the defense of Rev Lynn George J Kelly, charged with committing the Villisca ax murders, is circulating fresh anti-Havner propaganda throughout the state

The new literature is a huge handbill denouncing Attorney General Havner for alleged improper methods used in "extorting" a confession from the minister

This confession is claimed to have been "extorted" by Mr Havner and "a staff of assistants, consisting of state agents, high sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, mysterious cellmates, stool pigeons and others"

The propaganda is being circulated in the districts where Mr Havner is soon to be tried for oppression in office and where Kelly is soon to go on trial a second time for the ax crimes.

DES MIONES MAN GOES TO ASSIST PROSECUTION

Richmond, Va., Nov 3 —The wife and son of A P Chamberlain sprang up today from the west to aid in avenging his murder The arrival of Alex Chamberlain, 28 years old, of Des Moines, Ia., gave the first intimation that the dead man was not the lone bachelor or the widower that his neighbors had supposed him to be.

Mrs. Chamberlain, her son said, may come east too to help the state. She first learned of the murder of her husband through western newspapers. Authorities today thought their testimony may prove decisive in establishing the long standing enmity existing between "Judge" Chamberlain and his brother, Dr. Asa Chamberlain, now in jail here charged with his murder.

The 54-year-old Dr Chamberlain maintains his moody silence which is broken fitfully with emotional outbursts of tears, gesticulations and fervent protestations of his innocence.

WOODBINE POULTRY SHOW TO BE BIG ONE

Woodbine, Ia., Nov 3 —Boyer Valley Poultry show at Woodbine December 5-8 bids fair to be second to none in the state Though arrangements have been made for 1,000 birds, yet at the present time nearly that number from different parts of the state have been entered and Harley Hunt, secretary, is now busy with the correspondence incident to the show

The management has secured the state aid, and with the liberal support of the local merchants and commercial club and the association will be able to offer liberal cash awards Seventeen trophy cups are among the prizes to be awarded by Judge U J Shanklin, a man of statewide reputation as an expert in poultry

WATERLOO MAN OWNS ANCIENT LIBERTY BOND

Waterloo, Ia., Nov. 3.—E. C. Foster, a deputy in the county treasurer's office here, possesses what is thought to be the oldest Liberty bond still remaining unredeemed in the United States. The original face value of the bond was $200. It was issued in 1783 and was payable in 1786 Instead of redeeming it, however, Foster's ancestors preferred to keep the bond and it has been handed down through three generations.

Compounded at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, the bond is now worth $326,000 The paper on which the bond is printed is well preserved and with the exception of one tattered edge, is only a trifle yellowed by age.

CEDAR RAPIDS—A Cedar Rapids concern, manufacturer of corn products, announce they will add a rubber substitute to their list of byproducts of corn.

MEMORIAL APPROPRIATELY DEDICATED AT LEMARS

LeMars, Ia., Nov. 3 —This morning at 8 o'clock occurred the dedication of the Ignatz Meis memorial at the St. Joseph's cemetery in this city. Solemn high mass was read in the open by Monsignor Pape, assisted by other visiting clergy. Monsignor Pape also gave the dedication sermon. The memorial, which was erected by the Meis estate, consists of the crucifixion group, cast in bronze, stands on a stone block 3x9 feet and weighs more than one and a half tons Its cost was about $2,000.

DEFENSE SCORES IN ACID-THROWING CASE

Police Chief Asserts Acid Victim Declared She Did Not Recognize Thrower.

Dubuque, Ia., Nov. 3.—The defense scored at this morning's session in the Geary acid throwing case. Chief of Police Gielis testified that during the week following the occurrence Miss Ella Geary, the victim, in a signed statement, but which now is missing, declared she did not know who threw the acid. Miss Geary on the stand recently identified Miss Hagerty as the woman.

MANY NEGROES FROM SOUTH AT CAMP DODGE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 3.—More than 1,000 negro selectives from Alabama with the Three Hundred and Sixty-sixth regiment.

There also are more than 200 from Iowa and Illinois and 100 from Minnesota. The negroes are being quartered and given medical examinations as fast as possible, with a view to issuing uniforms and equipment to them.

Telegraphic instructions to the effect that a former order of the war department, calling for the recommendation of one major and two captains from each regiment for service on the battle front in France, has been rescinded, have been received, it was reported at Camp Dodge today. It is believed General Plummer and several members of his staff will be the only ones to go from here.

IDA GROVE RESIDENT HAS SUDDEN DEATH

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 3.—George W Walton, one of the prominent and pioneer citizens of Ida Grove, died suddenly, while in the office of a local physician. Heart failure was the cause Mr. Walton had just recently returned from Dubuque where he placed his wife in a sanatorium for medical treatment and intended returning to that city this week. He had been a resident of Ida Grove since 1880. He was given the postmastership in Ida Grove under the McKinley administration. He was 81 years old and a member of the local G. A. R. post having served throughout the civil war. He leaves one brother, besides the widow, the former being connected with the Great Northern railroad, with headquarters at Minneapolis.

GOVERNOR HARDING FAVORS THIS PLAN

Believed Bounty for Teutons Surrendering Would Quickly End War.

Missouri Valley, Ia., Nov. 2.—Walter A. Smith's plan for offering a bounty to German soldiers who make their way to British, French or American trenches and give themselves up, as prisoners of war, is favored by Governor Harding. He writes: "I have forwarded your letter to the secretary of war, stating to him that I consider the idea you advance most excellent and feasible."

The adjutant general of the state has also written Mr. Smith concerning the bounty plan to hasten the end of the war.

"I have been told by many that they favor the plan," said Mr. Smith, recently, "and I believe if the plan were generally known it would be approved by a great majority of the people. At $100 a head it would cost the allied powers less to get a German out of the way than to shoot or starve him, and I would rather see him alive for his family."

PROMINENT PEOPLE OF IDA GROVE MARRIED

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 2.—The announcement of the marriage of Hon. S. M. Corrie and Miss Pearl Babcock, both well known Ida Grove people, at Olds, Alberta, on October 22, has just been made known to their friends. The groom is one of the pioneers of the county, and has been one of the leading republican politicians and farmers for a quarter of a century or more. He was sent from this county to the legislature for three terms, and is recognized as one of the leaders in the republican party The bride is a native of Ida Grove by birth and only daughter of Mrs. E. F. Babcock. The mother and daughter left Ida Grove several weeks ago for a visit with relatives in Alberta, and Mr. Corrie followed about two weeks ago. Mr and Mrs. Corrie expect to spend the winter at Los Angeles, Cal.

WOMAN 63 YEARS OLD WINS A BIG VERDICT

Webster City, Ia., Nov. 2.—Mrs Christi Otteson of Jewell, aged 63 years, has just been given judgment against Osmond Osmondson, of Renwick, for $9,000 in a breach of promise action. This verdict is the largest judgment in an action of this kind secured in this part of Iowa in many years.

The breach of promise action came as the culmination of a friendship extending back to the time when Mrs. Otteson and Mr. Osmondson were children years ago in Norway.

Mr Otteson has been dead for some years and a short time ago when Mrs. Osmondson died, the husband, then living at Renwick hired Mrs. Otteson as his housekeeper. She alleges that he carried on a constant and warm courtship for eight months, during which time he asked her to marry him and she consented. Soon after, however, she charges that his ardor cooled and he refused to carry out his marriage contract while, in the captain's cab- Pachmann and the prince ced each other. Perhaps d be more exact to say that nd Pachmann faced each while the prince looked on e side lines. In the heart young gentleman, for the ee days, there had been a distress, hitherto unknown Hohenzollerns—the distress ring that, if truth were s was a poor thing who not to the wealth of the but to its poverty; who was unable to support himself, but to support whom men and women and children toiled and starved.

He had never seen it just like that before; reared in the family tradition, it had seemed a law of nature that he should have subjects to work for him and suffer for him and die for him, if need be; he had been taught that it was God himself who had given place and power to his house; and that, if other less favored people lived in misery and died in want, why that was doubtless God's will, too. And as for war—why, without war there could be no glory, no conquest, no chivalry It was war which held a nation together, which made kings more powerful and thrones more stable! But now came a man with shining eyes who talked of the sinful folly of war, of the wanton waste of armies, who dreamed of universal brotherhood, and a world governed by love! Wild words, foolish dreams, perhaps—and yet most dangerous to the idea of the divine right of kings! So, that evening, the prince sat and listened, and tried to understand.

It was Pachmann who did most of the talking, and a great deal of it was for the prince's benefit.

"We have been considering your proposal, Mr. Vard," he began, "and have discussed it thoroughly."

As a matter of fact, he had not exchanged a word with the prince on the subject; he had distrusted him ever since Vard had offered him his hand, for that action showed that this anarchist, this socialist, this enemy of kings, had detected in this young descendant of kings sympathy and a certain understanding. Pachmann thought of it with disgust and horror

"We have discussed it thoroughly," Pachmann repeated, and the prince, who detected the contempt in the words, flushed hotly, but did not speak; "and there are certain objections to your plan which we wish to submit to you. The first of these is that war does not depend upon explosives. Before gunpowder, men fought with swords and lances and arrows, before the discovery of iron and steel, with clubs and stones Man has always been fighting, even when he had no weapons but his fists."

"That is true," assented Vard. "Pray continue."

"My argument is," went on Pachmann, dripping the plural once for all, "that, though you may render all explosives useless, and blow up forts and battleships and arsenals, you will not stop war. You will merely compel it to shoft to another basis—to the old basis, probably, of brute strength, of hand-to-hand combat. And if you do that, the old days will return of barbarian invasions. The Turk will sweep down again on southern Europe; the Tartars will invade us from the east. You will not assist civilization; you will set it back 1,000 years. It will have to fight again for its very existence, as it did in the Middle Ages."

But Vard shook his head.

"I have thought of that," he said. "In the first place, it will be permitted to continue the use of explosives against the barbarians—for defense, you understand, not for aggression — until such time as we can persuade them, too, to lay down their arms. As to your other objection, it falls to the ground the moment you agree with me that all the nations of the world must ultimately become democracies. At first, it is true, men fought of their own volition, but it was to secure food, to guard their homes, or to replenish their supply of women. But since those very early days, all wars have been wars not of the people, but of their rulers. They were wars of revenge or of ambition, in which the people joined because they had no choice. They were driven into the ranks, were sometimes sold by one power to fight for another. Left to their own choice, they would have remained quietly at home, tilling their fields, rearing their families. The only great exception I know of is the early wars of Napoleon. To those wars, the French people did undoubtedly rush, but they were still drunk from the revolution, and their ardor soon passed. Your own people, the people of Germany, are a peaceable, home loving people. You have always had to keep them under your thumb by forced service, by conscription, by the most rigorous laws; you have always had to drive them to war."

"Another exception occurs to me," said Pachmann, disregarding the last sentence, "and one to which I would call your attention, since it occurred in a country where the people are supposed to govern. It was the people of the United States who drove their rulers into the war with Spain."

"That is true," Vard agreed; "and it was a mistake The people will sometimes err when their sympathy is appealed to and their passion aroused. But the results of that war were, on the whole, good. A people was freed."

"And another enslaved," said Pachmann, with a sneer.

"It was already enslaved," Vard corrected; "but I admit that it was continued in slavery. That was done by the rulers, not by the people Had the people been permitted to decide, the Philippines would have been free, no less than Cuba. Their independence must, of course, be guaranteed when the United States signs our treaty."

"But you admit, as I understand you," said Pachmann, returning to the main point, "that to abolish explosives will not abolish war."

"I admit that, yes To abolish explosives is only the first step. The final step will be the abolition of hereditary rule."

"The abolition of kings?"

"The abolition of kings, of emperors, of czars, of princes, of dukes, of all tyrants, great and small, who, by reason of birth, now claim the right to tax or oppress or command even the meanest of their fellow creatures. There must be rulers, yes, but it is for the people themselves to choose them, and then willingly to submit to them."

"But you are at this moment treating with a king," Pachmann pointed out. "Can you expect him to agree to such a program?"

"The world has outgrown kings," retorted Vard. "In any event, another 50 years will see them all abolished I but hasten the end a little—the millennium. And he will be happier when he is merely a man like other men."

"Happiness is not the greatest thing in the world," Pachmann objected.

"And I say it is!" cried Vard, with sudden violence. "Not our happiness—no, but the happiness of our fellow creatures. That is the greatest thing in the world; the thing for which every wise and good man labors!"

There was a moment's silence The prince shifted uneasily in his char and clasped and unclasped his hands. There had never been such talk as this in the royal nursery!

Pachmann's face was cynical, as he lighted a fresh cigar.

"Dreams!" he sneered. "Beautiful dreams! Do you know what it is you are undertaking? You are undertaking to change human nature."

"That is an old cry," retorted Vard scornfully. "And what if I were? Human nature is changing every day! But I am not undertaking to change it—I wish merely to free human nature from the fetters with which tyrants bind it, so that it may grow straight and strong, as God intended."

"I am not acquainted with God's intentions," said Pachmann coldly. He does not confide in me. But my philosophy, my observation, and my experience teach me that the wise man makes the best of things as they are, accepts the facts of life, and does what he can. He sees that the world is too big for him to overturn, he realizes that there are many things he cannot understand, his intelligence sometimes revolts at what seems to be oppression and injustice. But he puts away from him the fallacy that all men are equal—they are not equal, their very inequality proves it. Some must rule and some be ruled; for some life must be pleasanter and more full of meaning than it is for others; some men must be strong and some weak, just as some women are beautiful and some ugly. It is not their fault; it is their misfortune and they suffer for it. Which brings me to the principal objection I have to your proposal. It is this: I believe that we shall find it a mere waste of time to invite the nations of the world to sign a treaty for complete disarmament; they distrust each other, and that distrust has proved too often to be well founded. The long centuries have made them jealous, sullen, watchful. There is only one motive which can make them sign—fear—fear of what may happen if they do not!"

"I have already said," remarked Vard, "that I am ready to apply compulsion, should it be necessary."

"But you are finite," Pachmann objected, gently. "You are but an individual, whose life may end at any moment; while, as you yourself have said, this plan of yours will take long years, generations perhaps, to consummate. To perfect it will test the best intellects of the world. Once began, it must be carried through. Do you think it wise to imperial its success by making it depend so largely on yourself? Besides, what would be easier than an unwilling nation to suppress you? A pistol shot, a glow with a knife and the brotherhood of man tumbles to pieces "

"What is it you propose?" asked Vard, who had listened to all this with growing impatience.

"I propose that, instead of so great a task being assumed by an individual, it be assumed by an entire nation which shall pledge its honor to carry it to success."

"And this nation," said Vard sarcastically, "should, of course, in your opinion, be Germany?"

"I admit," replied Pachmann, with dignity, "that I consider Germany best fitted to carry out the plan. I think you will agree with me that, if a single nation is to undertake it, it must be one of the five great nations. In world politics, the others are negligible. Well, let us see. France, a nation of peacocks, excitable and impressionable, easily angered making much of trifles! jealous of their dignity, a dying nation which grows smaller and weaker every year. England, also a degenerate nation, soaked in gin, where 100,000 men are unemployed, and where no better remedy for pauperism can be found than universal pensions, which only makes more paupers. Russia an ignorant nation, whose ruling class is composed of men without morals and without ideals — thieves and drunkards and vain braggarts. Their remains America, and at first glance it might seem that here is the nation to be entrusted with the great work. But, after all, it is a nation of money grubbers, ruled by a money trust, where wealth is worshipped as no other nation worships rank, a nation without culture, without experience in world politics, without self control, loudly vain, inept, wasteful, childish—a nation, in other words, at the awkward age between youth and manhood.

"Let me now turn to Germany. I speak only what is within the knowledge of all intelligent men when I say that in manufacture, in agriculture, in the administration of government, in science, in literature, in music, in general culture, Germany is first among nations. Some may quarrel with her military policy, but none can question her progress or her achievements. All other nations come to Germany to learn. This is not exaggeration! it is calm statement of fact. I firmly believe that today, intellectually, morally, materially, Germany is the first nation in the world. And it is altogether fitting that she should be chosen as the leader of the world and arbiter of the affairs of all nations."

"In answer to you, Admiral Pachmann," he said, speaking slowly and carefully, as though weighing every word, "I can only say this: I do not dispute Germany's great achievements; no man can do that. It is probably true that in science, in learning, in general culture, and in efficiency, she is, as you say, first among nations. Her people are a great people—but it is not them you represent. You represent an hereditary monarch, the only one in Western Europe who still speaks of the divine right of kings —a man who would be an absolute autocrat, if he dared. Supporting him is a powerful circle of hereditary nobles, whose interest it is to increase n every possible way the prestige and power of the throne. At their command, ready to do their bidding, is a magnificent army and a great navy. Did your emperor possess my secret, he could at once declare war against Europe; he could conquer Europe, and every German prince would be a king. My whole purpose would be warped and debased. Instead of universal brotherhood, we would have a single ruling house, imposing its will on millions of conquered peoples. Instead of love, we should have world wide hate. And I say to you plainly, sir, that, rather than that such a thing should come to pass, I will destroy my invention and leave the world as it is."

"ANOTHER" MUTINY REPORTED AT KIEL

Admiral Thrown Overboard and Forced to Leave Kiel—Three Others Killed.

London, Nov 2.—Three officers and a number of sailors of the German navy were killed in "another" mutiny at Kiel early in September, according to a dispatch from Amsterdam to the Daily Express The outbreak occurred aboard the battleships Kron Prinz and Shleswig Holstein and started when the men revolted against being drafted into the submarine service.

The sailors on the Kron Prinz threw Admiral Schmidt overboard and stabbed and threw overboard Lieutenant Raul, the admiral's aid and another officer. A battle on the ship's deck between the officers and sailors followed. Three officers and a number of sailors were killed Similar scenes occurred on the Schleswig Holstein.

Admiral Forced to Leave.

Admiral Schmidt was rescued but it was necessary for him to leave Kiel. All the surviving mutineers were arrested

The battleship Kron Prinz displaces 25,293 tons and was built in 1915 Her complement is 1 150 men The Schleswig Holstein was completed in 1908 and measures 13,000 tons. She carries 729 men Vice Admiral Von Capelle, German minister of marine, announced in the reichstag on October 9 the discovery of a plot in the German navy Dispatches from Amsterdam and London reported that the crews of four battleships of the German fleet had taken part in a mutinous outbreak at Wilhelmshaven Three of the ring leaders were shot, while heavy sentences were imposed on the others.

This outbreak was said to have occurred about six weeks earlier or about the first of September Admiral Von Capelle accused three radical socialist deputies of taking part in the plot, but the German government has not taken any action against the members of the reichstag

GAIN IN DESTRUCTION OF SUBS INCREASED

"Avoid Destroyers," Under Sea Commanders Repeatedly Warn Associates.

By Associated Press.

Base of the American Flotilla in British Waters, Oct. 16 —Diaries taken from captured U-boat commanders furnish documentary evidence that the destroyer is the most effective of present weapons against the submarine.

"Avoided destroyer," is the often repeated entry. In fact, these logs show conclusively that the submarines are having a hard time of it.

The result of the destroyer activity during the last four weeks has been not only a decrease in casualties of merchant ships, but also a still more satisfactory increase in the submarines sunk.

Develop New Offensive.

The convoying the merchantmen has now reached a stage of considerable perfection after many months' work in training both the officers of merchant ships and the personnel of the patrol flotilla While systematic convoying was undertaken primarily as a defensive measure, it has now developed that convoying is at the same time the best offensive measure yet devised against the U-boat.

KENYON WITNESSES LONDON NIGHT RAID

Senator From Iowa and Companion Watch Fireworks and Go Back to Bed.

London, Nov. 2.—United States Senators William S. Kenyon, of Iowa, and John B. Kendrick, of Wyoming, have passed unscathed through their second air raid experience in London. On the first occasion, they were attending a dinner given at the Athenaeum club by the lord high chancellor in honor of the visiting congressmen and last night, they were asleep in their suite on the top floor of a hotel when they were awakened by the German bombardment.

Senator Kenyon was the first to be aroused by the boom of the guns. He jumped out of bed and hurried to Kendrick's bed and shook him from his slumbers with the remark:

"Senator, they are here."

The incessant booming made further elucidation unnecessary.

Kendrick rubbed his eyes, and leaped up and the two pajama-clad senators hastened to the windows which they threw open, the better to hear and see.

From their high places which overlooked the park the senators had a good view of the gunfire, although the moonlit sky flecked with tiny clouds made it difficult to catch a glimpse of the Gothas, which were soaring at great height.

"After we were convinced from what we saw of the wonderful barrage fire that the enemy could not get closer to us," Senator Kendrick said, "we went back to bed and made up for lost sleep."

"BOOZE" THIEVES GET VALUABLE LIQUOR STOCK

ALLIES ARRIVE BIG GUNS OPEN NEW HUN SMASH

Rome Says Plans Being Made for Counter Blow Against Germans, Already on Opposite Bank.

FLYERS SAVE CIVILIANS

Great Third Army Is Pulled Safely Through the German Noose, Statement From Headquarters Says.

By Associated Press.

The battle of the Tagliamento has been begun by the artillery

Guns of the Austro-German invaders of northern Italy have opened fire from the easterly side of the river upon General Cadorna's positions on the western bank of the stream to which the Italian armies have effected a retreat during the 10 days that have elapsed since their Isonzo front was broken

Cadorna's artillery is replying, Rome announces today, and the struggle for the river line is on

Apparently the Teutonic attempt to force a crossing of the stream is not to be long delayed. An Italian statement announces the advance of Austro-German patrols from the main enemy positions of the river bank. They were there met by Italian machine gun fire and repulsed Uncertainty exists, however, as to whether the Italian high command has planned a definite stand on the Tagliamento line or if merely a delaying action is intended to afford time for the preparation of a stronger line at the Livenza, 10 to 15 miles further west, or at the Piave, approximately 25 miles from the Tagliamento. The next day or two seems likely to resolve this doubt.

The third Italian army has carried out its retreat to the eastern side of the Tagliamento nearly complete as it left the Isonzo. The other armies did not fare so well.

The Italians destroyed great stores of materials and ammunition in their retreat.

Italian Headquarters in Northern Italy, Thursday, Nov 1.—Italian and allied troops are preparing for a counter offensive. A great battle based on the line of the Tagliamento river is forecast.

Not only is the main body of the Italian army intact, after having dealt several blows to the enemy, but it is now apparent that the Italians have thwarted the Austro-German plan of encompassing the third army on the Carso, thereby cutting off the flower of the forces in this region, rendering the Venetian plains defenseless and encouraging the hope of the enemy for a decisive victory with far reaching political results.

Heroism Saves Disaster.

The safe retirement to the Tagliamento was due to the unexampled heroism of large bodies of Italians of such spirit as the Alpini, on Monte Nero, who refused to surrender and Maggiore, which perished to the last man rather than yield ground. It was because of such resistance in the face of overwhelming forces of enemy artillery and infantry that the civil population was able to retire. It was owing to the valor of Italian aviators combatting the Austro-German army of the air that fleeing women, children and old men who crowded the roads were not struck down by bursting bombs.

The spirit now confronting the enemy is excellent. The troops are fired with the determination to expel the invaders from Italian soil

The cavalry rear guard continues to screen the movement of the main body of the Italian army to its newly chosen position and at the same time to check the advance of the enemy

Enemy Pressure Begun.

General Cadorna's bulletin last night gives the first idea of where the advance is making itself felt along the hills connecting St. Daniele, Del Friuli, the Ledra canal and Pozzuolo Del Friuli, making a curved line some miles west of the Isonzo river

Military necessity still restricts rigidly the sending of details of the operation and the mention of places, but within these close limits some general idea can be given of the heroic resistance the main part of the Italian army gave to the rush to overwhelming numbers.

The greatest shock came on the north, where the Isonzo first was crossed. Here occurred the weakening of certain detachments of the second army, which General Cadorna has bulletined with the frankness of a great commander. It was this weakening which gave the German contingents the opportunity at a critical moment to pass forward between a portion of the army on the north and that on the line further south.

Now began the double exposure on the southern force to fire in the front and on the flank, which required a steady falling back until the entire army was in movement toward the newly established positions further west. During this prodigous movement of the main front and the rear guard, which can only be sketched in the broadest outlines, some sections sustained shocks of exceptional intensity.

Some sections sustained shocks of exceptional intensity The commanding height of Monte Nero, which the Italians had occupied after deeds of great valor, was defended from onslaughts on three sides, which gradually developed an envelopment.

Retreats to Save Army.

Added to this was the suddenness of supprise blow from the north, which developed into a turning fire befort the southern armies and also on their extreme flank, gradually extending to their rear. It was to extricate the troops from this situation that the retirement began all along the extended advanced positions occupied by the Italian army within Austrian territory.

This line stretched roughly from Plezzo (Flitsch), far in the north, southeastward through Gorizia to Monfalcone, on the Adriatic. The second army occupied most of the front above Gorizia, the third army that below Gorizia.

The retirement was accompanied by shielding operations of the rear guard, which poured a deadly fire into the advancing columns and at the same time destroyed powder depots and arsenals with the double purpose of giving time for the withdrawal of heavy guns and of preventing military stores falling into the hands of the enemy

The Germans encountered a stubborn resistance on the Bainsizza plateau and heaps of enemy dead mark the lines.

The Jeffery "Six"

---Two Power Ranges---

The "Loafing" Range

Economical Operation

In it's loafing range it exhibits all the admirable traits you would expect in an eighty horse power eight of real class.

And through all its varied performance in it's "loafing" range, it is automatically operating on half fuel rations--in fact it uses fuel so sparingly as to shame many a lesser powered six--even many a four.

The "Sporting" Range

Extravagant Performance

You have only to open the throttle wider to release her double popets and give her full rations--and utterly change her whole character.

Now you have brute power and speed that puts all ordinary contenders at your mercy--you have nothing to fear from even the few cars that rightly claim the distinction of real class.

See the Jeffery--ride in it--compare it for appearance, power, flexibility and economy with any other six or eight--and we will leave it to your judgement if it does not deserve it's name--"Amerrca's Greatest Six."

HER MASTERPIECE

By MARTHA M'C. WILLIAMS.

The king would have flounced in if he had been privileged to wear petticoats. Being restricted to trousers, he expressed his discomfiture by rather wabbling strides and a heavy flop into the corner of the settee. There, after a minute, he placed his head in his hands, and swore—under his breath—because the duchess lolled in a long chair a little way off.

She was not a real duchess, of course. The nickname ran back to the days of pigtails, when he had been King Mollygob, she Duchess of Two Sticks, though an unfeeling world had called them, commonplacely, Dave Mason and Janet Lee. Only children and close neighbors, they had been all but inseparable until the era of college. Janet went first, being a year the older. Then Dave went, and thus it happened that they had not met for five years.

"Swear out loud! It's more relieving," Janet said after a minute, with a soft, suppressed giggle. "Or, better still—tell me about it. Does true love's course refuse to run smooth for lack of an obstacle?"

Davy cried, sitting up with a jerk: "How did you—how could you guess?"

"Didn't—a certainty—knowing the other party in interest as I do," Janet flung back. Davy shook his head at her. "It's bad enough to have you reading law, though you don't mean to practice," he said. "I won't have you talking it at me—I want to forget there is such a thing."

"Hey, for the briny! The Spanish Main! We yearn to go a-pirating! We do, oh, we do!" Janet intoned, her eyes twinkling.

Davy looked properly foolish, but blurted out: "If you knew what reason I have to hate law and all its works, you wouldn't make fun of me. Edna refuses me, because our joint inheritance of the Wayland fortune makes it all cut and dried—I'd like to give her my share—indeed, I'd give it to anybody—but—the will steps in—if either of us refuses the money it works forfeiture to both—"

"Leaving you free to refuse each other? What a pity!" Janet interrupted: "If Ed had to take you, will-she-nil-she, she'd be just the loveliest martyr. I can see her right now, fainting at the altar—regardless of orange blossoms and the Wayland old lace—"

"Don't! You hurt me!" Davy protested. "You can't know how much—since you've never cared for—anybody."

"Praise be!" Janet flung back at him—with yet a subtle hardening of the lips. "But live in hope, my child. Who was it sang, 'Old maids at forty-five grow giddy'? When my time comes it will be your turn to laugh."

"I never want to laugh at you—promise you won't laugh at me—now," Davy answered eagerly. "You see, I've been thinking that maybe if Ed could be persuaded there was something—a prior attachment—Oh, hang it, you understand." She got up and walked to the window, saying over her shoulder, "Leave it to me. Nothing easier."

As she disappeared in the library beyond Davy saw her suddenly falter and sprang toward her. She waved him back gayly and shut the door in his face. Half an hour later she came through it holding a fairly written sheet, which she thrust into his hands.

When he had read it his eyes were dim. "Lord! But you do make up things!" he said not quite steadily. "If—if this were true," glancing at the sheet—"why, I shouldn't ever draw another happy breath."

"Oh, yes, you would! You're forgetting the stimulus to your vanity. Think of being the only man that ever touched this adamantine bosom," Janet cried merrily. "I call that a very perfect appeal and confession—if I did lay it on rather thick. Ed likes her romance as the old lady did her grog—she didn't mind so long as it was hot, strong, sweet—and plenty of it."

"Cease, mocking cynic and tell me how you did it. It is simply wonderful. I swear truth couldn't be as true." Davy interrupted. Janet half turned her head, saying in her gayest voice: "You flatter me. Still, I agree with you. Truth couldn't be as true; feeling, you know, never equals imagination. But now, be off with you, while I copy this for the mail bag. Of course I'm going to keep the original—of my masterpiece."

"I wonder will Edna dare—I'll hate her if she shows it to me," Davy said, flushing. Then he got up, caught both Jane's hands in his, and said huskily: "Duchess, you are the greatest woman in the world. Not another would have so humbled her pride, even in make-believe, to humor another woman's whim and save a man's love from tantalizing delay. Do believe me—I couldn't reverence you more if what you have done were real. I marvel that, knowing you, I can love anybody else."

"Will you take yourself off?" Janet cried imperiously, but letting her hands lie in his clasp. He kissed them tenderly, turned and left her. She flung herself upon the settee, pressing her lips, her cheek, her fingers, upon the wood where his head had rested. Her face was healthily colored, her hand steady. She said nothing for at least five minutes. Then, rising, she clutched the letter and walked toward the library, saying as she turned the knob: "Edna, will make him read the letter. God send that she has not sense enough to see and tell him I wrote only the truth."

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

(CHAPTER XIX—Continued.)

Pachmann had listened intently, nodding his head from time to time, or puckering his brows in dissent.

"Have you yourself no ambition?" he asked. "Is there nothing in the way of honor position which you desire for yourself or for your daughter?"

An ugly sneer curled the inventor's lips.

"Bribery—I expected that!" he said. "No, there is nothing—but the consciousness that it was I who ended war!"

"And your refusal of my first proposal is absolute?"

"Absolute. I consider it insulting."

"You will not modify the terms of your proposal?"

"Not in any essential detail."

"And if Germany refuses, you go to France?"

"That is my intention."

"Very well," and the admiral rose, too. "The situation is, then, quite clear to us, there is no longer any shadow of uncertainty. It is for us to assent or to refuse. Our answer will be ready for you in a very short time."

Vard bowed, his face very pale, and stepped to the door. He paused with his hand on the knob.

"Remember one thing," he said; "it will be better for Germany to lead than to follow; your emperor will find the head of the procession much more to his taste than the tail of it. And it will be for him either the one or the other! Good night!" and he opened the door and was gone.

Pachmann stood with clenched fists and flushed face staring at the spot where Vard had stood.

"Fool! fool!" he muttered. "That he should think he could defy and threaten and still escape! A great fool, is he not, my prince?"

The prince awoke, as from a dream.

"Great, at least!" he said.

CHAPTER XX.

THE PRINCE SEEKS DIVERSION

In spite of his protestations and the confident manner he assumed when with the prince, Pachmann was, as a matter of fact, exceedingly disturbed. It was true that for an individual as humble as Ignace Vard to hope to stand against the might of the German empire was absurd in the extreme; but perhaps Vard was not alone. Perhaps back of him there was some person or some power at which even Germany would pause.

Two incidents had been distinctly disquieting: the wireless from Lepine and the assault on Schroeder. The thing which filled Pachmann with dismay was not so much these incidents themselves as the degree of knowledge they indicated. Why did Lepine think Vard was on the boat? How had he connected the inventor with the disaster at Toulon? How had the person who assaulted Schroeder known of the conference in the captain's cabin? How much had he heard of that conference? What use would he make of what he had heard? In a word, did France suspect what had happened to La Liberte, and, if so, how much did she know?

A hundred times Pachman asked himself these questions, and a hundred times tried to find some answer to them other than the obvious answer. He tried to persuade himself that Lepine had not connected Vard with the Toulon disaster, but was searching for him for some other reason; he tried to make himself believe that the assault on Schroeder was merely the result of a seamen's quarrel; he told himself over and over again that France could not suspect, that it was impossible she should suspect. But he could not convince himself. Always he came back to the obvious fact that, if Vard was wanted at all, it could only be fore the affair at Toulon, and that the man who had taken Schroeder's place at the door of the captain's cabin could only have done so because he wanted to hear what was passing on the other side of it.

Always, with sinking heart, Pachman came back to this point; and at such moments he wondered whether, after all, the emperor would not do well to lay aside his personal ambition, to consent to Vards proposal and assume the leadership of this great world movement, in all good faith. Surely that would be glory enough! Better, as Vard had said, to lead than to follow, better to stand proudly forth at the head of the movement than to be whipped into place in the rear. What humiliation!

And suppose Vard should manage to escape, suppose he should really get into touch with France! Pachmann, closing his eyes, could see a great fortress leaping into the air, could hear the thunder of the explosion which destroyed a dreadnaught! It was a dangerous game he was playing, and yet, to accede to Vard's proposal meant the loss of Alsace-Lorraine, meant the eventual abasement of the Hohenzollerns, the rise of socialism. No, he could not consent; he had not the power to consent; he had his instructions, precise and clear, from the emperor himself. At any cost, that power must be his, and his alone!

At any cost! Pachman drew a deep breath. He knew now what the cost must be. Well, when the moment came, he should not hesitate.

Sunday morning found Pachmann beside the assistant purser in the library of the second cabin, beginning the inquiry there. It was even more drastic than it had been in the first, and the victims emerged from it heated, angry, and with the fixed determination never again to travel by a German boat. Neither the captain nor the purser could vouch for any of the undistinguished people here, and so each one of them was most thoroughly examined. Even those with passports did not escape. Pachman examined all such documents minutely, compared the written description point by point with the appearance of the passenger, and asked many questions to satisfy himself that the person presenting it was really the one to whom it belonged. Yet, in spite of all this, passenger after passenger came through the ordeal successfully.

As the list was called alphabetically, it was soon the turn of M. Chevrial. He approached the table with confidence, produced his passport, and sat down to await such questions as might be asked him. Pachmann glanced at the Frenchman and his eyes narrowed with anger, for this impudent person appeared to be amused at the proceedings! Then he picked up the passport and studied it carefully. It had been issued by the French government two months previously, as a renewal of a former passport, to Andre Chevrial, wine merchant, of 18 Rue des Chantiers, Paris; whose appearance and physical characteristics were described in detail. Pachmann compared the items of the description point by point with the man who sat smiling so shamelessly before him, answering the purser's questions in an ironical voice. The very fact that the man was so typically French and so plainly amused created in Pachmann's mind a flair of suspicion which dilated his nostrils and narrowed his eyes. But the passport was in perfect order, and Chevrial's answers came without hesitation.

"You are a wine merchant?"

"Yes."

"How long have you been in that business?"

"More years than I care to remember."

"That is not an answer."

"Let us say 20 years, then."

"Always at Paris?"

"The time before that did not count."

"Then you have not been always at Paris?"

"Heavens, no! First at Bordeaux; but for 10 years at Paris."

"You are well known there?"

"Ask my neighbors in the Rue des Chantiers; or cross the street to the wine market and ask any one there if he knows Andre Chevrial! Well known! But yes!"

"Is this your first visit to America?"

"Oh, no; nor my second. But it is my first trip on a boat of Germany, and will be my last. On the French boats, my compatriots know me. They do not annoy me with all these questions."

It was Pachmann who asked the next one.

"How does it happen that you travel this time by a German boat?"

Chevrial shrugged his shoulders.

"Because there was no French one. It is necessary that I be in New York on Wednesday. There was no other boat that would arrive in time. Had there been, I would have taken it."

"So you do not like German boats?"

"I like nothing German," said Chevrial, calmly. "Least of all, this inquisition, which, it seems to me, demands some explanation."

"It is for the immigration bureau," the purser hastened to explain. "The American laws are very strict."

"The laws do not concern me. I am not an immigrant. I am merely one who goes on business and who returns. My papers are in order, are they not?"

The purser was forced to confess that they were.

"Then," said Chevrial, returning them to his pocket, "if there are any further questions to be answered, I will wait until I get to the pier at New York to answer them. I shall at least have the pleasure of talking to an American!" and he got up and left the library.

Pachmann was furious; but he had no excuse for holding the fellow, nor for examining his baggage. In search of such excuse, he dispatched a wireless to the agent of his government at Brussels, directing him to secure at once all the information available about Andre Chevrial, 18 Rue des Chantiers, Paris; and that evening a very polite gentleman called at the house in question. It was a tall, hideous house, with a cabaret on the first floor. To its proprietor the visitor addressed himself. But yes, the proprietor knew M. Chevrial, a merchant of wine, who had honored his house for many years by occupying an apartment on the third floor. His present whereabouts? Ah, the proprietor could not say; M. Chevrial made many journeys in the interests of his business; he was absent at the present time. It was the season of his annual trip to America; perhaps he was now on his way thither. He had left no address; but if monsieur wished to write a letter, it would be sent forward as soon as an address was received.

The visitor declined to write a letter, but left his card—or, at least, a card—to be given to M. Chevrial upon his return. Then he took his leave. And the proprietor stuck the card in the frame of the clouded mirror back of the bar, chuckling to himself.

A report of all which Pachmann duly received by radio next day.

The prince, meanwhile, was finding the voyage wearisome. He was not a difficult person to amuse; and he was very expert in the art of killing time; he had done little else since he emerged from the nursery; but here on shipboard he possessed none of the implements with which he usually carried on that slaughter. He could sit in the smoking room with a tall stein before him, he could stroll about the deck and stare at the sea, which he did not care for; but there was no one to talk to. His subjects of conversation were limited, and all of them were associated more or less with his princely character; here, where, for the first time in his life, he found himself divested of that princely character, he was completely at a loss. The trouble was that he had no sense of humor. So he found it impossible to gossip with plebeian unknowns, or engage in card games with irreverent middle class artisans and drummers. He could not even carry on a flirtation with any of the pretty girls! He had attempted it with one of them; but, after a very few minutes, she had left him with her chin in the air, and an exclamation which sounded singularly like "Beast!" What is gallantry in a prince, is impertinence or worse in a less privileged person!

Remember, our prince was merely a good natured, thick headed, young man, who had always been compelled to take himself seriously, whose life had been ordered for him from day to day to its minutest detail; who had never been called upon to use his wits in earnest. There had always been some one to do his thinking for him; there had always been the routine of drill and study to fill a certain portion of every day; and there had always been the fearful delight of escaping from his father's eye and roaming the streets of Berlin in quest of adventure. But here on shipboard, the day was 24 empty hours long, and even Pachmann had deserted him, to spend his time asking the passengers interminable questions, whose purpose the prince could not in the least understand.

So, on this Sunday morning, having attended the services in the dining saloon for want of something else to do, and kept awake with great difficulty, having smoked innumerable cigarets, having snubbed an American whose manner was distinctly fresh, having tramped up and down the decks, and looked into the library to find Pachmann still asking questions, the prince made a sudden daring resolution, walked quickly forward, ascended to the first class promenade, and looked about for Ignace Vard. With the inventor, at least, he need wear no disguise, and he simply must talk to somebody. Besides, the inventor's talk gave him a good feeling at the heart—the feeling that he might really some day do something worth while! Pachmann would disapprove, of course; but who was Pachmann? A younger son of the inferior nobility! He must remind Pachmann of that, some day, for he seemed to have forgotten it since the emperor had taken him up!

He found the object of his search leaning against the rail, far forward, staring ahead at the path the ship was taking. Vard greeted him with evident pleasure.

"You have come to arrange for the final conference?" he asked.

The prince shook his head.

"I know no more of that than you," he said.

"But I was assured that your decision would be made at once. My plans depend upon your answer. This is Sunday. On Tuesday we reach New York."

"I know nothing," repeated the prince. "I have not spoken with the admiral today—indeed, I have scarcely spoken to him for three days. On Friday and Saturday and again today, he has spent every moment in an examination of the passengers."

"Why does he do that?" asked Vard quickly.

"I do not know."

Vard glanced at the prince, and his face softened a little.

"So you have been left to amuse yourself," he said, "and, not succeeding very well, have come to me? Is that it?"

"Yes," said the prince; "I must talk to some one, and I find that I cannot talk with people who do not know who I am. The men offend me, the women I offend."

This time there was genuine friendliness in Vard's face.

"Poor fellow!" he laughed. "Well, I have never acted as court jester, but I am willing to try. Come with me."

He led the way back along the deck and opened a door.

"This is my room," he said. "Come in. You should feel more at home here than I do, for it is an imperial suite."

The prince assented gravely, entered, and the inventor, his eyes dancing, closed the door.

"Sit down," he said. "You may smoke," and he proceeded to roll himself a cigaret. "This is your first visit to America? Yes? The first thing you will notice is that not many Americans smoke cigarets. Until quite recently, the cigaret was believed to be in some mysterious way debauching; no one but degenerates were supposed to use them. Even yet that is the prevailing opinion outside a few of the large cities."

"Most curious," commented the prince, and blew a smoke ring toward the ceiling.

"Outside of New York, which is fairly cosmopolitan, there is the same prejudice against wine or beer, or any fermented or distilled spirit. No public man, no teacher in a public school or university, no physician, no professional man — no man, in a word, who depends upon public opinion, public approval, for a livelihood—would dare sit at a table on the sidewalk and drink a glass of beer or a liquor. He might do it once, and escape with the reputation of an eccentric; but to do it twice would be to brand himself as not trustworthy."

"Astonishing!" said the prince. "Do you speak seriously?"

"Very seriously. Some of the states have even enacted laws that no alcoholic beverage of any kind may be sold within their borders."

"But," stammered the prince, staring, "do you call that liberty? No country of Europe would dare enact such a law!"

TAKE IT EASIER.

Elizabeth Prentiss.

If you could once make up your mind in the fear of God never to undertake more work of any sort than you can carry on calmly, quietly, without hurry or flurry, and the instant you feel yourself growing nervous and like one out of breath, would stop and take breath, you would find this simple common sense rule doing for you what no prayers or tears could ever accomplish.

A MODEL HOUSING LAW.

Michigan has just passed one of the best housing laws to be found anywhere. It is to be noted that this is a state law, and that in spite of that fact it is fully abroast of some of the boss ordinances of the better regulated cities. Some of the provisions of this law are as follows:

Side Yards—Dwellings hereafter erected may be built up to the side lot line if the side wall is built without windows. If, however, any side yard is left, it shall be at every point open and unobstructed from the ground to the sky, and its width shall be proportionate to the height of the dwelling and to the length of the side yard.

The law then sets forth the minimum widths for side yards on lots where there are multiple dwellings, private dwellings and two family dwellings of different heights.

Courts—The size of courts is regulated by the height of the building. The minimum width of an outer court for a one-story building is five feet; for a two-story building, six feet; for a three-story building, seven feet. It is to increase two feet for each story over three.

Cellars—In dwellings hereafter erected no room in the cellar shall be occupied for living purposes.

Basements—Basement rooms can only be occupied for living purposes provided they have a required amount of air and sunlight and are well drained and dry.

Water Closets—The law provides that every dwelling hereafter erected shall have a separate water closet. Every water closet shall be in a compartment the partitions of which reach the ceiling except in large, well kept establishments for which there is provision for part way partitions between the seats in water closets. Every water closet shall have one or more windows opening to the outside. No water closet shall be placed out of doors. No water closet shall be placed in a cellar except with written permit from the health officer.

In two-family dwellings and in multiple dwellings belonging to class A there shall be a separate closet for each family. In multiple dwellings of class B there shall be at least one water closet for each 15 occupants. The floors of water closets in two-family and multiple dwellings must be of cement or other waterproof, nonabsorbent construction.

Every dwelling house built in a location accessible to a sewer must connect with the sewer. The law sets July, 1918, as the date by which yard closets must be connected with sewers, where possible. Insanitary places must be made sanitary without delay.

Where property violates any of the provisions of this housing code the law provides for fines and penalties. These fines and penalties constitute a lien on the property. If a tenant is responsible for the insanitary conditions, upon the establishment of proof the owner is given the right to cancel the lease and eject the occupant.

As Northcliffe Sees Us.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

The United States without Alaska is as large as all Europe without Russia. New York is as populous as London, or more so. Chicago is greater than Berlin. Texas is more extensive than Austria-Hungary, or Germany, or France. California and Montana exceed the British Isles or Italy. And our hundred millions are one people spiritually, economically and politically, one as they never were before and as few others are.

Our vast distances and areas, our multitude, our resources, engender our own peculiar methods. Our railways sprawl across the continent, our assembling places dwarf those of any other land, as our ports are huger, our rivers longer, our mountains wider, our valleys, deserts and plains greater.

These physical features have compelled our people to wholesale actions, so to speak whereas others deal in retail. We have been inventive for 150 years, and have become the most practical and efficient race in history. Nothing stops us. We do not recognize the word "impossible." We have no regard for precedents; we make our own and then upset them. The American mind travels from one point to another by the shortest line and arrives with dispatch at its objective landing "with both feet" upon "the home plate."

Lord Northcliffe, writing to his own London Mail, senses these Americans ever more distinctly than we do ourselves. He is in this country on a mission, and has had opportunity to observe our stupendous preparation. It a little dazes him, but he does its magnitude and its celerity justice. The dust does not blind him, nor any incidental confusion. He sees that we are "tackling" an herculean job but "getting away with it" in characteristic American style.

We are accustomed to immensities. We think in stupendous figures. The big thing is more easy for us even than the little. We go at it right and we push it through. We stir up a lot of row, but we make good. There is waste, there are mistakes, there is much noise and a heat of running around. But in shorter time and with better result than is possible to any other people, we accomplish what we purpose. Northcliffe, with his own power of tremendous energy and initiative, understands our powers. Better than any Englishman who has come over, he understands our American genius. His own is akin to it. They call him in England "the man who gets things done." He understands a people who gets things done.

Slow? We are slow in coming to a view in arriving at decision. We mull around a long time, scarcely able to make up our minds where we are at. But the moment is reached finally, and then the lightning flashes and the thunder rolls. We get into action instantly. No grass grows under our feet. We go after results and we get them in huge masses.

No, we are not a military people. But when we make war, we make it to the limit. We make it a business, and we make it as we make any other business. And our business training has accustomed us to colossal enterprise. Hence, if unprepared in a purely technical sense, we are prepared by mind and habit to a superlative degree. Never again will a foreign diplomat call us "idiotic Yankees," or a top lofty monarch think of the United States as "negligible."

Our enormous exertions today will save our future a lot of trouble. Nobody will ever again carelessly step on the tail of Uncle Sam's coat. This is not spread eagleism—it is fact.

In Flanders' Fields.

In Flanders' fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place, and in the sky
The larks still bravely singing fly,
Scarce heard amidst the guns below.
We are the dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders' fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe,
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch—be yours to hold it high;
If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep though poppies grow
In Flanders' fields.

MIND READING BY WIRELESS

Fakir Detected to Be Using Secret Buzzer Conected With the Side Pocket of His Assistant.

While traveling in Ohio last year I attended a performance in a small town, where a mind reader was giving a wonderful exhibition of his powers. I mused a salesman. The mind reader, apparently an Oriental for he wore a turban and spoke broken English, was able to name every object the audience chose to select for a test. He also named dates on coins, words, and read passages in books and newspapers; it was a marvelous exhibition.

The mind reader's assistant had a familiar look; he reminded me of a telegraph operator I had worked with in the West. When he came to where I was sitting, I noticed he kept one hand in his side pocket. The assistant asked me to give the mind reading a test.

Pulling out my union card I asked him to name the organization to which I was a member. It was three minutes by my watch before he mind reader answered, "Brotherhood of Railroad signalmen."

The assistant turned away from me as he held my card in such a way as to bring the side where his hand was in the coat away from me.

Thirty years as a telegrapher has made my hearing wonderfully acute and I detected faint Morse signals. Then I realized in an instant why the mind reader's assistant kept his hand in his coat pocket. He had a wireless buzzer in there and was signaling the mind reader. The buzzer was muffled with cloth to kill the sound.

I also saw why the mind reader wore a turban and stood rigid in one position on a rug. The turban was to hide the receivers clamped on his ears and the rug to hide the antenae that ran under the rug, up behind his back to the receivers.

Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. How Prices Go Up.

An incident which is being told in the wool trade may, perhaps shed some light on the way in which prices increase when the fundamental value remains virtually unchanged It may also illustrate how something akin to camouflage is utilized by business men to deceive even themselves into believing there is a shortage. One dealer sold a consignment of wool at 61 cents a pound and it was resold seven times, each dealer making 10 cents a pound profit In the course of time the merchant first referred to became that a certain limited allotment of wood for sale and asked the price Co being told that the present owners had purchased at $1 a pound and were willing to sell at $1.25 the inquirer said All right I'll take it only no wood back Where is the wood? What the Boys Want.

"Send small boxes to soldiers at the front The men frequently have to leave large boxes behind them when on the move, as they are too heavy to carry," says Capt R J W Brooke medical officer with the British recruiting mission

Captain Brooke has a brother in the Canadian army who has been at the front almost since the commencement of hostilities and is now fighting near Lens. From the requests contained in his brother's letters during this long period the Canadian officer has worked out a list covering all the actual requirements of a soldier in the trenches The contents of the ideal box are

Socks
Two handkerchiefs
Two sheets writing paper.
Two envelopes and small lead pencil
Chocolate bar
One tin vegetable soup.
One small tin pork and beans or spaghetti
Three or four packages of cigarets.
Small box cigars.
Chewing gum
Peppermint
One pair of shoe shoelaces
One tin corned corn
One tin cocoa
Candy
Pastry

The best kind of candy to send according to Captain Brooke is peanut brittle, on account of its keeping qualities. If pastry is sent it should be inclosed in a tin box while cake is the best for keeping Loaf sugar is always appreciated and a packet of seedless raisins or nuts may be included occasionally On account of the severe cold in the trenches a tin of canned meat is a boon. Some relatives of soldiers enclose numbered envelopes or letter paper which indicate when returned through the mail that the box with the corresponding number has been received

Small boxes weighing not more than three or four pounds should be sent, as the men frequently are compelled to leave heavy boxes behind them when they move on.

What Germany Is Eating.

Adele N Phillips in the Atlantic

Chunks of dried sea lion meat were shipped into the country in the manner of jerked beef Soaked for a number of hours and cut into small pieces, it was made into a stew with onions Some people thickened the gravy and served it with spetzel a south German dumpling made of flour, but, alas, no eggs as in the past. After one or two attacks of nausea people came to like the concoction It filled a vacuum, and that is everything when one's head is light from a still lighter diet.

The same meat corned and called Robbin's fleisch was sold and served in slices, at four marks a pound It was a very good imitation of corned beef, better than stewed and could be eaten cold on bread.

As the potatoes became scarce, the bread which had been doled out on allowance began to deteriorate in quality As long as it was composed of 20 per cent of potato flour it was not bad, and served to satisfy the children when spread with malt extract, in place of sugar or syrup, or the famous kriegsmarmalad, a marmalade made of saccharine, beets, tomatoes, and turnips, colored red.

With the reduction of the potato flour in the bread, coarser grains were added; but now 5 per cent sawdust and 5 per cent flour ground from straw are used In consequence people are suffering greatly from anemia, stomach troubles are on the increase, especially ulcers of the stomach, and thread worms

Makes Sheets for Sammies.

From the Nicholasville, Ky., News.

James L Simpson the lumberman and road builder has added a new star to his banner Some time ago he suffered a broken foot while looking after his road building in Pulaski county When the local Red Cross started their work for supplies for the army, Mr Simpson donated his time to this worthy organization He started in a new role—from former bookkeeper and bank teller lumberman and road contractor, his broken foot confinement put him in a new and untried field—that of running a sewing machine. During his confinement he made 124 sheets for army service and presented them to the local Red Cross. His great success in other businesses was truly manifested in the role of tailor, as in other lines. So efficient did he become in his new endeavor that he could actually thread the needle, and it was a comical picture to see him resting his "bum" foot on a stool and the good one on the treadle of the machine.

About Soldiers' Kits.

From Land and Water, London.

A correspondent, on the subject of winter equipments remarks: "From my own experiences in France, I can strongly recommend the rubber waders that go inside the ordinary boot and come half way up the thigh. If not required, they are much more portable than gum boots. A pair of canvas shoes is a great comfort in billets, and every man ought to take out a pair with him, or get them sent out to him. In the way of drugs, I found the gelatine medicine sheets which you recommended very useful, and I always recommend them now. Another small point is that a loose leaf note book is far more convenient than an A. B. 153. I might further say that the best thing for winter wear under a tunic is the Shetland wool vest or cardigan. But the handspun wool is getting more and more scarce, as the women send it south to be spun by machinery, in which process it loses much of its softness; it is also being mixed in with ordinary wool, with further loss in quality.

Which is worthy of note, and if anyone wants a woolen vest or cardigan jacket of this kind, it will be as well to hurry up about getting it.

Her Beau Was No Adonis.

A girl with a stunning figure, big brown eyes, peach like complexion and wavy black hair, lovely enough to become the bride of a prince, stood around the Union station recently watching and waiting, relates the Topeka Globe Finally her face became illuminated; a spindly weak-eyed, undersized young man slouched in sight, homely enough to stop a clock.

The two talked, and every once in a while the princess-like girl dabbed her eyes with a handkerchief. At last a train puffed in under the station shed The young man waved an indifferent good by to the beautiful creature who clung to him sobbing until he boarded away.

NAVY PROMOTIONS KEEP BRITISH TAILORS BUSY

Base American Flotilla in British Waters (by mail).—The two tailors in this little seacoast town are enjoying a hitherto unheard of reign of prosperity owing to the unprecedented demand for gold lace and new uniforms for American officers and men who have just been promoted. The promotions, permanent and temporary, in the line of the navy were made in accordance with the recommendations of the selection board which recently sat in Washington. All those in the flotilla who have been selected have now been notified, but owing to the distance from Washington it will be some days yet before all have their commissions. The promotions were necessary in order to create more officers for the growing navy.

While it cannot, for military reasons, be said how many of the officers and men of the line of the navy over here benefited by the action of the Washington board, it is not violating the rules of the censor to say that nearly all the junior officers were advanced in rank, that a large number of the warrant officers were raised to the rank of ensign and the chief petty officers rated up to warrant rank. The result is that a large percentage of the eligible portion of the personnel now have extra rank and increased pay, a fact, which has created intense satisfaction.

All the ensigns of the class of 1915, of whom there are a great many in the flotilla here, are made lieutenants junior grade Graduates of the classes of 1910-11 and about one-third of the class of 1912, who were lieutenants junior grade, are made full lieutenants. Officers who were not lieutenant commanders previous to the passage of the last act of congress enlarging the navy, are made lieutenant commanders down to about three-fourths of the 1906 class.

Lieutenant commanders are made commanders down to and including about half the class of 1902. Commanders are made captains down to and beginning with the class of 1894.

Royal Baking Powder saves eggs in baking

In many recipes only half as many eggs are required, in some none at all, if an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder is used, about a teaspoon, in place of each egg omitted.

Try the following recipes which also conserve white flour as urged by the government.

Corn Meal Griddle Cakes

1½ cups corn meal
1½ cups boiling water
⅔ cup milk
1 tablespoon shortening
1 tablespoon molasses
⅓ cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
NO EGGS

Scald corn meal in bowl with boiling water; add milk, melted shortening and molasses; add flour, salt and baking powder which have been sifted together; mix well. Bake on hot greased griddle until brown.

(The Old Method called for 2 eggs)

Eggless, Milkless, Butterless Cake

1 cup brown sugar
1½ cups water
1 cup seeded raisins
2 ounces citron, cut fine
½ cup shortening
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon nutmeg
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup flour
1 cup rye flour
5 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder

Boil sugar, water, fruit, shortening, salt and spices together in saucepan 3 minutes. When cool, add flour and baking powder which have been sifted together. Mix well; bake in loaf pan in moderate oven about 45 minutes.

(The Old Method [Fruit Cake] called for 2 eggs)

She Did Her "Bit."

There are many ways for one to do his bit, but a young woman, riding on the hurricane deck of a Fifth avenue bus discovered a new way relates the New York Times The bus was just about to go under the elevated structure, which is only a few feet above the heads of those seated on its top, when a young man in khaki jumped to his feet to join a woman friend in a seat that had just been vacated The conductor sprang forward to grasp the soldier but a young woman seated nearby was quicker "Sit down," she commanded sharply, at the same time jerking the arm of Sammy The khaki-clad young man lost his balance and the next moment he was seated in the young woman's lap. The girl blushed a bright pink, and the soldier apologized and everybody smiled "I don't care said the young woman to her friend "I feel that I have done my bit in saving that soldier's head from being battered by the low bridge

Housekeepers Can Save $200,000,000 on Food

In these days when the high cost of living pinches nearly every home, no waste should be overlooked One of the most flagrant and the most easily prevented, is the destruction of food by rats. One rat will often do a hundred dollars' damage of food and property in a single night and a careful estimate gives over $200,000,000 as the value of foodstuffs destroyed annually by these pests. Exterminate them with Stearns' Paste and save this enormous loss of food. A small box of Stearns' Paste costs only 35 cents and is usually enough to completely rid the house of rats and mice, also effective against cockroaches and waterbugs Adv.

Same Old Prices.

The voice of an anxious woman called the city clerk's office on the telephone the other day, relates the Indianapolis News.

"Is this the marriage parlor?" she asked When told there were no marriage parlors connected with the office she said she was anxious to get some information about the 'price of marriage.'

"I heard some talk about the price of marriage going up and I wanted to know if they had a standard price during the war," she explained.

She gave a sigh of relief when informed that the price of marriage licenses had not been increased, and that most justices of the peace and ministers still relied on the generosity of the bridegroom for their compensation for performing the ceremony.

George Gruetzmacher and C. W. Wiles left Tuesday evening for Fort Dodge where they went to get an Overland car. They drove back the following day.

The teachers of the Klemme schools attended a Teachers' Meeting at Des Moines last week. They left Thursday evening and returned to Klemme on Monday morning. They report a good meeting.

Mrs. Frank Gruetzmacher's Sunday School Class, consisting of eight boys, held a surprise party on her last Thursday evening. They brought well filled baskets of good things to eat and had a good time playing various games. It was a very agreeable surprise on Mrs. Gruetzmacher.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new garage for C. W. Wiles the Overland Dealer. The garage is being put up of hollow tile and brick and is being built on Main Street just west of the Creamery. The work has been delayed on account of the bad weather but it is estimated that the building will be nearly completed in about thirty days.

What might have been a very serious accident occurred Monday afternoon when the little three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Almer Ludeke caught her foot in the gearing of a corn elevator. The little girl was playing near the elevator but it is unknown how she happened to step into the machine. If it had not been that the belt was thrown off the drive pulley it may have resulted in the loss of her foot or possibly a limb, but luckily it only tore off her shoe and bruised her toes a little.

Prof. Caruthers' Mystic Entertainers in conjunction with the regular program of pictures is the bill at the Idle Hour Theatre this week Thursday, Friday and Saturday. It's a double card and if you haven't seen Caruthers and his troupe you want to get busy and do so. The program consists of marvelous demonstrations in psychic phenomena and is filled with science, music and mirth. Prof. Caruthers is decidedly the greatest mind reader that has ever appeared here, and when it comes to stunts in hypnotism he is simply ni a class by himself. Miss Hope Emerson gives marvelous demonstrations of musical telepathy. A new program is given each night and there is nothing to offend the most fastidious. Remember—Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Idle Hour.

Allie White has quite a fish pond on his place. The other day when they drained out a pond on his place they caught all kinds of fish which had become trapped in the pond during the high water season and could not get out. There were carp, bullheads and several other varieties of fish in the pond and they were easily caught as all they had to do was scoop them out. Allie is now running competition to Clear Lake.

NOW WE KNOW

Absolute knowledge have I none,
But my auntie's washerwoman's sister's son
Heard a policeman on his beat
Say to a laborer in the street
That he had a letter just last week
Hand written in the finest Greek
From a Chinese Coolie in Timbuctoo
Who said that a negro in Cuba knew
Of a colored man in a Texas town
Who got it straight from a circus clown
That a man in Klondyke heard the news
From a gang of South American Jews
About somebody in Borneo
Who heard it from a man who claimed to know
Of a swell society female rake
Whose mother-in-law will undertake
To prove that her seventh husband's sister's niece
Had stated in a nicely printed piece
That she had a son who had a friend
Who knew about when the war would end.

A real estate transaction took place the other day when Leonard Sampson sold his eighty acre tract east of Klemme to John Johnson for $150 per acre. The land is un-improved, but the new ditch runs through it and Mr. Johnson is now tiling it out in good shape so the land will be ready for a big crop next year. The land is rich and with the strings of tile thru it it will make a fine piece of land.

The Cuckoo Bee.

The cuckoo bee is so called because, like the cuckoo, it lays its eggs in the cells or nests of other bees. All the many species have slender, smooth, gayly colored bodies. They resemble wasps and emit a sweet balsamic odor.

Town and Country.

A town man occasionally can shape his business so that he may lie down beside it and take a nap. But a farmer, after his regular work has been attended to, always has a well to dig. —Topeka Capital.

TO THE WOMEN OF HANCOCK COUNTY

"Every woman who has a pledge card in her window is a patriot; every one who has not must be suspected of distrusting the Government of the United States."

If you are over sixteen years old and have not signed the food conservation pledge, you are either unpatriotic, or do not understand that in signing the card you are not signing away any of your rights, but are simply signing a pledge to support the Government to the best of your ability by saving food in your home in so far as your circumstances permit; or you have had no opportunity to sign the card

By New Year's Day we should be able to announce to the State that Hancock county has signed every one of her patriotic women to the food pledge, that every one has a Kitchen Card in her kitchen to which she refers for inspiration, that every one displays the United States Food Administration Home Card in her window, is the badge of her patriotic services to her Government

You patriots of the kitchen end of the home will win this war, just as much as your brave sons, sweethearts and brothers.

If (in the United States) we can secure allegiance to this national service in our 20,000,000 kitchens, our 20,000,000 breakfast, lunch and dinner tables; if we can multiply an ounce of sugar, or fats, or what not per day by 100,000,000 people, we have saved 180,000,000 pounds in a month. If we save a pound of flour per week we save 125,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum It is this multiplication of minute quantities—teaspoonfuls—slices—scraps—by 100,000,000 and 360 days that will save the world Is there anyone in this land who cannot deny himself or herself something? Who cannot save some waste. Is not your right to live and freedom worth this service?

If for any reason you have not signed, get a card from your township chairman, your minister, or the county chairman, and sign and see that it is sent in so that you may receive your window card and kitchen card. Be sure to write your name and address plainly

PROFIT IN STEERS

There is good profit in feeding steers as you will note in this article. We are not mentioning any names but a farmer in this community bought two small steers the 1st of September weighing 1100 pounds for 7 cents per lb. Total cost $77.00. He turned the steers in to the pasture until this week. They were pastured only and did not get any other feed. When he sold the steers they weighed 1280 and he got 8 cents a pound, a gain of 1 cent at the same time the steers gained 180 pounds. He received $102.40 for the steers or a gain of $25.40 in less than two and a half months. We will allow $5.00 for pasture, which is figuring high, he will have a net gain of $20.40. That is not so bad considering that the only labor was driving the steers into the pasture and leaving them there until the buyer took them to town.

Le us hear from more farmers on what they are doing along these lines. It will interest other farmers by telling your experience.

FATAL AUTO ACCIDENT

Special:—The wife and twelve year old daughter of the Rev. Dewey, of Blue Earth, Minnesota, were instantly killed last Saturday afternoon and the Rev. Dewey is in a critical condition and not expected to live, as the result of an auto accident two miles west of Swea City. The party was going to Armstrong where the Rev. Dewey was to preach on the following day. The car they were driving was struck by a train as they attempted to cross. No particulars are given, but it is thought that the heavy fog prevented them from seeing the approaching train.

Get Rid of Fleas.

The flea is one of the most annoying of household pests. In many cases fleas are bred on dogs or cats, and the first thing to be done is to eliminate the source of supply. If the animal is not badly infested, insect powder, well rubbed into the hair, or creolin wash, may be effective. Remove all carpets and similar articles and scrub the floors thoroughly with hot soapsuds or lye, being careful to get into every crack and crevice. Fleas thrive on dirt and do not like to be disturbed.

THE COW TESTING ASSOCIATION

The Cow Testing Association of Iowa made an $18,000 co-operative purchase of cotton seed meal. The 20 ton car for the Klemme Association arrived here Saturday. This is the highest protein content cotton seed meal which can be purchased.

The great advantage of buying the meal in car load lots is that it enables the members to get a uniform quality of high protein feed. Samples have been taken out and will be sent to Mr. Barney, state food and dairy commissioner, for analysis, to determine whether or not it has the guaranteed protein content. Last year the Association received $50 rebate on the car load because it did not come up to the guarantee

The dairymen make a practice of feeding home grown feed as much as possible, especially clover hay and silage, however, one or two pounds of cotton seed meal make a better balanced ration.

The September monthly report of the various Associations shows Klemme to be the fifth best in the state, which is due to a great exent, to the better care and intelligent feeding of the dairy cattle.

The Pioneer Association, which is at the top of the list of the 30 associations in the state, had an average of 46 pounds of butterfat for the 10 highest cows, 14 cows that produced 40 lbs. butterfat and the highest producing cow made 55 1 pounds butterfat.

The Klemme Association had an average of 41 2 pounds of butterfat from the 10 highest cows, 4 cows producing 40 pounds and the highest producing cow made 55.8 pounds of butterfat.

In the Roland Association, which is at the bottom of the list, the 10 highest cows produced an average of 22.4 pounds butterfat, the highest cow made 26.2 pounds butterfat which is less than half what the Klemme high cow produced.

Our Association certainly has reasons to feel proud of their high producing cows and also of the fact that the average production of the herds is 300 pounds butterfat per cow which is double that of the state average.

This co-operative enterprise is a great factor in promoting the dairy interests of the community.

AUTO SMASH-UP

The science of Physics teaches us that two objects cannot occupy the same space at the same time. Great scientists have proved this to be a physical fact. But there was perhaps a little doubt in the minds of two parties of autoists and they perhaps thought it would be well to demonstrate it again. O. J. Olsen, the contractor of Garner, and Erick Josten had a collision between Klemme and Garner last Friday night. We do not know who was to blame or any particulars of the accident. It was undoubtedly due to the heavy fog which has been hanging low now for over a week. It is almost impossible to see even a bright head light until within a few yards. It's a good rule to always keep to the right. We notice Mr. Olsen is now driving a new Buick roadster, as his car received the worst treatment of the two. No one was seriously hurt although the occupants received some cuts and bruises.

PAVEY INSTALLS MOTOR

Wallace Pavey has further improved his already modern blacksmith shop by installing a large electric motor to take the place of the engine he formerly used. Wallace has as good an equipment as you can find in any shop and can handle any work in the machine line.

Among a few of the features of his well equipped shop are two forges with motor power; calking machine; power hammer; lawn mower grinder; large power drill press; planer; band saw; grinders; and all the modern tools that go with a blacksmith shop. He has also an up-to-date welding outfit and can weld the finest material to large heavy castings. Mr. Pavey employs only the most competent mechanic and the work produced in his shop indicates skilled workmanship. Take a look at his shop and be convinced.

In southern Siam silk is produced from domestic silkworms of the white and the striped species, the former producing white and latter yellow cocoons. Each cocoon is said to yield from 200 to 250 yards of silk thread and two pounds of fresh cocoons will furnish about four punces of raw silk. The white silkworm produces from 25 to 50 per cent more silk than the striped worm, and its silk is also finer than that of foreign cocoons, and of higher commercial value. Of the six varieties of mulberry trees cultivated in Siam, the gen mulberry and the blackeyed mulberry trees have the preference for rearing of silkworms, because of the sturdy growth of these trees and their abundant foliage.

Company F, Sixth, of Defiance, got a wild raccoon before leaving the home armory. The animal was kept in a cage at first. Now he is as meek, gentle and playful as a puppy. He visits all over camp with friends he has spotted. He is as curious as a tom cat. He investigates everything. Musicians at first had lots of fun laying their large brass horns on the ground Greaser, as he is called, would investigate the entire horn and end up by climbing into the bell of the horn as far as his body could go. There is a dense woods near the camp, but human kindness appears to be more of an inducement to the animal than his usual haunts.

A revised chart of New York harbor, on a scale of 1-40,000, has been issued by the United States coast and geodetic survey The labor involved in bringing such a chart up to date is illustrated by the fact that in one year there have been for ths chart 253 different items of change, which required 233 working days to compile and engrave. Marked changes in the contour of the bottom, disclosed by recent surveys, are shown at the entrance between Sandy Hook and Coney island.

Living expenses will be further cut this year by cooperative gardens that were planted by last year's occupants.

The textile industry is one of the important Russian industries that have been called upon to work for the defense of the country The cotton and woolen industries have been of especial importance, followed by the linen industry At present the woolen industry is working wholly for the national defense, and the cotton industry to the extent of 70 per cent of its productive capacity.

The garden of James Swartz, of Holter Dam, Mont., is heated by a stove from the inside, and is protected on the outside by a curtain which is lowered about it on a frame. The garden is seven feet square and consists of a series of terraces built around a hollow center to a height of 10 feet. Mr. Swartz believes this arrangement will permit a longer growing season.

A wrecking company is attempting to recover a cargo of 1,200 tons of coal that has lain at the bottom of the Great Belt, a mile north of Nyborg, Sweden, for 34 years. The cargo was that of the steamer Dorka, which sank in 1883 It is believed that nearly 1 000 tons can be recovered. Samples recovered show the coal to be undamaged by its long immersion.

Nearly every class or design of vessel sinks in a particular way For instance the old type of single bottom steamers, with a few or no bulkheads—that is, in the modern sense of the term—almost invariably founders on more or less of an even keel and not with the bow or stern up in the air.

ATTORNEY GENERAL HAVNER ACQUITTED

Judge Cullison Directs Jury in Case—Outgrowth of Villisca Ax Murder Case.

Logan, Ia., Nov. 10.—A directed verdict of not guilty was returned today by the jury in the trial of H. M. Havner, attorney general of Iowa on an indictment charging him with "wilfully and corruptly oppressing a person under color of office."

Judge Cullison yesterday evening sustained a motion of the defense for a directed verdict of not guilty. Havner was charged in an indictment found in Montgomery county with having used improper methods in trying to secure correction of alleged discrepancies in Mrs. Alice Willard's testimony when the grand jury was probing the Villisca ax murders.

Havner offered only three witnesses and the motion was based on the ground that the state had not made a case.

The court said there had been no evidence offered by the state to sustain the indictment. The testimony of Mrs. Alice Willard was flatly contradicted by three prominent witnesses including Havner himself

GOVERNOR ASSERTS SOCIALISM GREAT MENACE

Kansas City, Mo., Nov 10.—"Unless we stem the progress of socialism in this country the winning of the war and the driving of Prussianism from the face of the earth will have been a useless task" declared Gov William L. Harding, of Iowa, in an address here last night before the republican club of Missouri.

Governor Harding's remarks came during the course of an explanation of the principles of American government in which he had declared that this is primarily a nation of parties.

"No great nation can long exist under strictly socialistic principles," he declared

Governor Arthur Capper, of Kansas, also addressed the meeting.

RED CROSS TO BENEFIT BY SALE OF SUGAR

Mason City, Ia., Nov. 10.—Probably the highest price ever paid for 100 pounds of sugar will be the record of the first 100 pounds of beet sugar made by the Northern Sugar company, of this city. B. A. Plummer, a banker of Forest City, offered $150 for the first 100-pound sack, the money to go to the Red Cross. A local newspaper, seeing an opportunity to cash in a goodly sum for the local Red Cross association, took the banker's bid and asked for other bidders and up to date there has been bid $350 for this sack of sugar. The bids close Saturday and it is estimated that at least $500 will be bid for the first sack or at the rate of $5 a pound.

REMAINS OF FORMER IOWA MAN ARE DISENTERED

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10.—The body of Judge A P Chamberlain with whose murder his brother, Dr. Asa W. Chamberlain, is charged, was removed from the cemetery at Goochland, Va., and brought here. The remains which had been dismembered and were found in post holes in the victim's back yard, were photographed under direction of A Lee Chamberlain, son of the dead man A set of surgical instruments, said by the police to be the property of Dr Chamberlain, also were brought here.

Young Chamberlain also announced the finding of his father's strong box, saying it was empty He had previously asserted that when his father came to Goochland several years ago from Iowa, he brought $50,000 and valuable jewelry. No trace of this has been found.

MISSOURIAN SUGGESTS HARDING FOR PRESIDENT

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 9.—Governor Harding has a presidential boomlet. At a meeting at Kansas City of the republican club of Missouri last night, former mayor Henry M. Beardsley introduced Harding as in line for higher honors. Although he said he was not intending to start a campaign at this time Beardsley suggested that idea be nursed along. He said that he and his associates are ready to organize a "Harding for president" club.

CAMP DODGE READY TO RECEIVE MORE MEN

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 9.—Camp Dodge buildings were practically and formally completed today and the cantonment is now ready to receive the next increment. This, it is expected, will be about December 1. There will be 25,000 men at that time including another batch of 3,000 negroes from Alabama.

COUNCIL BLUFFS GETS FIRST GUARD COMPANY

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 10.—To Council Bluffs will be awarded the honor of being the first city in the race for the location of companies or batteries of the Iowa national guard now in the course of formation under direction of Adj. Gen. Guy Logan to complete the enlistment of a company.

The enlistment of more than 100 men and three officers was completed yesterday morning and the fact was communicated immediately to the adjutant general's department in Des Moines.

IOWA TAKES LEAD IN FOOD PLEDGES

Over 500,000 Families Have Signed Cards in Campaign.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 10.—Iowa has furnished the spectacular feature of the last 24 hours in the food administration's national family enrollment campaign for voluntary food conservation. With a report of 85,000 additional cards signed, making its total 517,000 families, Iowa is credited with having enlisted 91 per cent of all the families, in the state. These figures put Iowa at the head of all the states, both in total enrollments reported and in percentages. In total number it passes Missouri, which yesterday took the lead away from California and in percentage it surpasses Louisiana, which up to this time has stood at the top of the list with 89 per cent.

Iowa's goal was 425,000.

The states that have made the best records to date are the following: Iowa, 91 per cent; Louisiana, 89; Rhode Island, 77; Maine, 68; New Hampshire, 66; California, Oregon and Vermont, tied at 63, Missouri, 61.

STORM LAKE MAN MAY SUCCUMB TO INJURIES

P. Costigan Hit by Automobile Driven by Newell Man—Heavy Fog Blamed.

Storm Lake, Ia., Nov. 8.—P. Costigan sustained a fractured skull and a broken leg this morning when he was struck by an automobile driven by John Lyman, of Newell. The heavy fog is blamed for the accident. It is feared Costigan's injuries may prove fatal.

POSTPONE INQUEST OVER NOEL'S BODY

Albia, Ia., Nov. 10.—The inquest into the death of J. W. Noel, the Villisca photographer who was found with a bullet wound in his head here and who died without regaining consciousness, was postponed until the attendance of the man who rode in the observation car or Pullman with Noel the night of his murder can be secured. It is understood that the man is known and it is hoped that he may be able to throw some light on Noel's actions on the night that he met his death.

Villisca, Ia., Nov 8—It develops here, according to good authority, that the story of the finding of a tie chained to the Burlington tracks near Nodaway by J. W. Noel and John Montgomery recently was a hoax.

UNVEIL MONUMENT ON SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17

Denison Ia., Nov 8—The fine monument erected by this county in honor of the soldiers and sailors who in times past and at the present time have entered the ranks of the defense of their country, will be formally unveiled Saturday, November 17 Governor Harding has been selected as the leading speaker for the occasion The monument stands at the southeast corner of the court house square. The G A. R. post will have charge of the program.

HIGH POWER LINES MUST MAKE REPAIRS

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 10—The state railroad commission refuses to back up on its ruling of December 30, 1916, in which it declared that high power transmission companies must bear the expense of rehabilitating teleghone lines whose service has been destroyed by the advent of the high power electric transmission lines. The state railroad commission handed down its opinion on the rehearing of this question in which it sustains the position taken in the original ruling.

COMPLETE CANVASS OF RECENT VOTE ON NOV. 20

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 10.—With the returns of recount of votes cast in the prohibitory amendment election still incomplete the executive council has adjourned until November 20, when it will undertake to complete the official canvass. No figures were given out on the result so far as the council went today. The unofficial vote showed the amendment defeated by a majority of approximately 1,000.

COMMISSION MEN TO SALVAGE ALL FOODS

Pierre, S. D., Nov. 8.—The fire season is considered now closed in the Black Hills for the present year, and the forest supervisor reports that in the past summer 51 forest fires have occurred covering an area of 1,112 acres of government land, no statistics being available of the private land which was burned over.

ELK POINT BOY DIES AT CAMP FUNSTON, KAN.

Elk Point, S. D., Nov. 8.—Linus Nilson, aged 23, son of Joel Nilson, of Big Springs township, this county, died Monday morning at a hospital at Camp Funston, Kan., of spinal meningitis. The body will arrive at his home today, but no arrangements have been made for the funeral. Members of the Red Cross chapter of this city will attend the funeral. Deceased was a member of the third contingent from this county, leaving here October 7.

FUEL ADMINISTRATION ACTUALLY AT WORK

People of Denison Are Shown How Fuel Supply Can Be Saved.

Denison, Ia., Nov. 9.—J. H. Patterson, the federal fuel representative for Crawford county, has taken hold of his duties. He has taken over the distribution of coal, directing that no person shall have more than one ton until he has used the supply he has on hand. The Denison churches have been asked to discontinue all Sunday evening services except a union service, and to abandon prayer meeting in the middle of the week except at private houses. With thermometer in hand he has visited the school houses and public buildings and given direction as to the temperature to be maintained. Firemen at the city lighting plant have been instructed by him how to fire and the street lighting curtailed. Finding that the Baptist denomination had arranged for a three weeks' series of evening meetings he forbid the use of coal, but offered with others to pay for wood needed.

INVEST ESTATE FUNDS IN GOVERNMENT BONDS

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 9—Realizing that they could stimulate investments by estates in Liberty bonds by making it easier for trustees, guardians, administrators and executors to act, Judges B. F Cummings and J. W. Willett of this Seventeenth judicial district, yesterday issued a blanket order which makes it possible hereafter for those handling estate funds to invest in government 4s without any further action of court.

This probably is the first order of this kind ever issued in this district. Heretofore it has been necessary for anyone wanting to invest estate funds to get an order of court The expense of attorney's fees deterred some from acting, hence the court made it easy for the investment and encouraged the placing of trust funds in government securities.

TRIED TO GET MONEY ON TWO BIG DRAFTS

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 9—Bruce Conger who does not give his home address, was arrested by Sergt. Jeff Breeding and Detective Joe Neill at the Iowa National bank.

Conger's arrest is said to have occurred after he had tried to raise several hundred dollars on two sight drafts, one on the Metropolitan bank, of St. Paul, for $51,000 and the other on the Night and Day bank, of St Louis, for $24 825.

There will be h- -- popping for this Conger told the policemen He was sullen about his arrest He would not talk to the police last night

IOWAN TAKEN BY GERMANS WAS ENGAGED TO MARRY

Iowa City, Ia., Nov 9 - Following the account of the first participation of American troops in the actual fighting on the front in France comes the story of a romance in which one of the victims is concerned Miss Iva Moore, aged 20, a probationer in the Iowa university nurses' training camp, is the fiancee of Dewey D Kern, of Collins, Ia., one of the men reported captured or missing after the raid on the American trenches

Miss Moore stated that she and young Kern had planned to marry this fall When war was declared, however, they decided to postpone the wedding and he enlisted, while she began training as a nurse. Miss Moore, who is the daughter of a wealthy retired farmer of Zearing Ia will persevere in her determination to go to Europe as an army nurse

Correctionville Ia., Nov 9 The auction sale of lots in Riverside addition to the city of Correctionville was made a great affair S. R. Lucas, projector of the addition, brought a Sioux City band There was a large attendance Lots sold at from $52 to $150.

DES MOINES—Charles W. Webster state fuel administrator, has received word that nine coal mines in Mystic, in the big coal fields of southeastern Iowa, are idle because of the non-adjustment of the wage scale between miners and operators. The mining price committee of operators and miners has been in session in Des Moines since October 24, and has failed to reach an agreement.

LEMARS—Joseph Wilcox, aged 48, a resident here for many years, went suddenly insane and attempted to jump out of a second story window, but was prevented by people who were aroused by his yells and screams. He was taken to the asylum at Cherokee. His condition is ascribed to brooding over family troubles

CORRECTIONVILLE—The full realization that America is at war was brought home to Correctionville people in the first list of killed and captured. Merle D. Hay, of Glidden, one of the killed, was a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Grawburg, and Dewey D. Kern, of Collins, one of the captured, is a cousin of Mark Masters.

MUSCATINE—The mysterious poisoning of live stock in this country has caused county officials to institute an inquiry of what they believe to be the work of German agents. From widely scattered neighborhoods have come reports of the death of cows and hogs under unnatural circumstances.

AN IOWA CAPITALIST SUES FOR LARGE SUM

H. M. Woodford, of Waverly, Asserts He Was Made Victim of Fictitious Bond Sales.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—Henry M. Woodford, capitalist of Waverly, Ia., has brought suit in the United States district court here to recover $130,000 which he says was taken from him in fictitious bond sales. He alleges the takers of his $130,000 are George W. Mills, of Chicago, and Gustav B. Hengen, a California mining promoter.

ALLEGED QUAKER IS HELD AS DESERTER

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 8.—Acting on orders from the adjutant general's office the police here arrested Clarence Fiscus, of Clemons, Ia., charged with being a deserter.

The case of Fiscus is unusual in that he did not try to evade the draft, but rather combative service after he had been drafted, on the ground that his religious convictions, as a Quaker, were against war. Fiscus notified the local exemption board to that effect and refused to report here when the contingent was sent to Camp Dodge. He informed the board, however, that he would report at the cantonment for non-combative service. The board has never been advised whether or not he did so, but received orders to treat Fiscus as a deserter.

FORT DODGE MEN HELD AS AUTOMOBILE THIEVES

Fort Dodge, Ia., Nov. 8.—With the arrest of Thomas E. West and M. A. Horner officials claim to have uncovered one of the biggest automobile fences operating in the northwest. West has been running a second hand automobile shop here and Horner operated a soft drink parlor. The arrests were made by representatives of the automobile protective and information bureau in co-operation with the county and city officials. Men from the bureau were in the city for several days collecting evidence before the arrests were made. The case against West and Horner is now declared to be complete. About 20 cars stolen principally in Minneapolis and St. Paul have been sold through the West agency, it is said. All are Buicks, nine of these cars have been recovered. Five other cars have been identified.

THREE IOWANS LIKELY TO BE GIVEN IMPORTANT POSTS

Washington, Nov. 8.—Military intelligence, a branch of America's war against Prussianism, is expected to be the particular field in which the endeavors of two well known Iowans are to give their services when more khaki clad soldiers of the United States become involved in the clash in France.

These are former Congressman Maurice Connolly, of Dubuque, who recently was promoted from captain to major in the signal officers' reserve corps, and who now is detailed for instruction in the Rantoul, Ill., aviation field, and Horace Towner, son of Congressman H M Towner, who already is "somewhere in France"

Connolly is a graduate of Heidelberg university and has an extended knowledge of Germany, German people and their characteristics. Towner until recently was secretary to his father, but until he was called to the colors with the District of Columbia coast artillery unit in which he was mess sergeant and had charge of all the purchasing of the unit, he had been in New York devoting his talents to short story writing

Adjt Gen Guy Logan, who has performed such unusually efficient service for the national guard in Iowa, is likely soon to procure a special assignment with the troops abroad. He has applied for a commission in one of the branches of the service which will enable him to be with the American forces abroad, and war department gossip is that he soon will be called into the service with shoulder straps.

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY BECAUSE WIFE HUNGRY

St Louis, Nov. 6.—Without food since Sunday, a man who gave his name as Rollie Shepard and his home Des Moines, Ia., was slightly wounded when he attempted to break into a grocery store at an early hour this morning. Shepard was accompanied by his wife and it was because she was hungry that he attempted to break into the store he said. The wife is but 17 years old.

After hearing the story of Shepard, the grocer who did the shooting said he would feed the couple if the police would release them, but this the police refused to do

RED CROSS CHAPTER WELL OFF FINANCIALLY

Fort Dodge, Ia., November 6.—The Webster county Red Cross association closed its first year's work with a membership of over 5,000 and with $10,000 in the treasury. New officers who will take up their duties this week are R. P. Doud, chairman, Mrs. C. J. Saunders, vice chairman, J. Floyd Rich, treasurer and Mrs. Hal Pratte secretary.

TWO GIRLS RIDE WITH STRANGERS; ARE ATTACKED

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 6.—Elsie Hargens and Ida Knudsen, daughters of well known families in Ida Grove, were enticed into an auto by two young men believed to be from Denison, who promised them a ride around town. Instead they took the girls to a lonely spot in the country and attacked them.

The Knudsen girl succeeded in leaping from the car and making her escape, but her companion was dragged from the car and left unconscious on the ground, later making her way into the city after midnight.

The girls say they do not know the identity of their assailants.

AMERICAN INFORMERS DENIED USE OF CABLE

Washington, D. C., Nov. [illegible] The government is about to deny cable communication with neutral countries to number of persons in the United States including some American citizens, the suspicion that they have furnished information to the enemy on military naval and commercial operations.

Telegraph and cable companies it is stated, will be given lists of individuals who have been under surveillance, with instructions to refuse transmissions of their messages.

NO FORCE REQUIRED TO FEED SUFF FANATICS

Washington, D. C., Nov 10—The hunger strike of woman's party militants in the jail here has resolved itself into a dispute over whether the women were fed forcibly or whether they took food willingly.

Superintendent Zinkham, of the jail freely admitted that Miss Alice Paul had been fed three times.

"There was no forced feeding," said Dr. J. A. Gannon, the jail physician. "They took food without resistance and merely want to advertise themselves by saying they have been fed forcibly."

PAPER SCRAPS GIVE CLUE TO AUTHOR'S MURDERER

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov 10—Torn pieces of an express company receipt may lead to the capture of the slayer of Dr. Harry L. Chapin, Cleveland physician, author and worldwide traveler, found dying in a downtown hotel room here yesterday afternoon from a fractured skull. Dr. Chapin died shortly after being found and Coroner Byrne declared he was murdered

The scraps of the express company receipt have been pieced together by the police and show the name of the suspected murderer a former Cleveland druggist, while the existence of an illicit trade in narcotics in which he was engaged was given as a probable motive for the killing.

BRITISH "FIRE ROLLER" UPSETS DEFENSE PLAN

Copenhagen, Nov 10—Unwilling testimony of the irresistible might of the British offensive in Flanders is given by Lieutenant General Von Ardenne, the military critic of the Tageblatt of Berlin, who sends from the Flanders front a graphic picture of the difficulties of the German defense. No way, he says, has been devised to prevent the "fire roller," as the Germans term the moving barrage, from making slow but steady gains. He reports the German losses as very heavy if an attempt is made to hold the front line trenches in force, while a thin line adds to the speed of the British advance.

POLISH POLICY BRINGS ANGER AMONG TEUTONS

Copenhagen, Nov. 9.—The proposed settlement of the eastern problem by annexing Poland to Austria-Hungary and Courland and Lithuania to Germany, has few friends in Germany aside from the proponents of the plan.

The socialist organ, Vorwaerts, of Berlin, declares that this adoption of an annexation policy in the most unretrievable form, puts in the shade the crisis regarding the chancellorship and all other developments of the day.

CZAR WILL BE CALLED BACK TO POWER, MANY U. S. STUDENTS BELIEVE

Washington, D. C., Nov. 10 —The new Russian revolution, which has put the maximalists in control and has apparently overthrown Kerensky, following on the heels of the Italian reverses, will have a pronounced effect on American war preparations. That it will work to speed up preparations and to cause this country to put more men and more resources into the great struggle to halt the madness of the Hohenzollerns is the general opinion here

It is looked on as prolonging the war and making still greater the task before the allies. At the same time it is believed the evident gravity of conditions in Europe will tend powerfully to cement public opinion here for the most vigorous conduct of the war possible.

Some intelligent observers and students of Russian conditions believe the house of Romanoff will be called back and that the Russian people will soon weary of the chaos and disorder into which their affairs are thrown

It is obvious that the turn of things in Russia makes the forthcoming allied conference of still more weighty importance.

says the Russian army on the northern front has joined the maximalists and is marching on Petrograd

Amsterdam, Nov 9 The Rheinische Westphalische Zeitung, of Essen Germany, publishes a Stockholm telegram saying that Premier Kerensky has been arrested

Petrograd, Nov 10.—At a meeting of the congress of soldier's and workmen's deputies last night, a member of the revolutionary military committee said that on Wednesday Premier Kerensky, at Gatchina 35 versts (23 miles) from Petrograd, addressed 6,000 soldiers who were on their way from the front to Petrograd After a conference the soldiers decided not to proceed for the time to Petrograd

The military revolutionary committee has decided to bring General Korniloff, leader of the recent revolt and his supporters to Petrograd and imprison them in the fortress of St Peter and St. Paul They will be brought to trial before a military revolutionary tribunal.

Leon Trotzky, president of the executive committee of the Petrograd council of soldiers and workmen's delegates, explained that the arrest of certain members of the Kerensky government was not an act of vengeance or political repression He said all the members of the late government would be tried for complicity in the Korniloff movement.

The political parties to which the socialist ministers belong have decided to turn over all the ministers, socialists as well as others, for trial. In the meanwhile, they are being held under domiciliary arrest.

KERENSKY SAILORS CAPTIVES?

London, Nov. 10.—Several transports from Kronstadt, arrived in Petrograd on Wednesday carrying sailors who previously had sided with the provisional government, says a dispatch to the Daily News from Petrograd

The correspondent gives the following extract from Nikolai Lenine's address to the council of workmen's and soldiers' delegates on Wednesday

"The second revolution has been accomplished We shall offer a peace acceptable to the proletariat of all countries, publish all secret treaties, take over all land and establish the control of workmen over industry The consequence will be the accomplishment the third social revolution"

Leaves Curse on Backers.

M. Maslov, a social revolutionist and former minister of agriculture the correspondent adds, in his last testament says that he is convinced that he is about to die and he leaves his curse upon those who sent him into the government and did not support him.

Revolt Leaders Guarded.

Scenes in and about the Smolny institute, the headquarters of the workmen's and soldiers' organization in Petrograd and of the revolutionary committee, are described in a Reuter dispatch dated Thursday at the Russian capital, as follows

"The Smolny institute presents a scene of extraordinary animation There is a perpetual coming and going of representatives from the provinces participating in the congress, delegates on the way to convey orders to the soldiers, sailors and militia and the red guard A strong armed guard occupies the interior and surrounds the building, while several armored motor cars bearing anti-aircraft guns are stationed in adjacent streets to insure protection to the headquarters

Lenine Now Russ Ruler.

"The gardens around the institute are filled with motor cars with which to carry the delegates around the town. Nikolai Lenine accompanied by his lieutenant, Zinovieff received an enthusiastic reception on his arrival. They were scarcely recognized, Lenine having shaved off his moustache and Zinovieff having grown a beard

"From the institute the revolutionary committee is issuing order after order for the occupation of railway stations and governmental institutions. The orders are promptly obeyed by the troops and the red guard Detachments of sailors are arriving from Kronstadt, while a cruiser and two torpedo boats are anchored in the river near the Nicholas bridge."

WHERE THEY WERE IN MARCH.

By United Press.

London, Nov 9 —Russia is back again where she was last March The extreme radicals who yearn to at once make the world a great brotherhood, who are against all war and who believe in an extreme democracy, today seem to control Petrograd, the Russian capital.

Premier Kerensky and what remains of the provisional government machinery, apparently still have the support of the remainder of Russia

The situation here was regarded as precisely parallel to the first few days following the revolution in which the czar was upset Then it was the liberals who seized the outward symbols of government while the rest of the great Russian empire remained supporting the government

Berlin Instructs Leaders.

The danger, London today believed, was that the fanatics who have seized the government in Petrograd may be able to extend their power to other parts of the country, to sway the great peasant population which is ignorant of what it is possible for democracy to give to a people.

In London today it is asserted by prominent officials that the men in charge of the revolution against the provisional government are men who have long been suspected of too great friendliness to Germany, men who, it is confidently believed, have received their instructions direct from Berlin.

German Fleet at Kronstadt.

In this connection it is regarded as highly significant that the cables yesterday reported the German fleet in the neighborhood of Kronstadt which guards the approaches to Petrograd and it is recalled that it was only a few months ago that the sailors at Kronstadt mutinied. It is feared they may now surrender to the Germans without a struggle, in which instance the Germans would have no opposition in their approach on the Russian capital.

There is a tradition which declares that the poet Ben Jonson once walked all the way from London to Hawthornden, near Edinburh, to pay a visit to his friend, Drummond.

Yankee Leads Two German Prisoners By Ears Back to Trench

New York, Nov 10 -- Two German prisoners were captured by an American soldier of Pershing's command on the Chemin des Dames, according to the New York Currier des Etats Unis. The paper quoted a letter from Georges Clemenceau, former French minister of the interior

It said a small group of Americans was put with French forces for instruction and that one of the Yankees returned to his trench leading two Germans by the ears.

EX-QUEEN LIL DYING, HER PHYSICIANS SAY

One of Last Acts of Former Ruler of Hawaii Was to Buy Liberty Bonds.

Honolulu T H Nov 10—Ex-Queen Lilliuokalani, of Hawaii, was reported dying today Physicians said she could not live many hours

The former queen has been in poor health many months Recently she seemed to lose all of the antipathy she felt toward the United States for the loss of her kingdom and when the first Liberty loan was offered she subscribed liberally

Some time ago her picturesque audiences, at which she received few except her adherents of olden days were suspended because of her ill health but there were later resumed The ancient state was maintained to some extent and the shadow of a human being never was allowed to cross the royal presence

ELECTRIC SIGNS ARE RESTRICTED

Fuel Supply to Industries Not Essential to War to Be Curtailed and Perhaps Cut Off.

Washington D C Nov 10 Coal supplies to industries classed as nonessential will be sharply reduced by the fuel administration within a few days. Industries are now being classified and those whose products are not necessary in the conduct of the war will be supplied with fuel in limited quantities If the present coal shortage persists they will be cut off entirely from fuel supply.

The fuel administration will issue an order tonight forbidding the use of coal for current in electric display advertising before 7 45 o'clock p m In thus reducing the peak load of coal consumption a great amount of coal, it is claimed will be saved in the larger cities

The electric light order also will prevent the use of coal for current for display advertising after 11 o'clock p m

LAUNCH Y. M. C. A. DRIVE THROUGH NATION SUNDAY

New York, Nov 10.—Fifteen thousand cities and towns in the United States are prepared for the "big drive" commencing Sunday to raise $35,000,000 for war work for American soldiers and sailors, it was announced today by the National war work council of the Young Men's Christian association. The work will be pushed by 250,000 workers on 25,000 committees.

WAR ONLY BEGUN WHEN EVERY MAN OFFERS SELF

New York, Nov 9.—America has sent an army of physicians and surgeons to the battle fields of Europe who are capable of leading and teaching modern methods of war surgery Sir Berkeley Moynihan, senior consulting surgeon of the British army told 2000 physicians at a dinner here

Germany is stronger today than ever before Sir Berkeley said She says she can put in the field from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 fresh men every year She is ruthless and implacable and most effectively organized Germany is going strong She will not be conquered from within she must be conquered from without by you and us

America must prepare herself for a war that is long and arduous. I am asked how long the war will last. I will say for America, that the war for her will have just begun when every man of military age will have offered his life to his country, when your wealth your souls and your honor have been offered when you have mourned your honored dead by the hundreds of thousands"

GERMANY SAYS GEDDES CONCEALED SOME LOSSES

Amsterdam Nov 9 The German admiralty has issued a lengthy statement in reply to the speech made recently in the house of commons by Sir Eric Geddes, first lord of the admiralty In reference to the losses of British ships the statement asks why Sir Eric omitted sinkings in the Mediterranean and contends that, allowing for this omission and for the fact that Sir Eric gave net tonnage while Germany gives gross tonnage the British and German figures nearly correspond The statement says

Despite all British official attempts at denial the submarine assuredly will attain the goal aimed at"

The statement taunts the British fleet with remaining safely behind mine and net defenses and says it was fear of being beaten by the German high seas fleet that induced the British grand fleet not to go to Russia's aid

In his address on November 1 Sir Eric Geddes said that the net reduction of British tonnage since the beginning of the war in ships of more than 1,600 tons was under 2,500,000 tons gross, or 14 per cent Sir Eric declared that between 40 and 50 per cent of the German submarines operating in the North sea, the Arctic and the Atlantic since the beginning of the war had been sunk

SLACKERS AND DISLOYAL FORCED TO QUIT OFFICES

Billings, Mont., Nov 9 --In a roundup of alleged pro-Germans and Liberty loan slackers here a delegation of 650 citizens, who made no effort to conceal their identity, forced Curtis C Oehme, a local architect, to resign as a member of the state board of architectural examiners, compelled Alderman Herman Schwanz to give up his seat as a member of the city council and forced Edward J Kortzborn, a local butcher, to kiss the American flag and publicly declare his allegiance to the United States.

YOUNGER MEN IN CAMPS.

Washington, D C., Nov. 9.—Secretary Baker has reduced from 21 years to 20 years and 9 months the minimum age for students in the third officers' training camp, which is to be opened in January for enlisted men. The purpose is to open the camp to men who will be 21 at the end of their three months' training

BOOK PAPER MEN MAKE PROMISE

Washington D C., Nov. 9.—Book paper manufacturers today made an agreement with the federal trade commission by which alleged unfair trade practices will be stopped and no further action will be taken on the commission's complaint the manufacturers to increase prices.

PROPELLER KILLS INSTRUCTOR.

Boston, Nov. 9 —William Eastman, jr., of Evanston, Ill., an instructor in the government school of aeronautics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technicology, is dead from injuries received Friday when he was struck by a propellor of an airplane engine which he was explaining to the class.

SEND 100,000 DRESSES TO FRANCE.

New York, Nov 9—New York's dress and waist industry will endeavor to show its appreciation to Paris for fashion inspirations by sending 100,000 practical dresses for the women and children of France as a Christmas gift

LORD MAYOR INAUGURATED.

London, Nov 9—The new lord mayor of London, Charles A. Hanson, was inaugurated today with the usual ceremonies, which like all those since the outbreak of the war were purely military

BERLIN U. PROFESSOR DIES.

Amsterdam, Nov. 9.—Dr. Adolph Wagner, former professor of jurisprudence and political economy at the University of Berlin, is dead at his home in Berlin.

HOLD GERMAN SPY SUSPECT.

New York, Nov. 9—Federal authorities removed to Ellis Island today, for further examination, Max Kraut, an arrival on an American ship from South American ports. He spoke with a German accent.

COAL PRICE LIMIT LIFTED.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 9.—Thousands of tons of coal held by jobbers and wholesalers was made available for emergency distribution when the fuel administration decided to allow the dealers to take a small margin of profit on coal they had contracted for at high prices before the government prices were fixed.

The ruling provides that the jobbers may sell at a margin of 15 per cent above the contract cost to purchasers to be designated by state fuel administraters. The fuel administrators will place the coal in communities in need of it.

HOLD FRENCH SECRET AGENT AIDED ENEMY

Jean Leymarie, Malvy's Former Confidential Agent, Arrested for Spying.

Paris, Nov 10. - By order of the military governor of Paris, a formal charge today was preferred against Jean Leymarie, under the law providing against commerce with the enemy and complicity with others charged with the same offense.

This is looked upon as one of the most important developments thus far in the Daudet-Malvy affairs. M Leymarie was an intimate friend of former Minister of the Interior Malvy and was his chief assistant at the ministry of the interior until M. Malvy appointed him acting head of the state secret service

LONDON SEES DARK OUTLOOK

Burden of War Kerensky Mentioned Recently Truly Fallen on U. S., France and England, Papers Point Out.

London, Nov 10 -The situation in Russia, the Daily News urges, should not be taken too tragically It points out that Petrograd is not Russia and advises the outside world to await developments which it says cannot fail to be swift and dramatic

"Nevertheless," the News adds, "this situation, coupled with the continued advance of the enemy in Italy constitutes a sufficiently black outlook.

"The burden of the war falls inevitably more than ever upon the shoulders of this country, France and the United States, and the duration of the war would seem to be prolonged indefinitely."

The News concludes:

"Stern times are before us, but we shall survive the ordeal if we are faithful to our cause—a cause worth living and dying for. Our powers are not exhausted and behind our resources are those of the United States which will be used without limit for the achievement of victory."

The Graphic, anticipates a Russo-German peace with the probability that Germany eventually would get control of Russia's resources. It adds:

"The western allies are now thrown entirely on their own resources and must face the necessity of a greater effort than any yet made."

VON PAYER, PROGRESSIVE, MADE VICE CHANCELLOR?

Amsterdam, Nov. 10.—Friedrich Von Payer, a progressive leader has been designated as German vice chancellor, according to a semi-offical telegram received here from Berlin. It adds that the appointment of Herr Friedberg, leader of the national liberals, as vice president of the Prussian state ministry is considered probable.

BELGIAN AS GERMAN SPY CONVICTED IN ENGLAND

London, Nov. 10.—Official announcement was made today of the conviction of a Belgian as a spy. The statement follows:

"A Belgian subject was tried by the general courtmartial in London on September 24 and 25 on the charge that he had come to the United Kingdom with the intent to commit acts of espionage on behalf of the enemy. He was found guilty and sentenced to death. The sentence was duly confirmed and subsequently was commuted to penal servitude for life."

FORMER AMERICANS FORCED INTO TRENCHES

Copenhagen, Nov. 10.—The German military authorities continue the practice of putting into the army persons living in Germany, who have lost their original citizenship without acquiring German nationality. A new order says that former nationals of foreign states, including former Americans, will not be employed with the front line troops, but must serve in the armies of occupation or elsewhere behind the front. This applies to German Americans who returned to Germany to live after being naturalized in the United States.

The children of such parents are liable to service in the trenches in case they have not completed the necessary steps to obtain American citizenship.

GERMAN GIVES UP HOPE OF STARVING ENGLAND

Copenhagen, Nov. 10.—Captain Persius, naval expert of the Berliner Tageblatt, notes a growing impatience among Germans with the results of the submarine campaign, registered in a swelling flood of letters demanding an answer to the question, "When shall we have England beaten?"

Captain Persius says that with the 1917 harvest and the imports of grain the food problem can scarcely become a motive for the next six months at least, to make Great Britain inclined to conclude peace. He holds that the submarine question for the British will be not "Can we continue the war?" but "Will it pay?"

THEATERS MAY PAY TAX FOR PATRONS, ROPER RULES

Washington, D. C., Nov. 9.—Moving picture theaters and other amusement places may pay the war tax on 1-cent for each 10 cents admission charged without collecting it from patrons, Internal Revenue Commissioner Roper ruled today. The ruling was in response to queries whether it was legal for a theater to advertise "Admission still 10 cents. We pay your war tax."

VON TIRPITZ TO REICHSTAG.

Copenhagen, Nov. 9.—Admiral von Tirpitz, former minister of marine, has been asked by a committee of the conservative party to stand for election to the reichstag in the vacant Saxon district of Bautzen Kamenz

NEW COUNCIL TO DIRECT FORCES

Forces in Italy Begin Journey Up to Position Where Cadorna Has Decided to Make Stand.

GERMANS CONTINUE GAINS

French and British Naval Forces Along Mediterranean Co-Operate Against Turkish Communications.

Italian Army Headquarters, (Thursday), Nov 8 The conference of British, French and Italian representatives has resulted in the creation of a permanent inter allied military committee. New leadership for the Italian army has been provided

General Cadorna who has been in supreme command of the Italian army since the beginning of the war, has been given a place on the new committee.

New heads of the Italian army have been named. General Diaz has been appointed first in command with General Badoglio second and General Grandino third

General Foch, chief of staff of the French war ministry, and General Wilson, sub-chief of the British general staff, will serve on the interallied committee with General Cadorna.

Some of the Italian contingents are animated by such ardor to fight that they are losing contact with the main body and risk being surrounded by the Austro-Germans, who have advanced either higher or lower on the river than the positions occupied by the Italians.

Meanwhile, the Italian retreat has greatly shortened the fighting line, reducing it to scarcely 30 miles in length. This favors the concentration of Italian forces for defense.

Rome, Nov. 9.—The Italians are still holding back the Austrians and Germans by rear guard actions, while the main body of the troops is establishing itself on the positions chosen for the resistance, says today's official statement

By Associated Press.

Italian Headquarters, Thursday, Nov. 10.—The Italians continue their retreat in accordance with the plan of the general staff.

Although the plain over which they are fighting offers no natural defenses with the exception of the hills in the province of Treviso, the Italians are offering more determined resistance to the enemy. From the Treviso hills they are pouring down a rain of shells on the Germans and Austrians, making them pay a heavy price for the ground they gain.

By Associated Press.

In Palestine the British operations around Gaza and Beersheba have resulted in the entire Turkish Palestine beginning to retreat toward the north. It is being harassed by airplane bombardment in its retirement and its communications along the coast are under fire from French and British warships. Forty Turkish guns have been captured by the British whose advance is rapidly bringing them nearer to Jerusalem.

In northern Italy the Austro-Germans have forced a crossing of the Livenza river and the Italians are retiring toward the Piave, the last strong natural line before Venice. General Cadorna's troops are making a more spirited resistance to the forward movement of the invaders, especially on the upper Tagliamento and the upper Livenza.

17,000 More Prisoners Taken.

The larger units of the Italian army are retiring without molestation from the Austro-Germans, but strong rear guards are giving the Teutons battle at several points. An Italian attempt to hold out on the middle Tagliamento resulted in the force being cut off and 17,000 Italians, including a general, being taken by the Austro-Germans, increasing their captures, according to Berlin, to 250,000.

Along the Livenza General Cadorna's soldiers apparently were more successful. The invaders crossed the Livenza only after a vigorous attack and in the region of Vittorio the Italians were able to detain the advance. The Livenza is but a scant 10 miles from the Piave, where General Cadorna probably will make a strong stand.

London, Nov. 10.—The entire Turkish forces in Palestine are retreating towards the north. British airplanes are following up the retiring Turks and bombing them.

Forty Turkish guns were captured, says the British official statement announcing the Ottoman retreat.

British and French naval forces are co-operating against the Turkish communications along the Mediterranean coast.

TURKS RETREATING TO HEBRON.

London, Nov. 10.—Turkish troops are retreating to Hebron, approximately 20 miles south of Jerusalem, and the British are following up closely.

Berlin, Nov. 10.—(British admiralty per Wireless Press.)—The Austro-German forces in northern Italy, overcoming the resistance of the Italian rear guards, are advancing toward the Piave river, the war office announces.

Italian Military Zone, Thursday, Nov. 10.—Both British and French troops are going toward the front.

The French and British representatives who have come to Italy had a conference of two hours today with King Victor Emmanuel. The military measures called for by the present situation were discussed in active and cordial collaboration. On leaving the king, the party visited French and British troops going to the front.

In the party are the British Premier David Lloyd George; the French Premier Paul Painleve; the Italian Premier Vittorio Orlando; Lieut. Gen. Ser William Robertson, chief of the imperial staff at British army headquarters; Major General Wilson, sub-chief of the British general staff; General Smuts, formerly the British commander in South Africa; the Italian foreign minister Baron Sonnino; the French minister of missions abroad, Henry Franklin Bouillon; General Foch, chief of staff of the French war ministry and their staffs.

BRITISH GAIN IN EAST.

London, Nov. 9.—Tekrit on the Tigris river in Mesopotamia, 90 miles northwest of Bagdad, was occupied by the British on November 6, the war office announced today.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

Our country is calling it's best men into army service. Our president is asking all of us to conserve in the consumption of foodstuff and fuel. The different organizations of States are soliciting money, and other necessities for the gallant boys in uniform. No one objects to any of this—but all are loyal in this trying hour through which we must pass.

Our God who hates war is calling for loyalty to His service on the part of every true soldier of the Cross of Christ. The question arises, "Are we putting the firstling of the flock into God's church and service which should come first under all circumstances, or are we giving the fleece to some other cause?" Let God be first.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all of these things shall be added unto you."

The Jeffery "Six"
---Two Power Ranges---

The "Loafing" Range
Economical Operation

In it's loafing range it exhibits all the admirable traits you would expect in an eighty horse power eight of real class.

And through all its varied performance in it's "loafing" range, it is automatically operating on half fuel rations--in fact it uses fuel so sparingly as to shame many a lesser powered six--even many a four.

The "Sporting" Range
Extravagant Performance

You have only to open the throttle wider to release her double popets and give her full rations--and utterly change her whole character.

Now you have brute power and speed that puts all ordinary contenders at your mercy--you have nothing to fear from even the few cars that rightly claim the distinction of real class.

See the Jeffery--ride in it--compare it for appearance, power, flexibility and economy with any other six or eight--and we will leave it to your judgement if it does not deserve it's name--"America's Greatest Six"

LOVE OF GARDEN DEMOCRATIC

Joy of Creating Beauty Spot May Exist Alike in the Millionaire and the Day Laborer.

Frances Duncan in her book on "The Joyous Art of Gardening," says:

No passion is more democratic than that of love for a garden. The love of literature, of art, of music can, it is true, occupy mind and heart with equal completeness, but in all of these the joy of creation is limited inevitably to the gifted few. The passion for a garden, however, and the joy of making one may exist alike in millionaire and washer-woman; the day laborer, returning from his work betakes himself to tending his rose bush, and so, perhaps, does the banker. . . . Those to whom the garden is a source of vivid pleasure do a part or most of the work of it themselves. . . . For real enjoyment the garden must be considered as a work of art, not as a "chore" and one's plants as friends and intimates, not em- . . . Chief . . . of its "garden delights" is that its charm is wholly unrelated to the amount of money spent upon it. The simplest of little gardens may have more of this lovely and endearing quality of charm than the most pretentious of estates.

A Portable Porch Screen of Lattice-Work. Good Dimensions Are These: Box, 4 Feet by 1 Foot by 1 Foot; Lattice, 4 Feet Square.

PROFIT IN MUNICIPAL FARM

Springfield, Ill., Made Money After Supporting Prisoners and Aiding Latters' Families.

In Springfield, Ill., the sum of $529.15 in cash was realized from the municipal farm in addition to the keep of prisoners and a considerable quantity of vegetables for prisoners families, according to a report issued by City Prison Keeper Henry Mester, who had charge of the farm. Approximately 400 bushels of corn were raised on the 20-acre tract near the water works. The grain was sold to the police and fire departments for the horses. In addition to the corn, vegetables raised, such as potatoes, onions, cabbage, beans and other garden stuff brought $190.

Aside from the money earned, Mester declares the experiment has worked out to the great physical and moral benefit of prisoners who, if it had not been for the prison farm, would have been confined all summer, or at least a great part of it, in the "bull pen" at the city prison. Commissioner Roy R. Reese, head of the department of health and public safety, is well pleased with the plan.

A Common Error.

One of the most common errors, noticeable in gardens, is overplanting with trees of ultimate large size and spread. This evil can seldom be remedied except by removal of some of the lot and this job is too often left until some or all are out of shape, crippled or under-developed in parts, so that several years are necessary for gradual resumption of normal form and outline. Leave lawns as open spaces and plant trees only as border growths and then, if in after years the latter grow together the effect still is not bad, often is good, and the open glade of lawn is still inviolate.

Garden Design.

The most important matter to consider in every garden is that of design. Until this is settled and accepted not a tree or shrub should be set, and if the design be not good no planting, however skillfully done, can make an attractive garden. There should be complete harmony between art and utility. The garden should be natural in the use of plants and not dispose the latter as one would purely architectural objects, yet it should be a subdued nature that predominates, for the garden cannot look like a piece of wild nature.

"Off-the-Tray" Service.

Passengers on a Western railroad who do not care to go to the dining car now take advantage of what is known as the "off-the-tray" service at a less cost. Waiters, bearing large trays, pass through the cars, offering various kinds of sandwiches, also hard-shelled eggs, fruit, pies, cakes, hot coffee, milk, etc. The service is specially intended for the convenience of women, particularly those who have children with them.

Propellers Run Tandem.

Experiments made in boat propulsion with one propeller, one behind the other, show that but little increased speed is obtained by the arrangement; and rotating the two screws in opposite directions, either at the same or different speeds, has little effect on the results. It is, however, claimed that the double screw gives better control of the vessel.

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

((CHAPTER XX—Continued)

"No; it is not liberty; it is government by the majority. The wonderful thing, the astonishing thing, the inspiring thing about it is that in this, and in all other questions, the minority accepts its defeat without grumbling and makes the best of it. That is the great lesson which the United States has for the remainder of the world. And, to preserve itself, it need keep no class in subjection, need draft no man for service in its armies—for it is a government founded on the consent of the governed."

He was silent a moment, considering, perhaps, how to use most wisely this opportunity.

"Let us appy that principle to the other countries of the world," he went on, at last. "Let us suppose that the people of each country were asked to choose freely for themselves their form of government. How many of the present governments would stand that test? Do you think the government of Germany would?"

"No," said the prince; "I suppose not. Our people are all socialists, so my father says. But they a.e not fit to govern."

"Whose fault is that? Have you tried to make them fit? Besides, their fitness or unfitness has nothing to do with it. It is their country; let them grow fit by experience. But I believe they are fit. How many of your great men have come from humble life?"

"Oh, a great many, I dare say!" answered the prince, impatiently. "But a body needs a head. It must be governed by a head, not by a stomach!"

"Ah," said Vard, "but, as a matter of fact, every body is governed by its stomach. Not till the stomach is satisfied does the head get a chance. And, to govern wisely, the head must be a part of the body, not something distinct from it. How is it to govern wisely, if it is not always in close touch with the body, aware of its every need? It is only when the head is distant from the body that it lets the body starve and wastes its substance on vain and unnecessary things."

"I suppose," said the prince with a smile, "that you refer to our army and navy."

"To the army and navy of every nation Could the people choose, how many battleships would Germany build next year?"

The prince shrugged his shoulders helplessly.

"How can I answer such questions? I do not know. But I do know that I have been born in a certain position, and that I must maintain it."

"Why?" Vard demanded.

"For the sake of my honor, and the honor of my house," answered the Prince, simply.

"Honor!" cried Vard. "What do princes know of honor? Is it honorable to live on the sweat and suffering of others, and to make them no return? Is it honorable to be supported by the toil of women and children, whose men you have taken for your army? Is it honorable——"

He stopped suddenly, for the door had opened and a girl came in. She stared first at one man and then at the other, evidently astonished by the few words she had heard. Then she turned to withdraw. But Vard stopped her.

"Don't go, my dear," he said. "Allow me to present you to a prince of the House of Hohenzollern! Prince, this is my daughter, Kasia."

CHAPTER XXI.

ON THE EDUCATION OF PRINCES.

The prince sprang to his feet and bowed low over the hand which Kasia, after an instant's startled hesitation, had extended. Her father watched the scene with an amused face.

"You arrived most opportunely, my dear," he said. "The prince, being bored, as is the way with Princes, came to me, asking to be amused. I started out to amuse him by describing certain strange customs of America, which he is about to visit for the first time; but I was soon on my hobby again, and instead of amusing him——"

"You were abusing him!" said Kasia, laughing. "At least, it sounded so to me!"

"Oh, not at all!" the prince hastened to assure her. "I found what he was saying most interesting."

But Vard, with that quick change of mood characteristic of his temperament, had already decided that it was not worth while attempting to rear any seed from this barren soil. The prince's intentions were good enough, but they would come to nothing—his father would see to that!

"Nevertheless," said Vard, "I am not an amusing companion. I am too much of a preacher, and no one likes to be shouted at. I would suggest, Kasia, that you take his highness for a tour of the deck."

The prince's face brightened wonderfully.

"That would indeed be kind!" he said.

Kasia looked at him with a little smile. Perhaps the opportunity of talking familiarly with royalty piqued her, good democrat as she was; and then he was not a bad looking fellow. One could see that he was not brilliant. but he at least looked clean and honest.

"If you really wish it," she agreed.

For answer, the prince sprang to door.

"One moment," Vard interposed. "You will remember, Kasia, that the prince is incognito, and that, under no circumstances, must you betray to any spectator or listener who he is."

"I will remember, father," said Kasia, and following the prince out upon the deck.

Wherefore it presently came to pass that Dan Webster, staring gloomily down from the after boat deck upon the flitting beauties of the first class promenade, beheld the lady of his dreams strolling beside a well set up young fellow, whose face seemed vaguely familiar, and in whose conversation she was evidently deeply interested—so interested that she finally climbed with him to a seat on the upper deck; and when they sat down, Dan saw that the young fellow sat very close indeed. He stared incredulously for a moment longer, and then turned angrily away, to bump violently into M. Chevrial, who was also staring.

"What the——" Dan began, and then stopped himself. What right had this Frenchman to stare? But then, for that matter, what right had he?

Chevrial was the first to recover himself. He glanced at Dan's disturbed countenance, and smiled as he read his thought.

"I was surprised to see a passenger of the second class so calmly enjoying the privileges of the forward deck," he explained. "If any one was to enjoy those privileges, I should have expected it to be you."

"So he is second class! I thought he looked somehow familiar. I remember, now."

"He is undoubtedly the same young German we have seen so frequently pacing this deck," said Chevrial. "I fancy he is lonely and desires amusement. But, at the same time, I fear that you lack enterprise, M. Webster. That is not like an American."

Dan flushed, and started to walk away, but Chevrial laid a hand upon his arm.

"No, do not be angry with me," he said. "I beg your pardon. It will please you to know that that young man yonder is one of the very few persons on this boat with whom Miss Vard may talk unconstrainedly. No doubt that is why she appears so glad to see him."

With which cryptic utterance, M. Chevrial went below, and left Dan to bitter meditation.

Kasia, meanwhile, was enjoying herself immensely.

"Now," she said, leaning back in the seat, after a glance around to assure herself that there was no one within hearing, "please tell me what it is like to be a prince. Don't you get frightfully lonesome, sometimes?"

"That was my complaint today, when I sought your father."

"Yes—but always, always to stand apart from other men and women, so that they never dare be quite open with you; quite frank with you; always a little in awe of you."

"Not many people I know are in awe of me," said the prince. "Most of them consider me something of a fool—they do not say so, but I can read it in their faces. My father thinks me a total fool, and does not hesitate to say so."

"He must be a terrible man!"

"He is," agreed the prince, with conviction.

Kasia looked at him to see if he was in earnest; then turned away her head for an instant, until she could control her lips.

"How does it happen that you speak English so well?" she asked.

"My father required it. It is the result of many weary hours, I assure you. However," added the prince, "I ought not to complain since it has secured for me the present hour."

It was the first time Kasia had ever been made the mark of a royal compliment, and she flushed a little in spite of herself.

"It is nice of you to say so!" she murmured. "So you have had your bad times, too?"

"Bad times, Miss Vard! Why the life that I have led has been a dog's life. There were so many things that I must know—that we all must know—so many things we must not do. I have often gazed from the windows of the palace and envied the boys in the gutter!"

"Not really!"

"Oh, not really, of course. I would not change. What I envied them was their liberty, their freedom to come and go as it pleased them."

"But since you are of age?"

"Even yet, each moment must be accounted for. I am now a lieutenant in the navy, and am supposed to employ each hour profitably. My father is a very great man; there are few things that he does not know; and he expects his sons to know as much. Even of pictures, which bore me; even of music, which distresses me. Everything is arranged. At such a time, I am to be with my ship; again, I am to attend the opera; again, I am to be present at the opening of a museum; again, I must listen to a long address which I do not understand. I may not even choose my own wife. All that is arranged."

"But no doubt," Kasia suggested, amused at his forlorn aspect, "your father will choose more wisely than you would."

"I do not know," said the prince disconsolately. "I fear that he will consider birth and position of more importance than youth and beauty. Besides, there are some things a man likes to do for himself. My poor sister, now—"

He stopped, for, under the stimulus of Miss Vard's sympathy, he found himself about to betray a family secret.

"Yes, I can understand that," said Kasia, with more tenderness than she had yet shown. "You don't mind my talking frankly to you?"

"I love to be talked frankly to," protested the prince.

This was very far from the truth, only the prince didn't know it. What he really loved was flattery disguised as frankness. In this, he resembled most other human beings.

"Well, then," said Kasia, "if you don't like it, if you find it intolerable, why don't you cut and run?"

"Cut and run?"

"Yes; go away by yourself, be a free man, and marry the woman you love. For of course there is such a woman?"

"Oh, yes," and the prince thought of the blue eyed daughter of the shopkeeper in the Friedrichstrasse, just off Unter den Linden; however, he had never thought of marriage in connection with her. "But suppose I should do that," he added, "how should I live?"

"How do other men live? By work!"

"But that would be a disgrace!"

"Disgrace! It isn't half so disgraceful as to live by the work of other men."

"Your father said something of the same sort to me. But I fear that neither of you understands. A prince cannot do such things."

Kasia threw up her hands.

"So we come back to the beginning of the circle!" she cried.

"Besides, my father would not permit it," added the prince.

"Aren't you of age?"

"Yes—but he is the head of the family. He would have me brought home—from the end of the world, if necessary—and then I should be confined. Even my elder brother is sometimes confined — separated from his wife, from his children, permitted to see no one."

"Poor prince!" said Kasia. "So you are a slave, like the rest of us—rather worse than the rest of us, indeed! Is there nothing you can do?"

"Very few things," said the prince, beginning really to pity himself. "You see, there is always my family to consider—nothing must be done to injure its position or to make it less popular. Even my father very often may not say what he thinks or do what he wishes."

"So he is a slave, too!"

"Yes, in a way. And it grows worse and worse. Often, in private, he laments the old days when a king was really a king, who was venerated and whose word was law. He grows very angry that at each election there are more socialists. He says that the only hope for the country is in a great war: it is for that he prepares."

"How would a great war help?"

"Oh, in face of the common danger, our people would forget their differences, for they all love their fatherland; they would fight shoulder to shoulder. And then, when it was over, they would all be mad with joy over the victory, and there would be new provinces to add to Germany, and an immense tax levied on our enemy to pay the expenses of the war, so that our own people would not have to bear that burden. It would all be just as it was after the war with France, when every German was filled with patriotism, and when Germany for the first time became one country. Our house would again be well beloved, its authority unquestioned."

"But suppose you are defeated?"

"We shall not be defeated," said the prince, calmly. "There is no nation in the world which Germany could not defeat — except, perhaps, the United States. England will be our foe, and you will see her tumble to pieces like a house of cards. She is but an empty shell."

Kasia sat for a moment considering all this. If this was really what was in the kaiser's mind—and she could scarcely doubt it—it was foolish to suppose that he would consent to disarmament.

"What you have told me is not very promising for universal peace," she said, at last.

"There can be no universal peace until we have humiliated England," replied the prince. "That is the belief of all good Germans. The conflict must come soon, and we strain every nerve to prepare for it. I betray no secret when I tell you this. All Europe knows it. England struggles also to prepare, but we are always far ahead. When we are quite ready, we shall strike. Then, after we have won, after we have established Germany as the first nation of Europe, we shall be ready for peace. But we must have one more great victory. The welfare of our house demands it."

As he spoke, his eyes rested on the top of the companion way leading from the lower deck, and he started violently, for a face had appeared there — a face which looked at him sternly, almost threateningly. It was the face of Pachmann. Without a word, it disappeared. The prince turned nervously to his companion.

"Pardon me, Miss Vard," he said, "but I must go. And do not think too seriously of my chatter. I am not admitted to councils of state, I know only what every one knows. We Germans, we have our dreams; but perhaps they are only that."

He arose, opened his lips to say something more, then changed his mind, bowed, and hurried away. Kasia stared after him. She had not seen that silent summons. But he did not look back.

An hour later, Pachmann, with a countenance distinctly troubled, sought out Ignace Vard, who was reading in his room.

"The prince has been talking to your daughter," he said.

Vard looked at him in surprise.

"I sent them out together," he explained. "I thought perhaps Kasia would amuse him—and be amused."

"Has she told you nothing?"

Again Vard glanced at him.

"No. Has she reason for complaint?"

"I did not mean that. I dare say he behaved decently enough. But he spouted a lot of childish nonsense about German hopes and German ambitions, and I feared your daughter might take him seriously. He is nothing but an ignorant young fool."

Vard laid aside his book and looked Pachmann full in the face.

"The truth comes sometimes from the mouths of fools," he said. "When am I to have my answer?"

Kidding the Neighbors.

Casey had been married only a week when he discovered that his wife, who had assumed control of household and larder, was inclined to be stingy.

He had been working in his small garden one afternoon when wife came to the back door and called out in strident tones: "Terrence, come in to tay, toast and folve eggs!"

Terrence dropped his spade in astonishment and ran into the kitchen. "Sure, ye're only kiddin' me," he said.

"No, Terrence," said the wife; "it's not ye; it's the neighbors I'm kiddin'."

Kaiser Gains Through Lack Of Unity Among His Enemies; Follows Napoleon's Pl

BY FRANK H. SIMONDS.
(Copyright by the New York Tribune.)

Writing to Robespierre in 1794 the young Napoleon Bonaparte set forth his whole conception of war. He said: "The management of a war is exactly like the siege of a fortress. You must concentrate your fire on a single point. Once a breach is made the equilibrium is destroyed, resistance becomes fruitless and the place is captured. Attacks should never be scattered, but concentrated. You must divide in order to find food and unite for fighting. Unity of command is essential to success. Time is everything."

The more one studies the Napoleonic campaigns the more clearly one perceives how completely this Napoleonic doctrine is therein expressed, and the more one studies the operations of the opponents of Napoleon the more clearly one perceives the reasons why German high command has won so many successes since the beginning of the war.

Win On Napoleon's Plan.

Through all the period of his great wars Napoleon fought coalitions and alliances. His victories in the early period of the empire were won with inferior numbers under conditions which should have produced victory for his opponents. Austerlitz was possible because of division in the counsel of Russian and Austrian leaders. It was not until 1813 that his opponents learned to act together with any measure of coherence, and as late as the Marne campaign of 1814 division of forces gave Napoleon his last victories and almost enabled him to triumph over vast numbers when his armies had been reduced to a handful.

We have always known that the Germans were close students of the Napoleonic warfare, and from the very outset of the war their operations have been conducted on the Napoleonic scale and with the Napoleonic principles in mind. Whether German armies have been acting alone or have been joined with Austrian, Bulgarian or Turkish armies, the German general staff has been the master, as was Napoleon in the days when he drew armies not alone from smaller subject states, but even from Prussia to serve with his own grand army. The result has been in the case of Germany, as in the case of Napoleon, that the whole striking forces have been concentrated on a single point, sometimes with fatal consequences to the enemy, never without carrying immediate and deadly peril not alone to the armies, but to the whole existence of a hostile nation.

Struck at France First.

Going backward to the beginning of the war, one sees that the Germans struck at France with all their forces, after superior preparation, possessing troops better equipped, provided with better artilery and, like their commanders, animated with the determination to destroy at a single thrust.

French strategy availed to parry the blow at the Marne and pinned down the German attack at the Yser, but German high command was thereafter able to let loose another thunderbolt against Russia, which eventually destroyed Russian military power and for all practical purposes put Russia out of the war. The blow at Serbia accomplished the same thing on a smaller scale. The blow directed at France at Verdun was for exactly the same purpose, although it failed. The blow has now fallen upon Italy has the same character, the same purpose and has had great initial success.

Now when one sets against this policy the allied policy of three years of conflict one sees clearly why superior ultimate resources and devotion not less great have failed so far to win a decisive victory.

Sideshows Delay Allies.

While the conflict was between France and Germany in the Marne campaign, there was unity of command on the allied side and this unity of command enabled France to save Europe. But after the Marne and the Yser there begins a long period in which we have side shows—the wasting of scanty British numbers at Gallipoli and in Mesopotamia, the transfer of French and British troops to Saloniki, the collapse of Russia in 1915, due in the first instance to the inability of the allies in the west to occupy German troops on their front, and we are now seeing the defeat of Italy because of the failure of Russia.

At the outset of the war, German high command said: "We will dispose of France in the first six weeks of the war. We will then turn our attention toward Russia and dispose of the Slav. After that we shall be masters of Europe." France was badly hurt, but not disposed of, but German high command, still adhering to the Napoleonic doctrine, turned to Russia and did dispose of Russia, swept Serbia out of its way, and then turned back upon France. In every case German high command has concentrated its forces and staked all on a single blow. So far the allies have been unable to attain a similar unity of purpose. While France was striving for existence the main Russian effort was being made against Austria in 1914. While Russia was on the point of collapse in 1915, allied efforts were divided between France, Gallipoli and Mesopotamia. In 1916 France imperied again at Verdun, could not obtan aid from Great Britain for more than four months. Partially because of the Gallipoli affair, British armies were not yet ready to take the field.

Another Blunder of Allies.

In the present Italian operations there has been again the old familiar lack of mutual cooperation, understanding and unity of action. Italy has been permitted to thrust herself forward into positions which she could not maintain, inviting the run which has now arrived, while her allies have concentrated their attention upon their one front.

In the long wars of Europe against Louis XIV. the familiar story of the weakness of coalition appears again and again. Readers of Henry Esmond will recall how often Marlborough was prevented from achieving decisive victories or following up great success owing to hesitation of the Dutch. Yet in the end Europe triumphed over Louis XIV. In the Napoleonic time the coalitions were weaker in that they lacked a Marlborough while France was more fortunate, since she had the supreme military genius of the age. Nevertheless in the end the coalition prevailed.

Grant Solves the Problems.

Turning to our own civil war one sees instantly that it was not until Grant became commander of all the armies that the war was conducted as more than a series of disconnected campaigns. It was Grant who perceived that victory could only be had by the application of equal pressure in all directions—such pressure as would prevent the transfer of troops from the armies of northern Virginia to Tennessee; such pressure as would enable the north with its greatly superior numbers to wear out the south. It is only after Chattanooga that one sees the whole of the civil war on the northern side proceeding as a cohesive, centralized effort, and when this time came the collapse of the south could [illegible] long delayed.

If the Germans now succeed in [illegible] ting Italy out of the war as they [illegible] Russia out in 1915 they will have [illegible] terially diminished the chances [illegible] military decision in favor of the [illegible] but only because the world is wea[illegible] the struggle. Even with Italy [illegible] the war the allies will still possess [illegible] ly superior resources in men [illegible] money. Austria in her present [illegible] tion will not be able to contribute [illegible] to aid Germany against France, [illegible] ain and the United States. The [illegible] defeat may save Austria from col[illegible] but nothing can restore the strength [illegible] Austria during the period of the [illegible] war. Now and always Germany [illegible] have to fight her western battle[illegible] and Germany will confront her [illegible] enemies weakened by all her [illegible] in the east.

Still Germany Can't Win.

It is essential to take the [illegible] as it exists on the military side [illegible] basis of calculation. Even were [illegible] to be crushed, Germany could not [illegible] the war against Great Britain, [illegible] and the United States unless [illegible] three nations should consent to [illegible] a struggle which they could not [illegible] it were pursued Russia and Italy [illegible] if Italy were permanently [illegible] from the war now, have lasted [illegible] enough to destroy Austria's value [illegible] ally to Germany, and Germany [illegible] stand or fall alone in a battle [illegible] three nations, two of which in [illegible] and in population vastly exceed [illegible] kaiser's empire.

Napoleon failed at the task which [illegible] kaiser has undertaken. He could [illegible] defeat Austria, Russia, Prussia [illegible] Great Britain. Louis XIV failed [illegible] better initial advantages against [illegible] Europe more completely disorganized [illegible] Nothing is more eloquently illustrative [illegible] of the situation than the fact that [illegible] German success is immediately [illegible] Berlin and elsewhere by every German [illegible] agent as the basis of the flotation [illegible] peace propaganda

Must Follow German Lead.

On the other hand it is plain [illegible] German defeat will be tremendously [illegible] delayed if the French, the British [illegible] the American high commands, together [illegible] with the Italian, if Italy is to remain [illegible] belligerent, as one should now be [illegible] do not imitate the German method [illegible] measurably at least seek to achieve [illegible] unity of command in all directions [illegible] concentration of resources on a single [illegible] front. If Italy can now be saved [illegible] the enemy pinned down at the Trentino [illegible] memento the Italian man power should [illegible] thereafter be joined to French, British [illegible] and American on the Belgian [illegible] French fronts and the campaign of [illegible] should see the concentration of every [illegible] man and every gun available in a supreme [illegible] effort to break the military power of [illegible] Germany, as Germany has sought to [illegible] break the military power of each of [illegible] her foes separately

Must Pool Resources.

The next conference of the allies [illegible] about which so much is being written [illegible] must achieve a pooling of all military [illegible] resources, an agreement for the subordination of all national schemes to the [illegible] allied plan and the formulation of a [illegible] concerted program for the operations [illegible] of 1918. As long as France, Great [illegible] Britain and the United States continue [illegible] in the war eventual German defeat is [illegible] assured. There is no present prospect [illegible] that Italy will not also stay in the war [illegible] and by so much increase the advantage [illegible] of the allies. But an alliance which has [illegible] been unable to save Belgium, Roumania, [illegible] Serbia, Rumania and temporarily [illegible] Greece politically can need no further [illegible] illustration of the weakness of its strategy [illegible] egy either on the political or the military side.

FLYER HAS MIRACULOUS ESCAPE FROM DEA

London, (by mail) —After one of [illegible] most miraculous escapes of the war [illegible] Major Bannatyne, D. S. O., is today [illegible] covering from his injuries in the Ca[illegible] cestor hospital.

While flying alone at a height [illegible] more than 1,000 feet his engine caught [illegible] fire. He headed the machine toward [illegible] the ground. Within a few minutes the [illegible] flames reached his feet. He climbed [illegible] out of the seat and crawled along the [illegible] body of the plane toward the tail while [illegible] the blazing plane plunged toward [illegible] earth. The flames reached him and [illegible] He swung himself off the frame and [illegible] hung by his hands under the machine [illegible] now a mass of flames. Just before [illegible] the glowering wreck struck the ground [illegible] Bannatyne dropped. He fell in a [illegible] plowed field and was picked up suffering [illegible] ing from a broken arm, scores of burns [illegible] and with all his hair scorched to a [illegible] crisp. The machine crashed into a tree [illegible] and both were consumed by the flames.

Persistent Kerensky.

From the Rocky Mountain News.

Ministers and generals resign, cabinets are made and dissolved, crises develop and subside, but Kerensky sticks [illegible]

The persistence of the young Russian premier is not least of his high qualifications for the great work he has undertaken.

As time goes by and we witness [illegible] emerging from one situation after another [illegible] in which disaster seemed to threaten, we can appreciate better the vision of the man and the spirit in which he purposed [illegible]

Above all, Kerensky seeks a united Russia. We have sometimes feared that his radicalism inclined him to lend too ready an ear to the extremists or to look too leniently their disturbing propaganda, but the fact remains that he has not yet yielded to their demands in a way vital to Russian unity, he has never permitted himself to be made the leader of a faction. Neither the proletariate nor the bourgeoisie is allowed to dominate. He insists, must have its voice [illegible] share in the work of reconstruction of the shattered civil and military organization of the country.

Those who were disposed to think that the success of the Korniloff movement might prove of advantage to the cause in war against Germany probably misjudged the situation. The triumph of Korniloff would have been a factional triumph; the gap between Russian [illegible] would have been widened; the conflict on the frontier would have been a signal for civil strife.

Although Kerensky's foothold is on radical ground, he has never withdrawn the hand of comradeship from the more conservative elements in the state. As Old as His Son.

Thirty days in the workhouse was the sentence, but it had nothing to do with the startling reply of the prisoner standing before Judge Pugh to answer a charge of assault, according to the Philadelphia Press.

After the usual number of questions was asked Then the judge inquired:

"Is your father living?"

"Yes."

"How old is he?"

"Same age as me."

Judge Pugh glared.

"And how old is your father?"

"Old as I am, your honor."

"Take care!" warned the court. "Answer properly."

"Very well," said the prisoner. "He became a father the same day I became a father."

Gift to British.

A magnificent gift to the British nation is being made by a Leeds gentleman in the form of his famous collection of old Dutch and Flemish masters, including notable examples by Rembrandt and Vandyck. There are upward of fifty pictures in the collection which will be handed to a trust known as the National Collection Fund and they will be shown all over the country. It is estimated that the value of the collection is something like one hundred and fifty thousand pounds.

"There's a Reason"

WHY SOME DEEP WELLS FURNISH SALTY WATER

From the Kansas City Star

Among the many unsolved mysteries concerning the interior of Mother Earth few are more fascinating than those brought to light by certain surprising experiences of drillers of deep wells, says a bulletin of the United States geological survey. Although many people are not aware of the fact, a large proportion of the wells sunk to depths below 1,000 feet encounter large bodies of salt water, the flow of which may be so great that the driller remarks that he has struck the Gulf of Mexico or some other immense body of salt water. The salt water may even flow up out of the mouth of the well, but more commonly it rises in the well to a height of several hundred feet above the bottom and its supply is so great that only a pump of enormous capacity can keep the well empty Where does this salt water come from? It is often assumed that it fills some immense cavity or system of caverns, but in fact it is generally contained in some bed of unusually porous rock, like sandstone, in which the pores, though minute, have an aggregate volume or capacity of millions of cubic feet

But one question is no sooner answered than another one, more difficult, arises, and the question now is, How did this salt water get into the porous rock? Has rain water soaked far down in the earth and found some bed of rock salt which it dissolved and thereby became salty, or had the salt water some source far within the earth from which it has arisen toward the surface; or is it the water of some ancient ocean that filled the pores of the sand and mud of its bed, which in ages gone by became buried under sand and mud that gradually accumulated on the ocean bottom?

The shells of sea animals found in limestones and other hard rocks at the heart of the continent show clearly that the ocean, in some one or several remote ages, covered a large part of the country, and it appears extremely probable that the salt water found in the deep wells is really fossil sea water entombed in the sands and muds of former eons and now brought to the surface by the drill, which in innumerable places in this and other countries is being sunk to depths of 2,000, 3,000 and 4,000 feet, and even down to depths of nearly 7,500 feet, a depth reached by a very deep well which is still being drilled at a place a little west of Pittsburgh.

This salt water seems to be found especially in oil fields, but it has been struck by the drill at many other places, as, for example, near Leavenworth, Kan., where enormous quantities of salt water are found at various depths below the surface.

Although no valuable pools of oil or gas have been found in that region, numerous beds of coal underlie it. In one boring four beds of coal aggregating over eight feet in thickness and numerous thinner beds having an additional total thickness of six feet were found In that region also many outcropping layers of rock contain remains of marine shells, and the entire region was no doubt once covered by the sea. Indeed, the geologist has been able to decipher in the rocks numerous details of the record of the advance and retreat of the sea and has been able to establish the fact that the region was submerged at several different times. These and other geologic features of the region near Leavenworth and east of it in Missouri, including its mineral resources, are described in a folio of the Geologic Atlas of the United States just issued by the United States Geological survey, department of the interior. This folio, the Leavenworth-Smithville folio (No. 206), which was prepared in cooperation with the Missouri bureau of geology and mines, contains also geologic maps and numerous other illustrations It may be obtained by sending 25 cents to the director of the survey

Ration Heaters for Soldiers.

National Geographic Society Bulletin

In Italy and France women and children are rolling old newspapers into tight rolls, pasting down the edges with glue or paste, and boiling them in paraffin to make ration heaters (scalda-rancio) out of them for the use of the soldiers in the trenches in the high Alps, where coal cannot be sent. They are making them by the million. The Italian National society furnishes 1,500,000 a day to the government, and the old newspapers are being used up for this purpose so fast that they are becoming scarce, and paraffin has become very expensive.

In America there are still millions of candle ends and thousands of tons of newspapers scattered over the country, and it would seem to be well worth while for the thousands of willing hands in the homes to convert them into these most useful ration heaters for the boys at the front, or for their use next winter in the training camps, or even for use at home, where they can take the place of the more expensive solid alcohol or replace kindlings in the kitchen stove.

It is the easiest thing imaginable to make ration heaters, or scalda-rancio, as they are called in Italy, if one follows the directions of the National Italian society

Spread out four newspapers, eight sheets in all, and begin rolling at the long edge. Roll as tightly as possible until the papers are half rolled, then fold back the first three sheets toward the rolled part and continue to wrap around the roll almost to the first fold, then fold back another three sheets and continue to wrap around the roll again up to the last margin of the paper On this margin, consisting of two sheets, spread a little glue or paste and continue the rolling, so as to make a compact roll of paper almost like a torch. If six of the sheets are not turned under, there will be too many edges to glue.

"While the newspapers may be cut along the line of the columns before rolling and the individual columns rolled separately, as is done in the making of the trench candles in France, it is easier to roll the whole newspaper into a long roll and then cut it into short lengths. A sharp carving knife, a pair of pruning shears, or an old fashioned hay cutter will cut the rolls easily. These little rolls must then be boiled for four minutes in enough paraffin to cover them and then taken out and cooled, when they are ready to be put in bags and sent to the front. If there are more newspapers than candle ends, block paraffin can be bought for a few cents at any grocery or drug store.

"Little children and grown-ups in Italy and France are rolling, gluing, and paraffining these ration heaters by the million, and their fathers and husbands in the high Alps and other places where wood and coal cannot be sent are cooking their rations over them."

OUR STAR-SPANGLED SPUD CROP.

From Capper's Weekly.

This country has been raising an average crop of 350,000,000 bushels of potatoes a year. This year's war crop will be 117,000,000 bushels more than the average of the last five years. We consume only 2.6 bushels of potatoes per capita. Germany before the war consumed 9.4 bushels per capita, England 8.3, and France 7.7 bushels. We raise fewer potatoes per capita than any nation in the world, and always have imported a few, notwithstanding the potato is supposed to have originated on this side of the world.

AIRMAN REPORTED DEAD CAN'T GET CHECKS CASHED

Paris, (by mail)—Leonard M. Reno, of Chicago, American aviator attached to a French escadrille, is having difficulty convincing friends and others that he really isn't dead.

During a recent engagement, Reno found himself in his machine over the German lines doing battle with a German plane. The German placed a lucky shot in Reno's gas tank. Several thousand feet in the air, without gasoline for his motor, and with a belligerent Teuton airman in the vicinity, gave Reno no alternative but to make for home. He did a lot of aerial acrobatics and the German gave up the chase, thinking his opponent done for. Reno tumbled over the French lines in safety, but a clump of trees interferred with a smooth landing and he smashed. Allied observers who saw the entire performance, thought the youthful aviator had gone to the "honor call," and so reported The news sped its way to Paris, where Reno's friends remarked, "another good one gone," and proceeded to settle down and mourn his fate.

Chapter two of Reno's accident found him crawling from under his battered machine and making for camp. Then he was given "leave" for Paris, where he might recover from his bruises.

Chapter three finds Reno walking into a Paris bank, where he had deposited funds. "I would like to cash a check," he said, as he presented himself at the paying teller's window. French banks have the habit of always looking at the book before they cash checks. The customer always waits.

"I'm sorry" said the teller after consulting the bookkeeper, "we can't cash this check today. You see, Mr. Reno is dead. All his funds will be sent back to his father in Chicago. This check will have to wait."

Like Mark Twain, Reno refused to believe the story or at least thought it was exaggerated Luckily he happened to know the manager of the bank, who confirmed his story. The check was cashed Practically all of the young birdman's friends in Paris had heard of his "untimely death," and were startled in turn when Reno met them proud in the flesh and blood that he was not a dead one.

U. S. KEEPS DETAILED RECORD OF SOLDIERS

Washington, D C.—A complete indexed record containing detailed information about every soldier in the American army will be worked out by the war department

This record, involving a tremendous amount of labor, is being prepared by the statistical department of the war department under Major Jones.

Today, the statistical department is into the old bureau of the census building at First and B streets, northwest It has been quartered in the offices of the adjutant general.

Much more room is needed because a large force will be required to do the enormous amount of statistical work which is comprehended in the plans for collecting and dispensing information about the troops

Eventually this department will have the record of every soldier, the address of his next of kin and so on The instant a report comes here telling of the death of a soldier in France or in the camps his next of kin is notified by wire

This is done even before the information is turned over to the newspapers

If the extent of the operations of the American troops on the western front becomes what it is expected to become, the magnitude of the duty incumbent on the statistical department will be staggering

Already some of the states have taken up this question of supplying information to the relatives of troops. Massachusetts has taken the lead, has established a soldiers' information bureau, and has named William M. Stuart as its Washington representative. Mr Stuart has offices in the Munsey building

It is probable other states will take a similar course.

Under the plan of Massachusetts, the vast number of inquiries received at the state bureau of information, located at Boston, will be referred here, the facts obtained and then relatives will be informed through the Boston office. This will be of assistance to the war department in relieving it of the task of sending letters in reply to many queries.

Women "Shy" at Mortgages.

Judge Robert Grant in Scribner's.

Woman seems to be constitutionally gunshy when confronted with mortgages, stocks bonds, she sheers off as if afraid of being hit and manifests a like tendency to become panic stricken or obfuscated over rates of interest or the distinctions between capital and income. She has no fear of money in the bank so long as she does not overdraw her accounts, but becomes dazed with apprehension when any question of investment is broached and is apt to murmur, "I leave it all to you" This is explicable enough on the theory that her mind has been a blank on these subjects for centuries, but far from flattering to her intelligence if inherent difficulties be the test. The ability to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before approximates genius in the constructive type of modern financier, but that demanded of the successful custodian of property need not rise above the level of normal wisdom. This normal wisdom seems beyond feminine attainment largely because of the outlook which it presupposes. At a time when she was being grounded in needlework and household handiness her brother was already listening in the smoking room to the small talk of his elders concerning the rise and fall of securities. But it is no tax on the intellectual faculties to acquire a speaking acquaintance with the railroads and manufacturing companies of one's habitat. Any woman worth her salt who gave her mind to it ought to find the study and comparison of statistics which would enable her to discriminate between investments no more difficult than algebra. The good judgment, alias the normal wisdom, of the male trustee is derived from the analysis of reports, the weighing of probabilities, and the nosing out of inside information. From these he reads the signs of the times, and if he reads them correctly he prospers. But there is nothing in the vocation which should bid a woman quail unless it were that masculine freemasonry should combine to frustrate her when she tried to ascertain the truth in advance—an odious improbability.

"Man Hater" Weds.

From the Omaha News.

Stella Bedford Wilson, 27 years old, Omaha's only woman lawyer, and professed man hater, has abandoned her legal career and fallen before the wiles of Dan Cupid.

A few weeks ago, R. E. Evans, Omaha stone and marble contractor, secretly made her his bride and took her with him to Hastings, where they are spending their honeymoon.

Mrs. Evans has been a practicing attorney in Omaha for nearly two years and with offices in the Omaha National bank building, where she is said to have had a remunerative practice.

She received her education in the law by going to Creighton college at night, while she was employed as a clerk in the office of the clerk of the district court.

"Who Will Win This Battle?"

Much of your comfort depends upon knowing that your system will perform its functions properly.

Your kidneys are the filters of the body. If they become inactive and fail to eliminate the waste matter, they are apt to throw the whole mechanism of the body out of order, thus toxic poisons can accumulate in the system and be as deadly as snake venom.

Besides causing the minor ailments of rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago and backache, neglect of the kidneys is apt to develop into more serious diseases, such as diabetes or stone in the bladder.

Rid the body of toxic poisons—clean the bladder and kidneys and cure the twinges of rheumatism with An-u-ric (double strength). 60c a package.

Anuric was first discovered by Dr. Pierce, and has benefited thousands of sufferers as well as appeased and eliminated the ravages of the more serious kidney diseases. Now procurable at any good drug store, or send direct to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Inst., Buffalo, N.Y., for trial package. Enclose 10 cents.

If you have rheumatism or kidney trouble, why not let Dr. Pierce's Anuric (double strength) win the battle?

Sioux City, Iowa.—"For some time I have been having kidney trouble. My kidneys seemed to be congested and my back would ache and be so sore that I could scarcely stand my clothes bearing on it. When I stooped over I could hardly straighten up again, and my bladder bothered me—frequent excretion. Just about ten days ago I began taking the Anuric Tablets and my back has quit aching and this bladder weakness has left me. Anuric is the best kidney medicine I have ever used."—Mrs. Mary Du Barry, 1013 5th Street.

Island of Mindoro.

So prolific was the Island of Mindoro in the Philippines at one time in the production of rice that it was popularly called "the granary of the Philippines" Sugar, cotton, hemp, and other crops thrive on the island, when properly cultivated. Yet its economic conditions are extremely backward, and a large part of its population is in a constant state of poverty It has altogether about 39,000 inhabitants. Among these are 18,000 Tagalogs, 7,200 Mangyanes, 2,000 Visayans and of Ilocanos less than 1,000. Of the whole, over 7,000 are pronounced savage, a large proportion of the remainder are densely ignorant

FAULT-FINDING BAD HABIT

Is King of Indoor Sports But Causes Others Displeasure and Gains Critic Nothing.

Fault-finding is perhaps the king of indoor sports. Or should it be catalogued as the queen? It is one of the simplest of pleasures. Thew are millions of people who think they can display their superior taste or knowledge by finding fault.

The coffee is not right. My taste about coffee, therefore, is superior and more delicate than that of others. There is something lacking in the decorations or the furniture. My judgment, therefore, is somewhat superior to the other man's.

This habit of fault-finding is a most disagreeable one—one, too, that grows unless effort is made to overcome it, declares a writer in the Milwaukee Journal. It never appears to occur to fault-finders that they themselves may be lacking in taste or ability.

What is the need, anyway, of dampening the pleasures of others in their possessions or actions? One almost always can find something to commend. And if there is nothing whatever, one would be well to be gentle in criticism, or else say nothing. There are countless little things we may wish were different, but it is not good to keep pointing them out. Silence about trifling things this one does not like is a virtue.

Let us guard our tongues against useless fault-finding. Let us trim ourselves to the best model we can find and remember we are not responsible for the conduct or the works of the world at large. The world may be wrong sometimes But it may frequently be right when we think it wrong. And we ourselves have no claim to perfectness in judgment or taste.

Mr. Reuter Went Through a Terrible Siege of Kidney Trouble. Doan's Brought Back His Health.

"After an injury I was in terrible shape from kidney trouble," says D. Reuter, North St., West Chicago, Ill "I couldn't stoop because of the awful pains in my back and the steady, dull misery almost drove me frantic. I had to be helped out of bed mornings, the pains across my kidneys were so bad and nobody knows the agony I went through. I couldn't do anything and was almost helpless; it seemed I would never get well

Mr. Reuter

"The urine passed far too often and burned like scalding water. The passages were scanty and I had no control over them. At times everything in front of me grew dark and I couldn't see for several minutes. I perspired profusely and I was thirsty all the time. For two years I suffered, trying medicine after medicine without relief. I was just about discouraged and didn't think I would ever be able to work again.

"Hearing about Doan's Kidney Pills I used them and four boxes cured me. My kidneys became normal, my back got well and strong and all the other troubles disappeared."

RED CROSS NOTES

The meeting November 7th was well attended as usual. Visitors were Mrs. John Josten and Mrs. Wallace. Hulda Johnson met with us for the first time and has already started her knitting.

I think everyone found the new rooms very comfortable and the committee should have a great deal of praise for their appearance.

Wake up, Klemme! Get Busy! We have a Red Cross Society in our to n. It is not the special property of any individual or group of individuals, but if you are the American you should be it is YOUR society.

Klemme should have at least a hundred members. We now have forty-one

We expect to publish a list of new members next week. Have your name in the list. Come and give it to us at the meeting, Wednesday, November 21st. If you can't come hand it to any member of the Red Cross Society.

We do not ask anyone to neglect their home or church, but give us a small share of your time. If you can't do this at least give us your name—that helps. Every name may mean other names. Everyone has an influence—watch—see if your's is good or bad, whether your influence is for the good of your country or detrimental.

Then don't get the idea that Klemme's Red Cross is getting it's support financially from any place but Klemme, because it isn't. It's up to Klemme and community to support it's Red Cross and we are sure it will. When you are asked to help, don't say "The Red Cross is begging again," because it isn't—they are just giving every one an opportunity to do his duty. We are at home in comfort. It's little we do when we try to make the lot of our soldiers a little better. This is the duty of every man, woman and child.

We would like at least one member from every home in German and Ell townships.

Talks Like a Man.

The gray parrot of western Africa is credited with having a greater power of imitating the human voice than any bird of the species. It has long been a favorite and is the subject of many stories of greater or less credibility.

Constantine's Cross.

The cross was the emblem of a slave's death and a murderer's punishment and was naturally looked upon by the Jew with horror. After the celebrated vision of Constantine, that ruler ordered to be made a cross of gold and gems such as he had seen and the "tree of cursing and shame" sat upon scepters and was engraved and signed on the forehead of kings."

Sheriff James Ross of Garner was in Klemme Monday on official business. He was on his way to Britt where a hearing was to be held in regard to the men who were taken from the M & St. L. last week with a couple of suit cases full of "firewater" Jim had the goods in the car with him which was to be used as evidence against the men. It would have been a joke on Jim if someone would have tried to "pinch" him for carrying booze He said that while he was at Forest City the cop walked up to his car and looked at the suit cases, but didn't do anything. Jim was laughing under his breath and thought he would have a little fun if the cop was going to pinch him, but nothing stirring, and Jim left rather disappointed.

Work began Monday on the remodeling of the English Methodist church. The church will be enlarged by an addition of sixteen feet, raised and a large basement put in. The steeple will also be lowered and remodeled. The church was too small to accommodate the increased membership and with the new addition ample room will be had for the various classes.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their kind assistance in our recent bereavement of the death of our loving husband and father and for the many beautiful floral offerings; also those who took part in the singing at the services.

Mr. Burr Church was absent from school Thursday and Friday of last week.

Mr. Ernest Lewis was absent from school Friday afternoon of last week

No recesses were given last Friday, and the time gained in this way was given over to basket ball practice, school letting out at 3:30.

Miss Mable Starnes was absent from school Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Howard Terhufen was absent from school Friday afternoon of last week.

A surprise party was held at the home of Miss Geneva Schuldt last Friday evening. A number of her school mates went in a body, arriving about eight o'clock and spent the evening by participating in various games, after which dainty refreshments were served. The time was spent so pleasantly that a late hour arrived before they were aware of it. All report a good time.

Miss Octave Church returned to her school duties after an absence of several weeks.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH NOTES

This church exists for you and your children. You would not want to live in a community where there was no church. PROGRAM

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the English M. E. church will meet in regular session on Friday afternoon, November 30th, at the parsonage, when the following program will be rendered:

Devotional service led by Mrs. H. Bailey.

A brief sketch of the life of Livingstone—Mrs. Ed. Ell.

"The Land and the Kraal"—Mrs. J. Baumgartner.

Social Life of the Women of Africa—Mrs. H. Yahnke.

The Bulu—Mrs. Geo. Gruetzmacher.

Ladies who are not members are cordially invited to attend these missionary meetings. We are very proud of the work of last year. The full amount raised for missions last year was $53.35. This is exceedingly good for a small society. You need only to attend a few of these meetings to become interested in missions.

The electric light plant at Garner caught fire last Friday night destroying a part of the interior and the rear of the building. The fire is said to have started in the coal bin due to spontaneous combustion. Rapid work of the firemen saved the building from total destruction. The plant has been sufficiently repaired and is again on running schedule.

Oscar Larsen met with an accident Sunday noon when he attempted to get into Art McElmuray's car as he was driving down the street. "Scoop" missed the car as he jumped and the rear wheel hit his leg, dislocating his ankle and tearing the ligaments of the calf and ankle. It is a rather painful accident and he will perhaps be laid up for some time.

"To be quite candid," answered Pachmann, readily, "I am afraid to give it to you on board this boat. I chose this boat because I believed we should be safe here. But there are spies on board; one of our conferences has been overheard—perhaps both of them," and he told of the assault upon Schroeder. "Then again, we must not be seen too much together. I might be recognized, and you are already suspected of having caused the destruction of La Liberte."

"How can that be?" Vard demanded, in a tone which showed that he was genuinely startled.

For answer, Pachmann took from his vest pocket a paper, unfolded it and handed it to Vard. It was the wireless from Lepine.

"That was received last Thursday," he said. "I suppose you know who Lepine is. By great good fortune, I intercepted it, and sent an answer denying that you were on board. It was for that reason you were removed to the first class and your name kept off the passenger list. But how can he have suspected you?"

Vard shook his head slowly. He was a little pale, and the hand which held the message trembled.

"I cannot guess," he said.

"You have told no one?"

"Told!" flashed Vard. "Do you not see that unless my great plan succeeds that action will have been an infamous one? To kill 300 men in order to assure peace to the world that may be justified—that may even be heroic, but to kill them wantonly, to kill them and then to fail—that would drive me mad!" He looked at Pachmann, his eyes suddenly inflamed. "And let me tell you this," he added, in a voice of concentrated passion, "if I find that you have deceived me, if I find that you have betrayed me, Germany shall suffer a reprisal that will make you shudder! I swear it!"

Pachmann's eyes were also suffused. In that moment, he literally saw red.

"You threaten!" he cried hoarsely. "You dare to threaten!"

"I warn!" said Vard. "And you will do well to heed the warning! You are playing with fire—take care that it does not consume you!"

Pachmann conquered his emotion by a supreme effort.

"It is foolish to talk in that way," he said. "It is foolish to speak of deception and betrayal. There is no question of either. But we must move cautiously. We must evade spies. Even you can see that!"

"Here is my last word," said Vard, more calmly. "We shall reach New York on Tuesday. I will await your answer for 24 hours after we have landed. If I have not then received it, I shall consider myself free to act as I think best."

A gleam of triumph flashed in Pachmann's eyes.

"I accept your condition," he said, and with a little ironical bow, rose and left the cabin.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE EVENTS OF MONDAY.

Kasia did not see the prince again. That ingenuous young man had spent a most uncomfortable half hour with the doughty admiral, whose language had been both lucid and emphatic, and who had opened the discussion, and spiked the prince's guns at the very start, as it were, by producing the paper sealed with the imperial seal.

"I would call your attention especially to this clause," said Pachmann, and placed his finger upon the words, "all members of my family." "It was not placed there by accident, I assure you. You understand its meaning?"

The prince nodded sullenly, as he handed the paper back.

"Your father," Pachmann continued, replacing it in his pocket, "foresaw that some difficulty such as this might arise. As you know, his confidence in you is not great."

The prince flushed and opened his lips angrily; but closed them again without speaking.

Pachmann smiled unpleasantly.

"I can guess what you wish to say," he said. "You would remind me that you are a Hohenzollern, a prince of the blood, a scion of the house to which I, a petty member of the inferior nobility, owe allegiance. That I do not permit myself to forget. But in this affair, by virtue of this paper, I stand in place of your royal father. He would not hesitate to rebuke you, and neither shall I. What was it you were saying to Miss Vard?"

And the prince, after a moment's inward struggle, repeated the conversation, while Pachmann listened frowningly.

"You have been most indiscreet," he said severely, when the prince had finished. "How much harm you have done I cannot say but I must hasten to undo it. I do not understand you. You know how important this affair is—you are a good German!—and yet you go about talking in this fashion! It is enough to drive one mad! If your father learned of it, I fear he would think it necessary to punish you with great severity. I shall not report it—but on one condition: you must give me your word to discuss affairs of state with no one, to make no chance acquaintances, and to see this girl or her father only in my presence."

And so deeply grounded was the habit of obedience, so profound his respect even for his father's signature, that the prince promised. Besides, he had no wish to spend a year or more in some second rate fortress; and he resolved to watch himself most warily, until this annoying business was at an end and he was back again in Berlin.

So Kasia saw him no more. She had a little struggle with herself before she finally decided that it was her duty to outline the prince's confessions to her father, and she was deeply relieved when he waved them aside as of no importance.

"Every one knows," he said, "that Germany dreams of nothing but humiliating England; that is no secret—it has been the talk of Europe for 10 years past. But it is one of those dreams which never come true—or go by contraries!"

By noon of Monday, Pachmann had completed his scrutiny of the passengers, and sought an interview with the captain.

"I have discovered nothing," he said; "absolutely nothing. At one time, I thought that I had the man, but I caused his story to be investigated, and found that it was true. There remains only one thing to be done. At what hour shall we land?"

"That will depend upon the delay at quarantine. Two of our steerage passengers are ill. We may not be able to dock before evening."

Pachmann considered this for a moment.

"In the first place," he went on, at last, following out his thought, "you must secure for me two landing tickets—one for Vard and one for his daughter. The immigration officers must not see them. There must be no evidence that they ever reached New York."

Hausmann's face clouded.

"That is a very serious offense," he pointed out.

"We must take the risk.

"What will you do about their baggage?"

"I will have it claimed by some one from the consulate."

The captain hesitated yet a moment.

"I will secure the tickets," he agreed, finally. "A considerable outlay will be necessary."

"You will be reimbursed. Furthermore," Pachmann added, "I will myself explain to the emperor how greatly you have assisted us."

Hausmann bowed coldly.

"Is there anything else?" he asked.

"You have watched the wireless?"

"Yes."

"It must be watched even more closely. No message in cipher, nor any that is at all questionable, must be sent or delivered. If there are complaints afterwards, the failure can be explained as an oversight."

Again Hausmann bowed.

"And finally," said Pachmann, "I have here a message, which I would ask you to have sent at once."

It was in cipher and a long one, and it took half an hour to transmit, for the wireless man at the Cape Code station was required to repeat it for verification. Then it was hurried on by telegraph to New York, and finally delivered at the German consulate, where the chief of the German secret service, to whom it was addressed, read it with great care.

Miss Vard, meanwhile, was finding the hours long. The prince had furnished a slight divertissement the day before; but today there was no such relief in sight, and she found herself singularly restless. This was, in part, a reflection of her father's mood, for she had never known him so nervous and irritable. The lines in his face had deepened, his eyes were brighter than ever, and he waved her impatiently away whenever she ventured to address him. Plainly, a crisis was at hand, and, as she saw how her father was affected, she awaited it with foreboding.

She tried to read and gave it up, for she could not fix her attention on the page; she sat for a long time looking at the sea, and then turned her eyes away, for its restlessness increased her own; she went for a walk about the deck, but it seemed to her in every pair of eyes turned upon her there was suspicion and aversion. How glad she was that the voyage was almost ended! It had started happily enough, and then, quite suddenly, it had become wearisome and hateful.

It was inevitable that, at this point, her thoughts should fly to Dan. What a nice boy he was! She would see him tomorrow night—she had promised him that! And before that? Would it be too undignified for her to steal up again to that bench on the after boat deck—would it—would it precipitate matters? She did not want to do that and yet * * *

"Good afternoon," said a voice, and some one fell into step beside her, and she looked up and saw that it was Dan. For an instant, she fancied it was only the visualization of her own thoughts; then she winked the mists away.

"This is nice of you," she said. "I was just wishing for—some one. I was dreadfully bored."

"You were a thousand miles away. I passed you twice and you didn't even see me. If it hadn't been for my newspaper training, I'd have made off to my den."

"I'm very glad you didn't. I really wanted to talk to you."

"Suppose we go up to the boat deck," said Dan, "where you —"

He stopped.

"Where I what?"

Dan led the way up the ladder without replying; but a gleam of understanding penetrated Miss Vard's mind when she saw him go straight to the bench where she and the prince had sat.

"It was this way," Dan explained, sitting down beside her. "I happened to be staring down at the forward promenade, yesterday afternoon, when I saw you walking with a tall young fellow, who seemed exceedingly interested in you. Naturally, I was a little curious, as he happened to be a second class passenger like myself—"

"Second class!" broke in Kasia, and stopped herself.

"Did you think him a millionaire?" queried Dan, a little bitterly.

"No," answered Kasia, quietly; "I thought him just what he is — an ingenuous young German not very brilliant, perhaps, but clean and honest. I passed a very pleasant half hour with him."

Dan's face was a little pale, but he looked at her manfully and squared his shoulders.

"I deserved that!" he said. "Thank you, Miss Vard. But it was very lonely, last night!"

Kasia's look softened.

"Yes," she agreed; "it was."

"You felt it, too?" asked Dan, his face lighting up again.

"Certainly I felt it. I haven't dared make any friends among the first class passengers, and a person can't read all the time! One likes to talk occasionally, no matter with whom."

"Why not slip over to second class tonight," Dan suggested, "and sit on the bench. The moon is very beautiful."

But Kasia shook her head, smiling.

"I shall have to admire it alone," she said. "We must not be seen so much together—it is not wise for us to sit here. Suppose some one, seeing us together, should take it into his mind to search your baggage, and should find that little package——"

"He wouldn't find it," Dan broke in. "During the day, I carry it in my pocket. At night, I sleep with it under my pillow."

Kasia gave him a quick glance.

"That is splendid!" she said, quickly. "And you don't even wish to know what it is?"

"Not unless you wish to tell me. There is one danger, though. If the customs inspector should happen to run across it, he will want to know what it is."

"Tell him it is an electrical device."

"And if he opens it?"

"That will do no harm. All he will find is a small metal box, filled with tiny wires coiled about each other."

Dan breathed more freely.

"That simplifies things," he said. "From what you said when you gave it to me, I was afraid I might have to knock him down, snatch the package, and make a break for it."

"No," and Kasia smiled. "It would appear of value only to some one who knew what it was. The customs inspector doesn't count."

"And tomorrow evening, say at 8 o'clock, I shall bring it up to you."

"Very well. I shall expect you. And now you must go."

Dan rose obediently.

"It will be a long 24 hours," he said. "But I feel more cheerful than I did. By the way," he added, turning back, "there's one thing I forgot to tell you. If that other young fellow shows up again you needn't be afraid to talk to him. Chevrial says he's the only one on the ship you are safe to talk freely with!"

"Chevrial!" she repeated, staring; "Chevrial said that!"

"Yes," and Dan laughed. "He seems to be the wise guy, all right!" and without suspecting her emotion, he turned and left her. But for a long time Kasia sat there, unmoving, trying to understand.

Dan's evening was not so lonely as he had expected, for, as he sat on the bench on the boat deck, staring out across the water and thinking of the morrow, Chevrial joined him.

"I do not intrude?" the Frenchman asked.

"Not at all. Sit down, won't you?"

Chevrial sat down, and for some moments there was silence.

"Our voyage nears an end, M. Webster," Chevrial said at last. "Tomorrow you will be home again. Perhaps I may see you in New York."

"Where will you stay?"

"I have some friends in the wine trade with whom I usually stay. The little money I pay them is welcome to them, and I am more comfortable than at an hotel. I do not know their exact address—they have moved since I was last here; but they are to meet me at the pier."

"Whenever you have a leisure evening," said Dan, "call up the Record office and ask for me, and we will have dinner together."

"Thank you. I shall remember. And I should like you to meet my friends. I do not know if you are a connoisseur of wine, but if you are, they possess a few bottles of a vintage that will delight you."

"I'm far from being a connoisseur," Dan laughed; "but I accept the invitation with thanks."

Chevrial's face was bright.

"And when next you come to Paris," he added, "I hope you will let me know. There is my card. A letter to that address will always reach me—we have no telephone, alas! There are some things I should delight to show you — things which the average visitor does not see."

"You are very kind," said Dan, taking the card; "and I shall not forget; though I don't expect to get abroad again very soon. You see, I have to collect a reserve fund, first; and the cost of living is high!"

"Whenever it is; and the more soon, the better I shall be pleased!"

"How long will you be in New York?"

"A week—10 days, perhaps. Then I go to Boston, and to Montreal and Quebec, and thence home again. I am glad I shall not have to use a German boat. I do not like German boats—nor anything German, for the matter of that! Which reminds me of a most peculiar circumstance. You may have wondered at my remark with reference to that young man who was strolling with Miss Vard?"

"That she could talk to him without fear? Yes, I have wondered just what you meant by it."

Efforts are being made to resume the construction of branch railway lines in the Lonets basin of southern Russia, where, during the last years before the war, the branch and connecting lines annually completed averaged 25. The development of the mining industry in the basin was always closely dependent upon the railroads. In the present war transportation of coal in carts became disorganized and costs of transport increased 700 per cent.

TROOPS AT SO MUCH A MAN

Soldiers Furnished British Government by British States at Beginning of Revolutionary War.

At the beginning of the Revolutionary war the British government made treaties with several of the German states by which they were to furnish troops at so much a man to assist in subjugating the Americans. Applications for assistance made to Russia and Holland were rejected, but several of the German states responded favorably. There was no united Germany or imperial government, no kaiser with autocratic power, but each independent state had a separate government. An English historian says:

"Finding it difficult or impossible to obtain the necessary recruits at home, and that the existing English and Irish regiments embarked with such reluctance that it was necessary to keep a guard upon the transports to keep them from deserting by wholesale, the ministry applied to Russia, the states-general (Holland), and finally to several of the German states for mercenaries. The infamy of filling up the British armament was reserved for the princes of three or four petty German states." Contracts were made with the rulers of seven German states under which an aggregate of thirty thousand troops were furnished at so much a head, cash down, and an annual sum to the rulers of the different states furnishing them.

"The subsidies," says the English historian, "were to be continued for one full year at least after the war ended and the troops had returned to their homes." The troops thus hired out by German rulers to fight against Americans were not raised easily. The American historian Bancroft says:

"The whole number of men furnished in the war by Brunswick was equal to one-twenty-seventh part of its total population; by the landgrave of Hesse, to one out of every twenty of his subjects, or one in four of the able-bodied men, a proportionate conscription in 1776 would have shipped to America from England and Wales alone an army of more than 400,000 men. Soldiers were impressed from the plow, the workshop, the highway; no man was safe from the inferior agents of the princes, who kidnaped without scruple."

And the more you are willing to do for your friends the less time you will have to do things for yourself.

Hypochondria was the topic that was being discussed at a social gathering, says the Philadelphia Press, when Senator William A. Smith of Michigan called the following story:

A woman who was perfectly well but imagined she had at least a dozen different diseases called one day to consult an eminent specialist.

"I think I understand your case thoroughly, madam," said the doctor after the patient began to tell the story of her life. "Just sit quite still a moment and let me look at you."

The patient complied and sat quietly studying her intently for a little while the physician glanced at his watch.

"There is nothing the matter with you, madam," finally said the doctor. "You haven't the slightest indication of fever, and your heart beat is perfectly normal."

"Why, how do you know, doctor?" exclaimed the patient in surprise. "You didn't take my pulse."

"It wasn't necessary, madam," smiled the specialist. "I counted the vibrations of the ostrich feather in your hat."

Easy to Rid Home of Rats and Mice

There is no need of suffering from depredations of rats and mice now. Stearns' Paste is readily obtainable at nearly every store. A small box of this effective exterminator costs only 25 cents and is usually sufficient to completely rid the house, store or barn of rats and mice. The U. S. Government has bought thousands of pounds of Stearns' Paste for use in cities where rats and mice are plentiful. The Paste is also efficient in destroying cockroaches and waterbugs. Adv.

ABOUT THE BIRD OF THANKSGIVING

The bronze turkey that variety which today holds the place of honor in the North American group of turkeys, is outdone by none when it comes to beauty or size. Black, beautifully shaded with a rich bronze, the breast plumage being dark bronze illuminated with a lustrous finish of coppery gold, gives full warrant for the name by which this bird is known.

The full grown, healthy bird is a beautiful picture of bronze, black, copper and gold and sometimes weighs 40 or more pounds. Other varieties known in the barn yard and even recognized among dealers as having distinctive markings are in reality only highly developed fowls with preserved peculiarities. Under this classification comes the white turkey.

In the United States there are six standard varieties recognized and grown. These are the bronze, Narragansett, buff, slate, white and black. The chief differences are in size and color of plumage.

The bronze and Narragansett are the largest, the buff and slate medium, while the white and black are the smallest. Within late years, however, the white variety has reached such a point of popularity that it has increased in size until with some dealers it occupies third place.

Whatever the turkey may have missed through failing to secure the place of honor suggested for it by Benjamin Franklin—as the national bird—it has nevertheless found a place in the regard of the American people which is held by no other fowl.

Time was when a turkey, or as much as could be carried might be had almost for the asking. Then came a period when 50 cents would buy a plump young fowl. Even so short a time as 10 years ago turkeys could be purchased for from 8 to 20 cents a pound, dressed.

Some interesting figures were at one time compiled by the department of agriculture in connection with the turkey. In 1896 the census showed the turkey population in the United States to be 12,000,000. Four years later the department found there were but 6,500,000. Such a discrepancy needed investigation. It was made, and the answer was soon forthcoming.

In the year 1896 the breeders had generally counted their eggs before they were hatched, and the consequent total included all poults saved in the fall and birds expected as well as the grown turkeys. With the latter figure only birds of 3 months or more were included. That figure therefore was a true estimate of the average of turkey supply at that time while to-day the supply has increased with the growing demand each year.

But even were the [illegible] come with the [illegible] ply is not [illegible] enough for [illegible] try to include [illegible] giving features. [illegible] which Gray [illegible] He wrote, [illegible] lord, the [illegible] board.

Origin of Thanksgiving

In colonial days it was customarily appoint days of festival, feasting, prayer or thanksgiving when public events seemed to warrant this recognition. In 1780 Washington ordered a day of thanksgiving for the adoption of the Federal Constitution. Subsequently various days in November were recommended by presidents and governors until, in 1863, the regular observance of a national Thanksgiving day was instituted through a proclamation of President Lincoln. The presidents proclamation does not make it a national holiday. It applies only to the District of Columbia and the territories. It is the governors proclamations that affect the states. The day is observed in all states but in some it is not a statutory holiday. Thursday was originally selected by the Puritans probably because being near the middle of the week it gave opportunity for the scattered members of the family to come together and to return without desecrating the Sabbath by travel. November was selected as the month when the fall harvests were all gathered. Other countries have Thanksgiving days for special occasions, such as success in battle or the deliverance of the people from a national calamity, but the fixed annual Thanksgiving day is a custom belonging to America alone.

"Harvest Home" and Thanksgiving.

The harvest home of the Saxons and Celts, the cerealia of the Romans, the Israelitish feast of tabernacles and for all that we know to the contrary, the first harvest celebration of preadamite man were the actual precursors of our Thanksgiving. Even among the American Indians there was held an autumnal festival which might not unjustly claim precedence as the true aboriginal Thanksgiving of the western world. Modern observances of Thanksgiving with their sporting features are denounced in certain quarters as sadly at variance from the ideas of the Plymouth colonists during their first golden autumn on the coast of Cape Cod bay. Incidentally are not altogether wanting, however, that the manner of celebrating has changed in nonessentials only. So there is a whole week devoted to Thanksgiving as in the days of Governor Bradford. A single day suffices.

Not Essentially American.

Our American Thanksgiving is usually considered our one native contribution to the holidays of religious and observance [illegible] the New England fathers. Perhaps the fathers themselves liked to think of it [illegible] originative way and so wished it perpetuated—as something that had hovered on the bleak rock of their personal struggle it was to be peculiarly their day peculiarly a heroic New England day an American day. So in a sense it is, so in a sense it is not. Essentially our American Thanksgiving is least American of our holidays for the simple reason that it is too human to be merely American. There were no most human things left for the New England fathers to originate. They are immemorially older than this country. There are no original ways of expressing gratitude. All the pathways of thanksgiving are very old paths.—James Lane Allen in Munsey's magazine.

Local Thanksgiving Days.

The practice of having local Thanksgiving days has prevailed to some extent in America. On October 15, 1814, the mayor of Baltimore upon the suggestion of the city pastors, appointed the following Thursday "to be observed as a day of thanksgiving to the Adorable Disposer of all human events on account of our recent deliverance from the British fleet and army." That was for the escape of Baltimore after the attack on Washington in 1814. A few months later the newspapers stated that both houses of the Ohio legislature on Wednesday, the 8th day of February, pursuant to a resolution previously adopted, moved in procession to the Presbyterian meeting house in Chillicothe and rendered public thanks to Almighty God for granting such brilliant success to our arms at New Orleans in the recent victories obtained by General Jackson and his compatriots." Chillicothe at that time was the capital of Ohio.

> Thanksgiving is an occasion of national interest, yet it possesses a significance that is entirely individual. With many of us things have gone well this year. The table is laden with plenty. There is meat in the larder and there is grain in the store house.

THE NATION'S THANKSGIVING

The people of the United States celebrate Thanksgiving day with more and more accord every year. Indeed, one might say they have more and more reason. The fathers of New England, hemmed in between a wilderness and the sea, watched their doubtful crops in anxious memories of other years of famine. When they found that once more there was fish enough and pork enough and corn and beans and pumpkins and squashes and turnips enough to carry them through the winter they met to thank God, knowing full well how many hazards they had passed through, for those days as compared with today were days of pinching poverty. The New England historian, Dr. Palfrey, says with a certain dryness, which shows probably some personal preferences, "Baked beans point to the time when it was desirable to make the most of the commonest vegetable by flavoring it with the flesh of the commonest animal."

All this is happily changed. For the world indeed the old peril of famine is well nigh forgotten. And why? The American of today gives thanks that famine is well nigh impossible.

First of all he remembers that he is no longer dependent on the crops of a few hundred square miles or the fishing voyage of a single summer. Thanks to the providence of God as it has worked in history and to the work of brave men who believed they were children of God, the petty colonies which were thus described are now one nation. Of that nation the meanest citizen, the most foolish, the weakest and the poorest has every right and privilege before the law which belongs to the strongest, the richest and the wisest though he were born in the purple of luxury. To be wiser or son of the poorest citizen of that nation there will come his daily bread in answer to his daily prayer though it come from the milling of California wheat or be the salmon caught at the falls of the Spokane, without let or hindrance from any power on earth. If there is food in plenty in one region as to be full of an avalanche down a mountain it will certainly seek its level in another region. And as the American by and by will owe to [illegible] people [illegible] and to the brave men who [illegible] country one and every [illegible]

It is [illegible] the blindness of our [illegible] such a simple business as [illegible] and came to [illegible] is a matter of [illegible] Here is mood, a careless [illegible] in which Americans often [illegible] as if because they are Americans they have everything without so much as asking for it. Fourth of July orators and street corner braggarts [illegible] of the natural products of [illegible] almost in the tone of the [illegible] were expect to pick up a cobblestone upon the sidewalk. One is tempted to ask such braggarts why the country did not produce such wealth 100 years ago or 200 years ago. Why was Dakota then a desert? Why were [illegible] of Alabama only a trading place for a few Indians and creek Indians. Why did they not forge the iron under their feet? Why did not the Iroquois in western New York pick from their trees the peaches and the pears such as have been growing there this fall?

The answer is this. All the wealth of America comes to her from the work of her men and women. The victory which yields it is their victory. It is the victory of spirit conquering matter. It comes in the daily miracle of daily life where children of God led by God, taught by God, alive in his life and fellow workmen with him carry out his designs and subdue the earth. It is neither sensible nor grateful to speak of teeming granaries, of increasing trade, of new mines of oil, of iron or of gas as if these things were wealth in themselves. They are only wealth when man strikes the rock and its waters flow. And this man must be not the savage man who cares only for his own personal appetite. It must be man the child of God seeking a future better than today, determined to bring in a nobler age than that which he lives in.

After the Dinner.

The after dinner amusements can be of the sportive kind suitable to the day. There might be potato races, each potato being carried on a spoon, guessing the number and weight of potatoes contained in a heavy canvas bag or seeing who could grab up the greatest number of nuts from a barrel in a given period on the end of a hatpin and carry [illegible] basket at the other end of [illegible]

> It is just and proper that all people should consider the source from whence our happiness has come and set apart a day on which to return thanks unto God for the goodness with which our country has been blessed.

On a Raft on the Volga.

Maxim Gorky

The day was clear and bright and young as in spring. The cold, clear sky stretched itself majestically over the turbid waters of the gigantically wide, overflowing river, which was as calm as the sky and as vast as the sea. The distant mountainous shore was tenderly bathed in bluish mist. Through it, there, on the mountain tops, the crosses of churches were flashing like big stars. The river was animated at the mountainous shore. steamers were going hither and thither, and their noise came in deep moans toward the rafts and into the meadows, where the calm flow of the waves filled the air with soft and faint sounds. Gigantic barges stretched themselves one after another against the current, like huge pigs, tearing asunder the smooth expanse of the river. Black smoke came in ponderous puffs from the chimneys of the steamers, slowly melting into the fresh air, which was full of bright sunshine. At times a whistle resounded,—it was like the roar of some huge, enraged animal, embittered by toil. And on the meadows near the rafts, all was calm and silent. Solitary trees, that had been drowned by the flood, were now already covered with light green spangles of foliage. Covering their roots and reflecting their tops, the water gave them the appearance of globes, and it seemed as though the slightest breeze would send them floating, fantastically beautiful, down the mirror-like bosom of the river.

Method in His Madness.

A story brought from Camp Funston, says the Kansas City Star: A young draft soldier paced the parade ground alone. Stooping suddenly he picked up a small block of wood, studied it a moment, and cast it aside with the remark: "That ain't it." Walking farther, he stooped and brought up a scrap of paper, scanned it, and threw it away, again saying: "That ain't it." A third pause a minute later brought his attention to a cigarette stub, but closer scrutiny brought the same rejection, "That ain't it."

His captain stood within hearing, watching the draft soldier closely. It was apparent the young man's mentality was wavering. The guard was called, and the patient was sent to the hospital. The next day the captain went to the hospital with the patient's discharge papers. On their delivery the sufferer held the papers up to the light, examined them closely, and then announced:

"That's it."

Cantonment Road Building.

A record-breaking piece of road-building recently was completed in connection with the army cantonment at Louisville, says an exchange, which continues:

"This is one of the few military establishments that have built permanent roads. In 63 working days the contractor completed 63,360 square yards of Trinidad asphaltic concrete highway laid on a concrete base, or about six miles of road 18 feet wide. A mile of the road was over a four-foot fill, and immediately upon its completion a traffic count showed that 4,000 vehicles passed over it within the first hour. Most of these vehicles were motor trucks and wagons carrying loads of from one to five tons. The record . . . is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that it was necessary to haul and crush all the stone used in the work."

Nashua, N. H.—"I am nineteen years old and every month for two years I had such pains that I would often faint and have to leave school. I had such pain I did not know what to do with myself and tried so many remedies that were of no use. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers and decided to try it, and that is how I found relief from pain and feel so much better than I used to. When I hear of any girl suffering as I did I tell them how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me."—DELINA MARTIN, 29 Bowers Street, Nashua, N. H.

Phrase Drawn From Bible.

The expression, "He who runs may read," does not occur in the Bible in that form, but is drawn from the Bible. Habakkuk chapter II, verse 2, reads: "And the Lord answered me and said: Write the vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it."

Ginger.

Ginger was well known in England even before the Norman conquest, being often referred to in the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts of the eleventh century. It was very common in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, ranking next in value to pepper.

We received the following letter from the County Recorder:

Garner, Iowa, Nov. 20th, 1917
Editor Klemme Times,

Dear Sir:—This office is keeping a "War Record," that is a list of both the enlisted and drafted men, giving their Family History, Enlistment and Service, etc.

As this work is optional with the Recorder and there are no fees connected with it, we are asking each county paper to make mention of the fact.

We will have to depend on the relatives to send us part of the information regarding these men, and will send a blank (like the enclosed) to each nearest relative, if they will apply for same.

Hoping you will see fit to mention this work in your next issue, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
Jennie Hammill,
Recorder of Hancock County

There'll be some happy surprises like this in a good many homes on Thanksgiving Day.

¶IT'S when you have big things to do that you are most deeply thankful for the power and courage that helps you to attain your ends.

¶Our Country has a big work to perform, and next Thursday we ought to be thaukful that we have the power, courage, and unity of purpose to make this world--in President Wilson's undying words--Safe for Democracy.

¶Mothers and fathers who have sons in the army or navy, or daughter in the Red Cross service, should be proud and thankful that they can do much to our great cause; the nation is proud to have such manhood and womanhood.

Those who bought Liberty Bonds are thankful that the opportunity has been given them to serve.

Then there's business. Men can serve by selling good, dependable merchandise and by giving good values; that's what we're doing.

When all is said and done, this country has never had more to be thankful for--for this is a year when we can appreciate our blessings in greater measure than ever before.

THE KLEMME TIMES

KLEMME, IOWA

A diamond drill hole in Sussex county, New Jersey, 4,920 feet deep, has recently been completed A 2-inch diameter core was removed to a depth of 1,600 feet, beyond which tools removing a 1⅝-inch core were used to the completion of the hole. When the depth of 4,900 feet was reached, the long line of rods required for drilling weighed 13 tons, and it took eight hours' steady work for hoisting them out, replacing them and resuming drilling. It is said that the hole showed no deviation from the perpendicular. It required 20 months to complete the hole which is 1,700 feet deeper than the deepest previous hole of which there is any record in North America Only three or four diamond drill holes have been put down in this country, it is said, exceeding 3,000 feet in depth.

The reclamation service in Washington has succeeded in restoring to cultivation about 800,000 acres of land and 20,000 farms, principally in the west. In New England, it is believed, 150,000 acres of land could be reclaimed In the east there is often the difficulty of too much water, in the west too little, methods of treatment therefore differ. The World's Work says that a system of water control would bring under cultivation 10,000 acres of the finest arable country along the Concord and Sudbury rivers, while the county of Plymouth, according to a survey made by the federal department of agriculture, contains 22,000 acres which are now useless swamp, but which under proper control would yield a large income to market gardeners

The fur-bearing animals of the Pacific coast are estimated to bring a return of $1,000,000 each year. This is interest at 5 per cent on $20,000,000. It is worth while to protect this invested capital and to increase it if possible. It is on this account that at the last session of the California legislature a law was passed protecting California's share of this vast amount during the time of the year that the furs are of no value and establishing other restrictions that will aid in conserving the fur industry

Temporary repairs on buildings in certain sections of the liberated area of France sufficient to enable refugees to remain in their homes through the winter have been undertaken by the bureau of reconstruction and relief of the American Red Cross Work was recently begun at Croix, near Nesle and it is hoped to complete the task in that village, Molinaux and Matigny within one month. The bureau is also preparing plans for relief work in other villages.

Efforts are being made to resume the construction of branch railway lines in the Lonets basin of southern Russia, where, during the last years before the war, the branch and connecting lines annually completed averaged 25 The development of the mining industry in the basin was always closely dependent upon the railroads In the present war transportation of coal in carts became disorganized and costs of transport increased 700 per cent

The British race horse nomenclature is peculiarly sensitive to current events. Horses are named largely after events or people who are in the public eye at the moment The war has had a marked effect in this respect The racing at Newmarket this week for example, was featured by horses bearing such war names as Armageddon, Verdun, Bapaume Jutland, Grand Fleet, Home Service, Entente Cordiale, Big Push and Dawn of Peace.

The value of the public libraries of Paris has been demonstrated by the general use which has been made of them since the outbreak of the war These institutions have been more availed of than ever, and the taste for books seems to have grown and improved, for the greatest demand is for works of a historical character and for books on special scientific subjects.

Palestine has always been renowned for its vines and grapes, the climate, soils and other conditions being much the same as ours. Numbers viii, 23, refers to bunches of grapes which required two men to carry them, and in Psalm 80 David speaks of a vine figuratively that covered the hill and had boughs like the goodly cedars.

A Pennsylvania coal company reached all the way to the trenches in France to get a witness in a compensation case. Dr. James Thomas, who went with the Canadian forces to the front nearly a year ago, treated Dominic Ambrosia, an Oneida laborer, whose widow claims compensation.

From the beginning of the revolutionary war until after the adoption of the constitution the United States had no permanent capital. Congress had no fixed place of meeting, but changed from place to place, as safety or convenience required. It met successively at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Lancaster, York, Princeton, Annapolis, Trenton and New York.

When Burley Peterman, of Findlay, Ohio, raised his launch, which had been sunk in the Blanchard river, in order to close up several seams, he found that the boat had served as a seine, as there were several bushels of fish in it.

WILL REOPEN FEWER CASES DRAFTED MEN

Provost Marshal General Would Reduce Number Seeking to Avoid Service.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 16.—The provost marshal general has sent orders to the governor of Iowa, which will put an end to the rush of men, certified to the national army, to have their cases reopened by district and local boards, and thus escape service.

There has been an epidemic of such cases. Some of them come from men not yet sent to Camp Dodge, some come from relatives of men in the service, and some from the soldiers at Camp Dodge. So seriously was the situation interfering with raising an army that not only will no new cases be reopened, but those now reopened will be declared closed and the present status of the men adhered to.

Where men are now in the service and think they are improperly drafted they will take up their case with their company commander, and the commanding general can if he sees fit discharge them under the provisions of article 139 of the army regulations. Local and district boards will have no more jurisdiction over them.

In the cases of men, certified for service, but not yet sent to camp, the adjutant general has power to order local boards to reopen cases, provided the man makes application and proper showing within seven days after receiving notice of the original decision by his local and district board. The time limit has expired in practically all cases in Iowa, which will mean that practically no more cases will be reopened. District and local boards are prohibited from reopening cases unless ordered to do so by the adjutant general.

For the past month the state house has been thronged with relatives of Camp Dodge soldiers, their lawyers and backers and even soldiers themselves, all seeking exemptions, through the reopening of cases. The new order from the provost marshal general will put a stop to this and soldiers at Camp Dodge, unless they can convince their commanding officers that they should be discharged, will have to settle down to military training so that they will be ready to do their part in whipping Germany.

WORKED BAD CHECKS TO FULLEST EXTENT

Estherville, Ia., Nov. 17.—A man by the name of Pryor pulled off bogus check deal here. He had been working for a drayage firm all summer. About 6 o'clock that night he called on a number of merchants, bought small articles and gave checks ranging from $25 to $50 bearing the forged signature of the firm he had been working for. The merchants were "easy" thinking the checks represented his weekly wage He deliberately called on clothing, drug, jewelry and other firms and worked until 9 p. m. and then took the through stock train out of the city His crooked work yielded him something over $500 and the fraud was not detected until the bank clearing Monday when the checks showed up No trace of the fellow can be found

UTAH TROOPS FINALLY REACH CAMP DODGE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 17.—The two final sections bearing the Forty-second United States infantry regiment of the regular army, scheduled to spend the winter at Camp Dodge, arrived late yesterday from Fort Douglas, Utah. Two members of the regiment were killed and several injured in a rear end collision between the last two sections in Colorado Monday.

Sixty members of the regiment have been taken to the base hospital for treatment. Of these 25 have tonsilitis, two scarlet fever, two mumps and the remainder minor ailments.

ASSERTED HE WOULD FIGHT FOR GERMANY

Holstein, Ia., Nov. 17.—Herman Fander, a farm hand employed on the William Beyer farm, five miles southeast of this place, was arrested by Sheriff McLeod, of Ida Grove, under instructions from the United States marshal. The young man had been asked for a donation to the Y. M. C. A. fund and proceeded to tell the solicitors his feelings about the matter, which were to the effect that he wanted to fight with Germany against the United States and would do so when an opportunity afforded. Fander is not a citizen of this country and will be treated as a German prisoner.

MOTORCYCLIST DIES FROM HIS INJURIES

George, Ia, Nov 17.—Fred Brown, of near Rock Rapids, who was fatally injured when his motorcycle ran into another motorcycle driven by Earl Hockstedler, of near Edna, died at a hospital in Sioux Falls, Wednesday afternoon He will be buried at Rock Rapids. The young man had his left leg fractured in two places and sustained internal injuries and injuries to his brain Hockstedler was badly bruised. Both motorcycles were running without lights.

BUENA VISTA COUNTY WILL RAISE ITS QUOTA

Storm Lake, Ia., Nov. 17—Buena Vista county will raise more than its apportionment for the Y. M. C. A. fund. At a meeting held in Marathon $1,200 was subscribed, An interesting feature was the donation of an acre of corn. Volunteers were asked for and two youths declared their willingness to husk the golden ears. Newell is the banner town of the county and raised $2,500 at one meeting, at which O. H. O'Connor, who spent 52 months in the trenches, spoke. The total amount subscribed is $8,000 to date.

THROW DWIGGINS INTO BANKRUPTCY IS PLAN

New York, Nov. 17.—An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed in the federal court here today against Elmer Dwiggins, promoter of the "United States Government Liberty Loan club," through which, it is charged, thousands of dollars were collected from small investors on the $1 a week plan for the second government war loan. Dwiggins was arrested yesterday at Montgomery, Ala., on charges of misuse of the mails. He is a Des Moines, Ia., man

STORM LAKE—Two friends, Charles Natross, of Storm Lake, and Francis Stringer a student at the Chicago university, wanted to go to war, but could not owing to physical inability. They proved their patriotism when both entered a hospital for a surgical operation to make them fit to link up with Uncle Sam's army across the seas.

MARCUS—The Catholic women of Marcus have organized to aid the Knights of Columbus in their war camp work. The following officers were chosen: Mrs. M. F. Joynt, chairman; Mrs. Henry Niemann, secretary; Miss Nina Londergan, treasurer. One hundred women of the parish have enrolled to help the movement.

IOWAN WAS NOT TAKEN PRISONER BY GERMANS

Dewey Kern Found to Be Safe With His Command on French Front.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 17.—Dewey D. Kern, of Collins, Ia., was not captured by the Germans in a raid on the American forces in France, according to a message received by his stepfather this morning from the adjutant general's office at Washington. He is safe with his regiment, says the dispatch, which is as follows:

"Dewey D. Kern not missing, as first reported. Safe with regiment.

"Adjutant General McCain."

IOWANS IN WASHINGTON ON NATIONAL MATTERS

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Homer Miller, of Des Moines, state representative of the treasury department to float the issue of war savings certificates, is here conferring with Secretary McAdoo, along with other state representatives, on methods of floating the issue.

"There will be no difficulty in handling the Iowa part of the issue," said Mr. Miller.

National Committeeman Wilbur Marsh, of Waterloo, is here on postmaster and state council of defense matters.

J. E. Deems, state food administrator, is among the state administrators conferring on plans this week with Hoover IOWA

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS ANXIOUS TO ENLIST

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov. 17.—Five high school boys appeared together at the local recruiting station here and enlisted in the army, went to Omaha and passed the physical examination and were about ready to leave for the Pacific coast, where they were to enter the coast artillery, when three of the lads were told because of their age they would have to get the consent of their parents. This led to explanations and the five were turned back to their studies.

The boys, Ernest Curtis, Paul Hower, Rich Morrison, Thomas Smith and Fred Johnson are complimented on their patriotism and their parents have nearly all agreed to let them go later.

SOLDIERS ARE URGED NOT TO WASTE FOOD

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 17.—Drastic measures to prevent food waste in the Eighty-eighth division of the national army at Camp Dodge have been taken in a memorandum issued at division headquarters today. Commanders are ordered to appoint an officer to inspect each meal served, and if a soldier takes more food than he can eat this food will be set aside and served to him for his next meal. No more food will be issued to such soldier until he has eaten that left over.

JAILED AS RESULT OF — HIS PRO-GERMAN TALK

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 17.—The first arrest of a German sympathizer here has been made by Sheriff McLeod He took Herman Sander, a farm hand residing in Logan township, into custody. Sander had been approached by solicitors for the Y M C A. fund and became abusive and made the assertion that he wished he was back in Germany so that he could help lick the Yankees. Sander has taken out his citizenship papers, and was included in the draft, his number being 495 and he would have been taken in the next call. He is being held in the county jail pending the arrival of a United States marshal.

CRAWFORD COUNTY WELL ORGANIZED FOR WORK

Denison, Ia., Nov. 17.—The drive for Y. M. C. A. funds in Crawford county has begun. The managers at Denison invited leading men from all parts of the county to banquet at the McKim hall. At that time a stirring address was made by ex-Senator Charles G. Saunders, of Council Bluffs, and committees made for each of the 20 townships to solicit and direct the campaign. Thus far the reports have been good and the quota of the county will be more than made up. On Friday the Crawford county boys in camp at Des Moines will be home and they will make personal solicitation for help among their friends.

WOMAN KILLED WHEN STRUCK BY SPEEDING AUTO

Dubuque, Ia., Nov. 17.—Mrs V. E. Wilson, wife of a local taxi driver, was instantly killed late last night when she was struck by an auto owned and driven by W A. Trexler, son of Adolph Trexler, local millionaire, as she was crossing the street on the outskirts of the city.

MINERS HURL DEFI AT GARFIELD IN VOTE

Kansas City, Mo., Nov 15.—Delegates representing the coal miners of Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas and Arkansas, in convention here, voted to reject the "automatic penalty clause" insisted on by H A. Garfield, federal fuel administrator, as a part of their working agreement.

The clause provides for the fining of operators or miners in the event of an unnecessary shutdown.

CUTS OFF PRICE INCREASE.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 15.—Without the penalty clause to guard against strikes or lockouts the southwestern wage agreement will not be acceptable to the fuel administration and the increase in coal prices recently authorized by the president will not apply to mines in that section.

ADAMS EXPRESS DIVIDEND.

New York, Nov. 15.—The Adams Express company today declared a dividend of $1 a share from accumulated surplus, payable December 1. This compares with a dividend of $1.25 declared three months ago.

PRO-GERMAN TEACHER IS WITHOUT A POSITION

Tyndall, S. D., Nov. 15.—Miss Stearn, assistant principal or the schools here, was notified this week by the school board that her contract has been canceled and that her services are no longer required. This action was taken by the board because of the teacher's alleged pro-German sympathies. She is said to have talked against the Red Cross and Liberty loan and to have said she hoped the Germans would win the war.

RAILROADS MAY NOT TAKE COAL AT WILL

State Fuel Administrator Webster Will Require Them to Be More Careful.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 16.—Confiscation of coal by railroads is not to receive the sanction of the federal fuel administrator for Iowa, Charles Webster. Mr. Webster declares that he considered the practice entirely unfair and unjustified.

The fuel administrator said that confiscation should be permitted in extreme cases only. He said that at such times the railroad companies should immediately notify the retailer by telegraph so that he could make further arrangements for the shipment of coal.

"This practice of confiscating coal and notifying and paying the dealer after a long period should be stopped," said Mr. Webster.

To facilitate the shipments between the shipper and the dealer Mr. Webster has taken steps to form a committee which will have in its membership railroad men.

"I wish the coal dealers and jobbers to understand that the fuel administration will favor those men who have a clean bill of no overdue cars in times of shortage," said Mr. Webster. "One of the purposes of this committee is to see that all of the parties concerned in the delivery of coal are doing their part."

"Shovel coal from sun up to sun down" is one of the slogans of the fuel administrator.

GERMAN ESTATES INTO U. S. TREASURY

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 16.—Because the United States is at war with the German empire, residents of Germany who are heirs to estates in this country are going to suffer heavy losses, according to word from the alien property custodian of the government. He has directed C. H. E. Boardman, a local attorney, to investigate certain estates in this county, with the result that in one single instance over $43,000, awaiting the close of the war to be sent to German heirs, will be turned over to the United States government under the trading with the enemy act.

Frederick Grumme, a wealthy German-American banker, who died here several years ago, left a large estate to his widow Later she became Mrs George A Turner, and died several months ago. The estate, valued at $175,000 at the time of Mrs Turner's death, was divided equally among the Grumme and Turner heirs. One-half of the money to the Grumme heirs went to German residents, but because of the war it could not be paid. It has been invested in Liberty bonds by George A Turner executor of the estate, and now an order of the probate court is forthcoming directing that the money be turned over to this government

DISLOYAL ONES ARE BEING ROUNDED UP

United States Marshal and Deputy Have Mass Meeting at Atkins, Ia.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Nov. 18.—Pro-Germanism in the town of Atkins, near here, got an effectual setback when Deputy United States Marshal Healy, of this city, and Marshal Moore, of Dubuque, demanded the presence of a mass meeting of several citizens and farmers who were accused of treasonable utterances.

A butcher, who went from here to Atkins and opened up for business, is said to have been advised to take down his American flags if he expected to do any business. He was an American-German, but he stood pat and gave the federal officers much help in rounding up the slackers.

As a result of the meeting it is believed that any disloyal sentiment that may have existed has been squelched. A school teacher near Fairfax, who wrote a letter to the local exemption board, accusing favoritism, has been advised to write another letter of apology to the board.

BIG CARRANZA ARMY SMASHED

Coalition of Diaz, Zapata and Villa Forces Said by Mining Men to Threaten Government.

JUAREZ AWAITS AN ATTACK

Villa Forces Start From Ojinaga —Americans Cross Border—Villa Wants to Sell Metal.

Presidio, Tex. Nov. 16. Francisco Villa's mysterious disappearance following the battle of Parral last August was explained today by first Captain Jose Jaurretta, of Villa [illegible] who declared he had [illegible] on a 3,000 mile trip from Parral through Durango San Luis Potosi and other Mexican states to confer with chiefs regarding a new revolutionary movement.

Villa officers today declared immediate movement of troops towards Juarez.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 17. A force of 5,000 Carranza troops sent into the state of Morelos to operate against Zapata and Diaz, have been trapped in a mountain pass and practically annihilated with machine guns according to code messages received by an American mining company from its agents in the interior of Mexico. The Carranza government is in imminent danger of overthrow by the coalition of the two revolutionary factions, who have a total of 40,000 men under arms the messages says. The forces that captured Ojinaga Tuesday are reported to be moving toward Juarez.

Juarez Fears Attack

Colonel Flores leading a strong detachment of government troops has been cut off and defeated east of Juarez and is retreating to and the border. Great excitement prevailed today at Juarez over the prospect of an attack by Villistas. The present garrison is less than one-third the force that would be at the border in case of an attack. A third of the small garrison at Chihuahua city cannot be withdrawn for use against attacks there.

Two Americans Escape

Presidio Tex. Nov. 16. Two Americans crossed the Rio Grande river from Ojinaga Mex. captured yesterday by Villa, at 2 o'clock this morning. When stopped by a deputy sheriff they covered him with a revolver and disappeared. They are believed to have been the two American deserters who served the federal machine guns during the fighting for the possession of Ojinaga and who were reported to have been killed.

Half a million dollars (gold) worth of silver bars which Villa was believed to have in his possession have now been brought into Ojinaga and efforts are being made to bring it into the United States.

All the Villa officers here have plenty of money, mostly crisp new American currency and Mexican gold pieces. These officers are anxious to buy pistol cartridges and those needing new clothes, linen and other personal articles are offering American money in payment.

This port remains closed to Villa and no one is permitted to pass to Ojinaga.

GERMANY PREPARES FOR NEW RETREAT

Ninety-One Divisions, 1,625,000 Men, Exhausted Trying to Stop Flanders Drive

By United Press

With the British Armies in Flanders, Nov. 17. German newspapers taken from recently captured prisoners show the kaiser's government is preparing the public for another strategic retreat on the west front.

Captured German officers say German officers of high command entertain the fear that a retirement of several miles may be necessary by reason of the recent British advances.

Information now in possession of the general staff of the British army shows that Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, in two months has exhausted 91 German divisions, or nearly 1,635,000 men in defending vainly the Passchendaele ridge, and in fruitless counter attacks. In a similar period of two months the Germans in the battle of the Somme, used 1,290,000 men.

Inspired articles in German newspapers prepared the public for the recent retirement on the west front and show that the German general staff realizes its man power is fast waning.

He said there are a few unfortunate girls near every camp, but they did not number anything like the number reported.

EXPLODING SHELL LIFTS AUTO TO ROOF OF BUILDING IN FLANDERS

The curious result of a shell explosion.

An interesting freak of the battlefield was the lifting of a motor truck to the roof of a neighboring building by the explosion of a large shell. The incident occurred in the heavy firing in Flanders. A 210 German shell burst in the roadway at the side of the car and the force of the explosion carried the auto high into the air and left it a wreck on the building nearby.

TOWNLEY SEEKS NEW COALITION

Non-Partisan League Head in Labor Speech Points Out Way to Control Policies of Nation.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 17. A pledge from the farmers to join hands with union labor to be powerful was given at today's session of the American Federation of Labor by A. C. Townley, president of the farmers non partisan league and I. A. Strayer second vice president of the National Farmers' congress.

President Townley urged the federation to co-operate in putting food and factory war products on the market at lower prices and in greater quantities.

"Let the two great classes of producers join hands behind the government in this war," he said, "let us put down the profiteer. We would find in a surprisingly short time that our people at home will be better and more economically fed, our forces at the front better and more economically equipped."

In regard to the political aspect Mr. Townley said:

"Remember that this would be no machine coalition. The farmers of this country represent 37 per cent labor, 25 per cent of the nations voting strength."

NORTHCLIFFE REJECTS OFFER OF MINISTRY

London, Nov. 17.—Lord Northcliffe has declined a portfolio of the administration of the new air ministry made to him by Premier Lloyd George.

In a long letter to the premier, Lord Northcliffe explains that his refusal of the portfolio is due to dissatisfaction with some of the methods of Mr. Lloyd George's administration especially with regard to relations with the United States and says that Lord Northcliffe's desire therefore is to remain in an independent attitude.

STRONG ENEMY ALIEN METHODS CONSIDERED

Order Designed to Stop Activities of Spies and Destruction Discussed.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—New regulations governing enemy aliens, much more drastic than those operating were up for final consideration at today's cabinet meeting. They are expected to efficiently deal with the menace of fires, bomb plots, the conveying of information to Germany, and other activities intended to hamper the government in conduct of the war. The regulations have been drawn by Attorney General Gregory, who favors strong action. When finally approved they will be embodied in a proclamation by President Wilson. The question of placing all enemy aliens away from the vantage points of the seaboard as well as for bidding them entry to certain barred zones is one of the principal considerations.

RUSS BUSY TALKING; RADICALS IN CAPITAL

Armistice at Moscow Expires While Opposing Factions at Petrograd Confer.

London, Nov. 17.—An attempt to negotiate for the creation of a socialist government in Russia and the postponement of a railway strike there are described in an Exchange Telegraph company dispatch from Petrograd dated Tuesday. The socialist leaders offered the bolsheviki the following basis for an agreement.

First, the disarming of the Red Guard. Second, the transfer of the control of Petrograd garrison to the municipality. Third, the cessation of military operations—and in consideration of the acceptance of these terms. Fourth, full guarantee that Kerensky's army would be the only one entering Petrograd and would not fire a single shot. Fifth, the army would abstain from domiciliary searches and arrests.

The negotiations for the armistice collapsed because, although the bolsheviki agreed to the terms the socialists insisted that the bolsheviki be excluded from the proposed government.

Premier Kerensky, the dispatch adds, has issued proclamations declaring his adherence to the revolution. The armistice at Moscow expires today.

WOUNDED YANKEES REACH U. S. HOSPITAL

Germans Try to Cause Discord by Spreading Fake French Paper Attacking Wilson.

By Associated Press.

With the American Army in France, Nov. 16.—A German paper balloon used to distribute propaganda behind the hostile lines, came down today in the town occupied by American division headquarters, with copies of the Gazette Des Ardennes, which is published in French at Charleville, attached.

The leading article attacked President Wilson for his alleged prewar attitude and for not prohibiting the sale of munitions to Germany's enemies. In an attempt to convey an idea of reliability, the newspapers also printed a British official statement telling of the capture of 1,000 Germans in Flanders. The copies of the newspaper were sent to General Pershing.

Germans Surrender To Preach Republic; French Scheme Wins

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—"Republic" is their password and hundreds of German troops are surrendering voluntarily on the west front, the American government is semiofficiallyy informed.

These surrenders are the result of the French government's "follow up" campaign since President Wilson's democratic Germany appeals were showered over the German lines from allied airplanes.

Those surrendering are treated not as enemies but permitted to work for a German republic.

The advocates of a republic of Germany, said the report, "who are conducting a campaign from the security of a neutral neighbor state, are distributing among German homes and through the German armies this important information.

'Let Republic be your password.

'To the Comrades on the West Front. We have secured the issue of the following general order to the French army. Whoever surrenders himself and gives the password 'Republic' will not be treated as an enemy prisoner of war. DEFEAT OF SUBS FINAL--POLLEN

British Expert Says Sea Supremacy of Entente Is Again Established and Victory Assured.

London, Nov. 17. In reply to a question in the house of commons today, Sir Eric Geddes, first lord of the admiralty, said:

"The good return of tonnage sinking by enemy submarines last week and indeed the comparatively favorable result of the last two months ought not to be taken as indicating that the submarine menace is a thing of the past or defeated."

New York, Nov. 17.—Arthur Pollen, British war expert has made the following statement to the Associated Press on the submarine war:

"Anything unsatisfactory in the military and political situation in Europe is balanced by the extraordinary news that the German submarine campaign has broken down altogether. The submarine is defeated. This is the most momentous event since the United States declared war. It means we can all stay in and that America can really come in.

Germany's Hope Fails.

"Six months ago shipping was being destroyed, according to some authorities, at the rate of 9,000,000 tons per annum. Had this loss continued the Germans had the right to expect not indeed military victory, but a peace that would mean something much less than defeat. This was Germany's only hope and it was the allies' only anxiety. For everyone including the German high command, knew that with sea communication reasonably safe the military defeat of the German army was certain.

"In the first fortnight of November the rate of losses of British tonnage of ships greater than 1,600 tons each has fallen to about 1,000,000 tons a year."

TAMMANY STARTS EARLY AFTER WOMEN VOTERS

New York, Nov. 17.—"Jimmy" Kelley, an east side Tammany district leader turned his Hester street saloon into a free sugar dispensary from which he gave away 1,000 pounds of the scarce but necessary commodity to poor housewives, in celebration he said of the big vote given in the district for woman suffrage. An orchestra added to the gayety of the day.

SPECULATION ENDED, BUT PRICES FAIL TO DROP

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17—Speculation in butter and eggs has been eliminated the food administration announced by a voluntary arrangement made with the country's butter and egg exchanges. A set of rules drawn up governing transactions in these commodities prevents speculation and guards against fictitious prices.

No purchases are to be made on call except by persons actually engaged in the distribution of the commodity purchased and goods must be purchased only for actual distribution in the ordinary course of business and then only in such amounts as are necessary to enable the purchaser to carry on his business efficiently.

ALL MEN AT SNELLING WILL GET COMMISSIONS

Minneapolis, Nov. 17.—Maj. A. M. Ferguson, senior instructor at Fort Snelling, has received orders from Washington that every man in the student officers' reserve camp who receive commissions will be detailed to active service. The number who will receive commissions is approximately 980, he said.

All the men in the camp, with the exception of three or four, will be given commissions, Major Ferguson said. Orders from Washington will make it impossible to issue commissions to three men who were practically assured commissions due to the fact that they are not American citizens. Two of them had taken out first papers and the third had taken no steps. It will be necessary to drop these men from the rolls.

VILLA TAKES PERSONAL COMMAND AT OJINAGA

Presidio, Tex., Nov. 16.—Francisco Villa is in personal command of the Villa troops now occupying the Ojinaga port, according to Col. Miguel Trillo, Villa's personal secretary, who talked to the Associated Press correspondent at noon at the main Ojinaga fort. Colonel Trillo also said Hipilito Villa was in Ojinaga with his famous brother, having crossed from the United States more than a week ago.

BARRAGE STOPS RAID ON YANKS

Artillery Drops Curtain of Fire When Rocket Reveals Large German Force Approaching U. S. Trenches.

MACHINE GUNS SILENCED

American Patrols Reach Wire Entanglements and Return Unscathed From Clashes in No Man's Land.

By Associated Press.

The American troops in France continue to harass the Germans in patrol actions and with artillery fire. There have been more clashes in No Man's Land from which the Americans returned unscathed. American patrols have reached the wire entanglements before the German trenches and American gunners have put German machine guns out of action.

By United Press.

American Field Headquarters in France Nov. 17. American artillery planted a roaring barrage of shells over the front line trenches held by the American infantry early yesterday and today and defeated German plans for a raid.

German Patrols Sent Back.

Fighting activity along the American front is reaching a hot stage. Every sort of war activity short of a general assault is being experienced by the Yankees in the front line trenches. On Tuesday and Wednesday nights American patrol parties scouting in No Man's Land encountered large German reconnoitering parties. There were brief and hurried exchanges of shots in the dark and the Huns were sent scurrying back to their trenches and dugouts.

Meanwhile the enemy artillery fire has been increasing steadily and Wednesday night it reached a crescendo. Early in the morning the Huns released a terrific machine gun fire at the communicating trenches, the lines by which reinforcements and supplies are sent to the firing line.

Light Reveals Raiders.

Realizing this meant a raiding attempt, the Americans sent up their "star" light. This lighted up the area that must be traversed by the Teutons and disclosed a large number of them approaching the American trenches. Word was hurriedly sent back from the menaced sector for a barrage. The American artillerymen got the word by telephone and went at their guns at top speed. The batteries roared with a tattoo of fury and over in front of the American trenches the ground was literally torn up with the shells.

Then the Germans scurried back into their trenches and dugouts.

American Wounded Arrive.

A number of American infantrymen, suffering from shell wounds, have arrived at the base hospital. All the casualties were caused by the same shell.

A group of Americans were in a shack in the reserve when the Germans began shelling heavily. The officer ordered the men to a dugout, but before they could get there a large shell dropped on the position and exploded. The American artillerists concentrated their fire on the communicating trenches of the enemy.

LENINE PEACE OFFER MADE TO GERMANY?

Socialists Call on Reichstag to Meet to Consider What Seems to Have Been Formal Offer.

London, Nov. 17.—The Independent socialist group in the German reichstag has requested the president to convoke an immediate session of the reichstag to discuss the peace offer of Nikolai Lenine, leader of the Russian bolsheviki, the Amsterdam correspondent of the Central News cables.

The independent socialists also ask that the reichstag take up consideration of the new state of affairs as regards Courland, Lithuania and Poland.

No word has reached this country of a peace by the bolsheviki Germany, although telegraphic communication has been interrupted for nearly a week. The program of the bolsheviki calls for an armistice, but it is understood their purpose is to address their proposals to all the belligerents and not to arrange a separate peace with Germany.

METHODISTS ADVOCATE RURAL FELLOWSHIP PLAN

Philadelphia, Nov. 16.—Plans for the establishment of a graduate fellowship in rural work in each of the Methodist Episcopal seminaries in the country were announced by the board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the M. E. church at the regular session of its meeting here.

This, it was said, permits especially qualified men to take particular training for the rural pastorate.

The board named the following centenary commission to direct the campaign for the proposed $80,000,000 mission fund.

Vacancies in the frontier department of the board were filled by the appointment of Congressman Addison T. Smith, Twin Falls, Id., and President John F. Roberts, Las Vegas, N. M.

WARBURG SAYS RAILROADS NEED INCREASED REVENUE

Washington, D. C., Nov. 16.—Financial conditions of the railroads not only are problems for the roads, but the government and people as well, Paul Warburg, of the federal reserve board, today told the Interstate Commerce commission. He added that it was practically impossible for carriers to get new capital and stated that increased revenues were necessary to maintain confidence in railroad securities.

FOSTER FUNERAL HELD.

Washington, Nov. 16.—Funeral services for John W. Foster, former secretary of state and dean of the American diplomatic corps, were held today after which his body was taken to his old home at Evansville, Ind., for burial. A distinguished party headed by President Wilson attended the services.

Nature Sets a Guard.

Since sugar is purely an energy food, it is necessary that a proper balance of muscle-making food go with it; and, since an excess of sugar may cause serious disturbance, a guard has been set—the appetite, which normally refuses more sugar than the system can well care for.

Giant Tulip Trees.

There are tulip trees in South Pasadena, Cal., nearly 2 feet in trunk diameter with an immense spread of top, very fine trees for summer shade and allowing the winter's sun to warm the soil. In the list of eastern deciduous trees of good value it stands near the top.

Perils of Fatigue.

Medical science has long been preaching the perils of fatigue, and new investigation shows that it actually poisons the blood, leaving the system open to all manner of infections. That fatigue is the direct cause of many accidents has been proved since railroads reduced the working hours of train crews and dispatchers.

Coal Mine Found at Grass Roots.

A four-foot seam of coal, eight feet below the surface and only 30 feet from the main line of the United States railroad in Alaska has been discovered at Mine 175, not far from Seward.

Begonias in Philippines.

The Philippine Islands are very productive of begonias and a California begonia expert is responsible for the statement that of late some sixty species and varieties never known to commerce have of late been found in our far eastern insular possessions. It is feared, however, that all of these need tropical temperatures and, therefore, are only subjects for greenhouse culture.

Artificial Indigo.

Chemists discovered by research years ago the process of making artificial indigo, but it was only when a thermometer broke in the solution that they found out how to make the indigo cheap enough to be commercially valuable. The mercury so increased the yield of a certain acid that the process was cheapened sufficiently to make artificial indigo less expensive than natural indigo.

Our National Ash Heap.

America annually registers a $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 fire loss. This is several times in excess of any other country's contribution to the ash heap.

American Wisdom.

Never give advice to a woman who is setting forth on a matrimonial voyage. . . . A woman very rarely asks an opinion or requires advice on such an occasion until her resolution is formed. The plain English of the application may be summed up in these words: "I wish you to think as I do; but if unhappily you differ from me in opinion, my heart, I must confess, is fixed."—George Washington.

Derivation of "Spruce."

It is interesting to observe the derivation of the word "spruce." From a number of early quotations it is clear that "spruce," a variant of "pruce," simply stood for Prussian, the form "spruce" rather than "pruce" being established partly by the German "sprossen," meaning sprouts, or young shoots, and sprossen-bier, or spruce beer, is made of the sprouts of this fir.

Jam And Jell For The Soldiers

Tuesday the ladies of Klemme packed up a barrel with jam and jell for the soldiers at Camp Dodge to help along with a good Thanksgiving dinner. A good sized barrel was filled with the sweets and sent on the evening train by express and will reach the camp in plenty of time so the boys will have some home made trimmings for their Thanksgiving dinner. Every train into Camp Dodge is bringing in good things to eat for the soldiers from the good ladies thru-out the state.

The ladies at the head of this good movement did not have time to call on all the ladies of Klemme, but here is the list of those who helped prepare the barrel of jam:

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH NOTES

It is good that we can worship God under our own vine and fig tree where no man dare molest us or make us afraid. Such is the condition of the Church in America today. We might have been engulfed in war so that we would have neither time nor place to worship the Lord, but so far we still have the blessed privilege of assembling in God's sanctuary for devotion. Let us all labor while it is day for the night cometh when no man can work.

Peculiar Superstition.

If fake teeth could talk, they would tell strange tales. A farmer's wife attributed her good luck with a certain kind of delicious cooky for which she was famous to the fact that the mold with which she always cut out the cookies was a set of false teeth willed to her by an aunt who, in her time, had been able to cook to beat the band. Success crowned her culinary efforts because she worked with this weird and unwieldy crescent of worn-out teeth. Thus doth superstition lead us captive!

Klemme Red Cross Day Coming!

Saturday, December 8th, will be a Big Day in Klemme. This day will be a big festival day for Klemme and vicinity. There will be a big auction sale of everything from pins to pianos, cats to cows, toothpicks to furniture, in fact anything which is saleable. There will be music both afternoon and evening by the Klemme Concert Band. Moving picture show at the Idle Hour Theatre both afternoon and evening. All the proceeds go to the benefit of the Klemme Red Cross. Col. B. A. Reemstma will be on hand to auction the goods away to the highest bidder. Come with a big heart and a bigger pocketbook and help our Red Cross win out, by so doing you are helping our boys who go to France. The Red Cross here are doing fine work but it all takes money and your help is needed, be a booster for this big day. Other live towns are doing the same, let's keep Klemme on the map as the most patriotic town in the state. We can do much to help the boys who are fighting for us if we will but put our shoulder to the wheel and PUSH. Remember the day, remember the place, but don't forget to COME.

More About Food Conservation

AN ENCOURAGING REPORT

The forces of the Woman's Committee C. N. D. in Hancock county have been strengthened by the appointment of Mrs. F. E. Blackstone of Garner as Chairman of Concord Township.

Our women will be glad to know that through the efforts of the efficient township chairmen and their assistants, and the Units organized at Garner, Britt, Stilson, Corwith, and Woden, the signatures of more than 2000 patriotic Hancock County women have been obtained to the Food Conservation cards. Hon. J. F. Deems of Burlington, Iowa Food Administrator says that Hancock County stands high among the counties of the State as to percentage of signers. This is most encouraging when we remember that, although Pennsylvania ranks first in actual number of signers, Iowa ranks first among the States in percentage of signers.

Now, we shall be doing a big "bit" for our Country by never relaxing our efforts to keep the pledge we have signed and by using all the means in our power to get more signers and keepers.

Let us urge all clubs, lodges, church societies, and social gatherings of all kinds, to aid further in food conservation by either omitting refreshments or serving them at regular meal hours, thus cutting out that needless fourth meal wh ch is such a food waster. Of course, women of active brains will be able on all occasions to serve appetizing meals that are wheatless, meatless, sugarless and butterless. That would not cause to be left out anything in the line of poultry, fish, game, brown sugar, maple sugar, honey, or syrup. There need not be any lack of sweetness in either our food or our disposition.

NEXT NUMBER ON LECTURE COURSE NEXT THURSDAY EVENING

The Varello-Gross Orchestra Company will appear as the next number of the Lecture Course at the Idle Hour Theatre on next Thursday evening, December 6th. Don't forget the date.

The controller of the currency in his last annual report to congress recommended that "all officers of a national bank having the custody of its funds, money, or securities, and all officers, tellers, or other employes of the bank engaged in the handling of its money, shall furnish surety bonds." Congress not having taken any action on the subject, the controller says he will renew the recommendation in his next annual report. Such legislation, he says, "will have the double effect of making it more difficult to misappropriate the funds of a bank, and will also provide further protection for the depositors and shareholders in the event that any bank employe should betray his trust." The records of the department of justice show that during the two years ending October 31, 1916, five bank presidents, 23 cashiers and 51 assistant cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers and other officers and employes of national banks were convicted of criminal violation of the law.

Since the beginning of the year the price of sulphuric acid in Japan has been steadily advancing owing to increased exports to Russia and China, and also to the allies for war purposes. As a result, some of the artificial fertilizer companies have reduced the output of fertilizers and devoted their energies to the manufacture of sulphuric acid, while a number of companies have been established exclusively for the manufacture of the chemical. Its output has increased in a large measure and some anxiety is entertained with regard to overproduction after the war.

TWO MEN LOSE LIVES IN FIRE AT OSCEOLA

Night Marshal and Fireman Are Buried Under a Falling Wall.

Osceola, Ia., Nov. 24.—Two men are dead and several injured, one seriously, and property valued at more than $150,000 was destroyed by fire which started in the Ettinger department store building early today.

Richard Egelston, night marshal, and George Griffin, a fireman, lost their lives when a falling wall buried them.

The blaze started in the basement of the Red Cross store, spread rapidly to the Ettinger clothing store adjoining. The wind, blowing at more than 30 miles an hour, drove the flames through the store to a harness shop next door. Shortly afterward the flames swept through the second floor of the building which is occupied by lawyers and doctors and the Osceola hospital. The patients in the hospital were removed as quickly as possible after the discovery of the fire and none were injured.

The fireman and marshal lost their lives shortly after the fire started. Frank Paschall who was aiding the fire fighters stood near the two men when they were buried by the falling wall. He sustained a broken leg and internal injuries and is not expected to live. Several other persons received minor cuts and bruises.

BRENNAN IS GIVEN TEN-YEAR SENTENCE

LeMars, Ia., Nov. 24.—In the district court in session here John Brennan, a notorious crook, pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with breaking and entering and was sentenced to 10 years in the penitentiary at Anamosa.

James Ryan pleaded guilty to a charge of assault with intent to commit murder and was given 10 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary at Fort Madison.

The two criminals were caught robbing a drug store on the night of October 7. They were captured after a gun fight in which Brennan was badly wounded and Policeman Harbour shot through the shoulder.

IOWAN OWNER OF OLD ABSTRACT OF TITLE

Mapleton, Ia., Nov. 24.—James Harker, of this place, recently purchased a tract of land in Kentucky and the abstract of title he got back with the deed is believed to be one of the oldest, if not the very oldest document of the kind, in the state of Iowa. The abstract was made while Patrick Henry was governor of Virginia before Kentucky became a state.

The patent for the land was given by Governor Henry on May 18, 1785, and in detail describes the land which is in what is now Clay county, Kentucky. The description is as follows:

Beginning one mile from the mouth of Sextons creek and the waters of the Kentucky river at three (3) poplars and two (2) sugar trees, and running south 20 degrees east 3,840 poles and crossing the creek at 20 poles and one at 900 poles and to a white oak and two (2) beech trees; thence south 70 degrees west 2,083 poles to three (3) white oaks; thence north 20 degrees west 3,840 poles crossing two creeks at 800 poles and one at 3,840 poles to two (2) poplar and two (2) white oaks; thence north 70 degrees, east 2,083 poles to the place of beginning. The bounderies embrace the 2,500 acres in question.

PLAN BIG PATRIOTIC AFFAIR IN DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 24.—Henry P. Davison, head of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. and chairman of the American Red Cross war council, and Harvey D. Gibson, president of the Liberty National bank, New York city and general manager of the American Red Cross, are coming to Iowa on December 1. Arrangements are now being made to have the greatest patriotic meeting and demonstration ever held in the city of Des Moines and the central committees are already assured of a large number of Red Cross workers from over Iowa. Henry J. Allen, editor of the Wichita, Kan., Gazette, will accompany Messrs. Davison and Gibson and will be one of the principal speakers of the evening. Mr. Allen has just returned from France, where he was sent on a special mission for the Red Cross, and it is expected that the distinguished Kansas orator will give intimate information regarding the war. Iowa is regarded by national officials as one of the most important Red Cross states in the union.

MORE PRO-GERMANS ARE TAKEN INTO CUSTODY

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 24.—Deputy United States Marshal M. P. Smith, of Sioux City, placed under arrest here August Sass and Chris Gebers, well known Germans, who own considerable property. Sass is alleged to have become very abusive and indulged in pro German remarks when solicited last week for the Y. M. C. A. fund. Gebers is alleged to have denounced the United States and her allies when solicitors for Liberty bonds appeared at his farm two weeks ago. Both were ordered to report before United States Commissioner A. O. Wakefield at Sioux City.

Deputy Marshal Smith also advised that the use of the German language be stopped in the Lutheran church here until after the war. He also caused the release of Herman Sanders, who has been in the county jail the last week for stating that he would fight for Germany against the United States if given the chance. He has been listed for military service for the first draft that leaves here.

SHERIFF LOSES ONE OF HIS PRISONERS EN ROUTE

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 24.—A 19-year-old boy arrested in Indiana with two other men on the request of Sheriff Nelson, of Hamilton county, escaped from the sheriff by jumping from a moving automobile here yesterday afternoon. Nelson was taking the three prisoners to Webster City in the car they are alleged to have stolen. Tire trouble here caused the sheriff to remove the hand cuffs from off the man in order to get his help. The man complained of the cold and the sheriff left the cuffs off. When he looked around a few minutes later the man was gone. Officers here are making a careful search to find him.

DWIGGINS INDICTED BY U. S. GRAND JURY

New York, Nov. 24—Elmer Dwiggins, former New York manager of the Bankers Life company, of Des Moines, Ia., was indicted by a federal grand jury yesterday on a charge of using the mails to defraud purchasers of Liberty loan bonds. Dwiggins was arrested in Montgomery, Ala., on a federal warrant, having fled from this city after he is alleged to have collected $80,000 on the second issue of the loan. His entire shortage is said to aggregate $150,000.

SWINDLERS MAKE BIG HAUL AT DES MOINES

Minot, N. D., Hotel Man Is Relieved of $20,000 in Slick Manner.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 23.—Olaf A. Olson, a hotel proprietor of Minot, N. D., has met his "con" men and he is theirs. Two of them "rimmed" him for $20,000 Tuesday.

The "slick young fellers," as Olson called them, are gone and the whole city detective department, the police department and some excited hotel executives are recounting the tale today and looking for the crooks. They have little hope of ever seeing either of them again.

Today all that Olson possesses telling of the deal is a small red card on which is written the bit of information that he is entitled to that amount of stock in the Colorado Gold Mining company or some other ephemeral organization.

Olson, in his room in a local hotel, smiled a not unhappy smile today when he told of his loss. It seemed to worry him less than it did the police, much less officials of a certain Des Moines bank who paid the money to Olson on his note and in three or four $500 bills and scads of tens and twenties. "I don't care very much. I've got $300,000 more," said Olson.

ASPINWALL PEOPLE IN A DIFFERENT SPIRIT

Manilla, Ia., Nov. 23.—In Aspinwall, the town which barred a Liberty loan meeting recently, and was hailed as a hotbed of pro-Germanism, citizens have oversubscribed their Y. M. C. A. war fund quota by $400.

Aspinwall was allotted $300 and raised $700.

In Manilla, citizens have thus far contributed $3,000 to the Y. M. C. A. movement—an average of $3 for each man, woman and child. The town's population is only 1,000. In addition, Manilla subscribed $4,600 to the Red Cross.

The "Y" committee is composed of Rev. A. R. Miller, C. F. Kehr and M. H. Berkemier.

PECULIAR GAS FOUND IN HARRISON COUNTY

Logan, Ia., Nov. 23.—The "gas well" on the George Schley farm a half mile east of Persia continues to operate and to be the center of attraction for Persia. An effort is being made to induce a man from Ames to examine the well. The workmen bored down a fourteen-inch hole 93 feet when the noise began. The noise continues and the well has filled up 33 feet. A fine gray sand constitutes the chief element of the material that fills the well. The gas will not burn but on the contrary will put out a lighted lantern a foot below the surface of the ground, according to reports received from men making an inspection.

ANOTHER WOMAN TO DO RAILROAD WORK

Odebolt, Ia., Nov. 23.—Mrs. J. Ketteger of this place has been appointed station agent for the Illinois Central Railroad company at Deloit, Crawford county. She is to succeed her husband, who has been drafted into the national army, and expects to be called away almost any day. She is a sister of L. P. Peck, who has been station agent here for a number of years. She is a talented business woman, and is expected to experience but little trouble in acquainting herself with the duties of her new position. She is a bride of only a few months.

PAINT SMEARERS DO HIM AN INJUSTICE

Mapleton, Ia., Nov. 23.—Someone to the authorities unknown smeared yellow paint over the front and lobby of the Princess theater and also decorated it with various kinds of signs, charging that he has not shown the proper patriotic spirit. It is learned, however that Mr. Robinson, proprietor of the place, has donated to the Red Cross and has done much advertising through his theater for the Liberty loan, etc. It is also shown in his behalf that his wife is in poor health and that she is now in a Sioux City hospital for treatment.

GALVA PEOPLE DID WELL IN Y. M. C. A. DRIVE

Galva, Ia., Nov. 23.—The drive for the Y. M. C. A. fund in Galva township and the town of Galva was completed Monday afternoon and a grand total of $1,515 was raised. The amount has surpassed the amount required by this vicinity by nearly two and a half times. The committeemen solicited every home in the township, and with very few exceptions donations were received.

FARMERS ARE BUYING CATTLE TO EAT SOFT CORN

Sioux Falls, Ia., Nov. 23.—There is a great deal of soft corn in this part of the state this year and as a result many farmers are buying cattle to feed it to. One cattle dealer has brought 48 carloads of cattle here from Minnesota and South Dakota points. It is estimated that 30 per cent of the corn is soft. It is selling for 50 cents to 75 cents per 100 pounds.

ATTEMPTED A JOB THEY COULD NOT FINISH

Sioux Rapids, Ia., Nov. 23.—Three fellows doing hauling from near Sibley entered a local pool hall, announcing they were going to clean it out. The proprietor and his assistant by employing considerable force, subdued the men and turned them over to the police. They later paid fines of $20 and costs each.

CIVIL WAR VETERAN JEALOUS OF SAMMIES

Elliott, Ia., Nov. 23.—The house of W. W. Adams, aged veteran of the civil war, was painted yellow here. Mr. Adams is said to have maintained that the people are doing too much for the soldiers now, compared to what was done for the boys in the '60s, and had refused to buy Liberty bonds on that account.

FORCED TO DISPLAY THE STARS AND STRIPES

Waterloo, Ia., Nov. 23.—On threats of tar and feathers, J. F. and William Scheel, were forced by neighbors to kiss the flag last night and then nail it up over their home. They had been asked to display the colors, but failed to do so.

MAKE RECORD TIME PICKING CORN CROP

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 23.—Nine hundred soldiers from Camp Dodge picked 30 acres of corn in just one hour Saturday afternoon.

Charles Eads, farmer northwest of the cantonment, is giving up his ground for the artillery range. He had not been able to secure help for corn husking, so he appealed to the officials at the camp. The latter furnished the 900 men and all corn husking records in Iowa are believed to have been broken.

ROBBERS MAKE HAUL FROM LEMARS FIRM

Expert Cracksmen Credited With Job as They "Worked" Combination.

LeMars, Ia., Nov. 23.—The safe of the Veale Lumber company was tapped last night by robbers, who got away with $66. That the men who did the job are experts at that kind of work, is evidenced by the fact that they gained entrance to the safe by working the combination and did not use explosives. They are believed to have gained entrance through the back door. It is understood the police are working on the case with practically no clue to aid them.

STATE EXCEEDED ITS QUOTA BY $10,000,000

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 23.—Iowa's contribution to the nation's war fund through subscription to the second installment of the Liberty loan was $82,928,400, or $10,652,175 in excess of the minimum allotment, based on county quota, of $72,276,225. The maximum allotment was $124,250,000, which, even in the most hopeful moments of the strenuous campaign, generally was considered too lofty a target to hit. The campaigners of the state, however, did not let up in their efforts when they were assured that the minimum had been topped, but kept pegging away vigorously at the task of narrowing the distance to the maximum.

IOWA MORE THAN DID HER PART TO Y. M. C. A.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 20.—Iowa went far over the line in the Y. M. C. A. war fund campaign which terminated yesterday. With several counties yet to complete their report, and two counties Sac and Howard—without reports as yet, the total subscriptions aggregate $1,323,941 and the total for the state will reach the $1,350,000 mark at least.

Every one of the 16 districts of the state oversubscribed its quota. The state as a whole is 68 per cent in excess of the $800,000 minimum quota set as the standard when the campaign started and also is far over the later standard set when national headquarters asked the state to do its part in increasing the national fund to $50,000,000 instead of $35,000,000.

As originally asked it is probable that not a county in the state will fail to double its quota and some triple it over the apportionment. Polk county, with $112,500 leads in total subscriptions, but Shelby county, which gave $20,910 in comparison to $6,500 asked, leads in proportion to population.

Linn county is second in the state with $46,000. Scott next in line with $43,000 and Woodbury fourth with $43,107. The colleges of the state alone subscribed practically $75,000 in the student friendship fund as their share in the campaign. Full reports from the statewide boys' campaign for prison relief are not available but the total in this department will probably reach $100,000.

Iowa may lead the entire United States in per capita subscriptions and it is believed that no other state will be able to show a record of every county reaching its apportionment, should the few Iowa counties which have yet to finish their campaigns come up to standard.

O'BRIEN COUNTY WENT AMERICAN VERY STRONG

Primghar, Ia., Nov. 20.—O'Brien county went way over the top in the Y. M. C. A. subscription campaign. The allotment was $8,000 and the actual subscription totals nearly $12,000. Two thousand dollars of this comes from the boys of the county, chiefly high school boys. Hartley, a German town, made the best record in the county with a subscription of $2,000.

In the Liberty loan campaign, Primghar took the banner hereabouts. With an allotment of less than $50,000 on the minimum schedule and of $80,000 on the maximum schedule, Primghar actually raised $227,800, four and one-half times its minimum allotment and nearly three times its maximum.

MUCH CORN IS FOUND SPOILING IN HUSKS

Buck Grove, Ia., Nov. 20.—Corn conditions in this vicinity are not satisfactory. The talk is all about the soft crop which is sprouting, heating and rotting in the cribs. Every effort is being made to save all possible, but in some cases the unpicked corn is moulding in the husks, owing to the unprecedented warm spell. The local elevator is buying no corn.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL CANVASSES THE VOTE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 20.—Iowa's vote on the constitutional prohibitory amendment October 15 was canvassed today by the state executive council, with indications that the final official figures would be known before night.

The official vote showed the amendment defeated by a majority of 1,000.

TALK IMPROVEMENT OF LINCOLN HIGHWAY

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Nov. 20.—Supervisors of Linn, Benton and Tama counties met yesterday at Belle Plaine and called a meeting of supervisors of all the Iowa counties traversed by the Lincoln highway for Marshalltown on Dec. 7. The object is permanent and uniform improvement of the road.

LE MARS BANK GOES INTO ITS NEW QUARTERS

Le Mars, Ia., Nov. 20.—Today the officers and employes of the First National bank moved from their temporary quarters and are now located in the bank building which has recently been remodeled and enlarged. Immense vaults have been built and new fixtures of marble and mahogany presents a splendid appearance.

TWO GOVERNORS WILL VISIT CAMP DODGE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 20.—Governor Harding will have as his guest here tomorrow Governor J. A. Burnquist of Minnesota, and with part of their staffs the two governors will inspect the cantonment at Camp Dodge. A review will be held in their honor in the morning. They will be guests at the Des Moines club at a dinner in the evening.

DES MOINES—The first action in the plan to recommission cavalry officers attached to the Eighty-eighth division of the national army at Camp Dodge was taken when Maj. W. A. Graham, division judge advocate, administered the oath of service in the artillery section to 19 cavalry officers assigned to the 313th ammunition train, recently designated as an artillery unit.

LOGAN—In sinking a deep well east of Persia the workmen bored into a gas vein of sufficient force to be heard far from the well as it escaped until exhausted. The strata over the vein resembles lava dust when pulverized.

ROBBERS PULL OFF BOLD PIECE OF WORK

Jewelry Store at Manson Looted of Valuable Rings and Other Jewelry.

Manson, Ia., Nov. 21—The Paul Hohberger jewelry store was entered by bold burglars early Saturday night. They made away with jewelry valued at approximately $2,000 and no trace of the persons turning the trick has been found.

The job was done early in the evening, before closing time, while Mr. Hohberger had temporarily locked the front door to go out on business and while the streets were filled with people. Entrance was gained by breaking a back window. The rest was easy. The trays of jewelry were in the safe which was not locked.

An invoice shows that 50 diamond rings, 250 set rings, a dozen watches, 12 cameo brooches and several other articles were taken.

MORE THAN DOUBLES ITS Y. M. C. A. QUOTA

George, Ia., Nov. 21—One of the most intensive campaigns ever attempted in Lyon county closes today and in one week's time Lyon county Y. M. C. A. workers, under the direction of Ben C. Abben, jr., of Little Rock, succeeded in raising more than two and one-half times the amount apportioned Lyon county, or more than $15,000 for the $35,000,000 Y. M. C. A. war fund. It is the hope of the county workers that Lyon county will be first in the counties of the district, outside Woodbury county. Practically every home in Lyon county was visited. In the country districts, every section was visited.

HAWARDEN YOUNG ARMY OFFICER IS MARRIED

Hawarden, Ia., Nov. 21—Lieut. Q. A. Quigley, of Hawarden, has been married to Miss Florence Dennison, of Bellevue, Ia. They have known each other for several years. Lieutenant Quigley was a student at the University of South Dakota when war was declared. Soon afterward he entered the officers' training camp at Fort Snelling, Minn., and at the close of his term there was commissioned a lieutenant. He is now on duty at the cantonment at Jacksonville, Fla. Until last week the bride, a graduate of the state university of Iowa, was principal of the schools at Tipton, Ia.

FARMERS HAVE TROUBLE WITH THE SOFT CORN

George, Ia., Nov. 21—Farmers over Lyon county are finishing husking corn, some are selling shelled corn on the local markets at around $1.30 a bushel. A few are selling soft corn in the ear at around $1.00 a bushel. A considerable quantity of the corn is spoiling and many farmers are spreading it over the pastures with a manure spreader in an effort to stop the loss by molding. Some is being hand sorted. The yield is good over the county, but very few fields fully matured.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY DOES MORE THAN ITS SHARE

LeMars, Ia., Nov. 21—Results of the Y. M. C. A. war fund campaign in Plymouth county bid fair to exceed the most sanguine expectations of those having the matter in charge. Over $9,000 in collections have been reported by the various township campaign managers, and it is certain that the total sum raised will be in excess of $13,000 when the drive closes tonight, an over subscription of nearly 50 per cent.

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 21—Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Bush, of Grant township, celebrated their Fortieth wedding anniversary at their farm home. Their children and relatives planned a surprise on them and nearly 100 guests helped them remember the day.

NEW COUNTY ENGINEER FOR IDA COUNTY

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 21—The board of supervisors appointed Fred Fox as county engineer. This office has been vacant ever since the resignation of Frank Suiter. Mr. Fox has been in the employ of Ida county for the last two years as superintendent of the bridge work done by the county.

IOWA CITY—Fighting her way through fire and smoke, little Jennie Kurstin, aged 13, carried her tiny brother, Milton, aged 3, out of the burning Central clothing house to the street when she found both back doors barred, and collapsed as she brought the child and herself unscathed to safety.

LOGAN—Citizens of Harrison county, through the Logan Commercial club, presented the Harrison county men in Company C, 350th infantry, at Camp Dodge, with 18 barrels and two boxes of apples and 15 grain sacks filled with black walnuts.

LEMARS—The work of demolishing the old Methodist church building in this city is progressing rapidly. A modern building to be used by the physicians of LeMars as a clinic will be erected on the site.

DAVENPORT—The fourth annual session of the Iowa Potato and Truck Growers association will be held here November 26, 27 and 28.

RED CROSS WORK EXTENDED.

Washington, Nov. 19.—The American Red Cross intends not only to see that every medical resource shall be within the reach of the young American troops in France, but to stand by with friendly service in every other way that offers. This purpose is set forth by Maj. Grayson M. P. Murphy, Red Cross commissioner for Europe, in a report on the work now being conducted and organized in France, made public today by H. P. Davison, chairman of the Red Cross war council.

U. S. TO PROBE RACE RIOTS.

East St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 19.—The United States department of justice will be asked to investigate conditions in East St. Louis with a view to instituting prosecutions of officials of the city and St. Clair county if the facts warrant such action. Chairman Johnson, of the congressional riot investigating committee, said after the adjournment of the committee.

QUEEN LIL IS BURIED.

Honolulu, Nov. 19.—With all the pomp and ceremony of the ancient Hawaiian funeral ritual, befitting the departure of the last monarch of the islands who had held tenaciously to the traditions of her former domain, Queen Liliuokalani was buried in the Nuuana cemetery.

The United States government was officially represented by Senator Henry F. Ashhurst, of Arizona, and its armed forces. The body of the monarch was enclosed in a rich Koa casket, upon which lay a wreath sent by President Wilson.

, Nov. 23.—The Germans last made a counter attack on the front in an endeavor to recap- he ground won by the French in day's offensive. The war office announces that the enemy was repulsed with serious losses

By United Press.

With the British Armies Behind the Hindenburg Line, Nov. 23.—The British troops carried forward today their victorious attacks started yesterday on the Hindenburg line. British cavalry and infantry are everywhere around Cambrai and the great war machines are rumbling forward. The Tommies are now almost within grasp of the German depot of Cambrai as this dispatch is being written.

Every hour makes the British victory appear more gigantic. The Hindenburg line has been smashed to splinters. In some sectors the fighting was practically in the open.

That the Germans in the trenches were taken completely by surprise is shown by the fact that in the dugouts many tables loaded with delicacies untasted and still warm were found by the victorious Tommies. In the quarters occupied by the officers there were found great stores of fine old wines, cigars and cigarets. Then too in almost every part of the trenches were found the personal belongings of the men who had been so suddenly called from their bunks which were yet warm. Many of these men burrowed out into the dawn without coats or hats, some without coats or hats, some without shoes, and there were not with the fury of the British onslaught. Some of them were so beside themselves that they stood palsied and permitted the tanks to flatten them out on the hard ground or were jabbed by the bayonets in the hands of the none too careful Tommies.

London, Nov. 23.—The capture of the village of Fontaine Notre Dame has been completed by the British in their new offensive, the war office announces.

Fontaine Notre Dame is two and three-quarters miles southwest of Cambrai on the main road between Bapaume and Cambrai.

Officers Didn't Know It.

By the Associated Press.

British Army Headquarters in France Tuesday, Nov. 20.—For weeks the process of concentrating men and guns for this great attack had been going on and so carefully had it been done that comparatively few officers in the British army knew what was transpiring. For many months there had been nothing more than occasional raids with now and then a flurry of artillery fire in the Cambrai sector.

Tuesday morning before daybreak things were moving along at much the same pace. The Germans had evinced some nervousness during the night and for a few minutes about 5:30 o'clock in the morning dropped a barrage along a section where it probably appeared as though the British might be planning a raid. The enemy presumably had been looking for something in this nature but that they did not expect a battle was clearly evident.

Suddenly the long line of British tanks moved forward and in a moment the variegated signal lights of the Germans shot high in the air. The British troops came out of their shelters and with fixed bayonets and grenades followed the tanks swiftly toward the enemy barriers.

Smoke Hides Monsters.

The ground was firm and covered with long grass. There were few big shell holes, such as are to be seen in Flanders, for comparatively little artillery work had been done against this sector. It was ideal going for the big land monitors and they made the most of it. As they started forward the British put a heavy screen of smoke up all about them so that it was impossible for the enemy to see them many yards away.

The tanks reached the German outpost line in front of the main line and without stopping surged through it toward the barbed wire entanglements, their guns working steadily all the while. Here was a point where it had been feared they might encounter difficulties, but they did not. They crashed through the barbed wire and by 7:29 the British infantry were going through the gaps thus made.

At 7:47, the infantry operating just west of Havrincourt had swarmed up the elevation known as Mount Vesuvius. A few minutes later the knoll was blown up, having been mined by the Germans. At 8:34, seven tanks and infantry were seen in the Havrincourt station. In evacuating Havrincourt the Germans did comparatively damage and the place had not suffered greatly from shell fire.

Few, if any, German airplanes ventured over the British lines this morning. There was much fog and this added to the smoke barrage made observation practically impossible for them. British airplanes, however, were operating in large numbers, flying in most cases within a few yards of the ground.

London, Nov. 22.—Andrew Bonar Law announced in the house of commons that 8,000 prisoners, including 180 officers, have been taken by the British in their present operations.

MANY CIVILIANS RESCUED.

British Headquarters in France, Nov. 22.—Thousands of British cavalry were cooperating with the great army of tanks and infantry in continuing the successful assault begun against the Hindenburg defenses.

Open fighting has been going on at many places since yesterday and the horse troops, who long had waited for a chance to vindicate their existence in this war, were rendering invaluable services in "moping up" the enemy there.

Byng Stakes Reputation.

Certainly thousands of Germans were captured and were in plain sight for anyone who cared to visit them. The German losses have been heavy. At least four divisions of infantry had been badly smashed since the fighting began.

Large numbers of civilians have been released from captured towns. About 500 were brought back from Masnieres and other places furnished their quota of noncombatants who received their deliveries with rejoicings.

FIND GREAT TUNNEL USED BY GERMANS TO MOVE SOLDIERS

London, Nov. 23.—The Hindenburg or Siegfried line was believed by the Germans to be strong enough to hold back the world armies. Its triple cordon of three separate trench systems had a central line with a great tunnel with openings at frequent intervals, making it unnecessary for the troops to move above ground, thus keeping the garrison safe under the heaviest gunfire. It is believed that much of this tunnel now is in the possession of the British.

ITALIANS YIELD SOIL BY INCHES

Line Generaly Holds, Although Terrific Pressure Causes Some Slight Losses in Mountains.

Rome, Nov. 23.—The Austro-Germans invading northern Italy yesterday reached a few of the Italian outstanding positions on the Italian advanced lines on Monte Fontana Secca, but elsewhere the Teutons were repulsed, the war office announced today.

Berlin, Nov. 23.—The summits of Monte Fontana and Monte Spinuccia, on the northern Italian front between the Brenta and Piava rivers have been captured it is announced officially.

By Associated Press.

Italian Army Headquarters, (Wednesday) Nov. 21.—The greatest mass attack which the enemy has made is in progress along the upper Piave river at the point which bends to the northeast in the Belluno Alps. As the action proceeds the enemy is bringing forward fresh masses of his reserves.

Picked troops of the Prussian guard are included, besides some of the best German troops drawn from the western and Russian fronts. He also has 20,000 mountaineers from lower Hungary, troops which are noted for their brutal vandalism.

Italian Army Headquarters (Wednesday) Nov. 21.—The battle in the mountainous region in the north between the Piave and Brenta rivers is nearing its culmination. It centers at Monte Grappa and has become a struggle of giants.

It is now clear, that notwithstanding the great numbers of troops employed by the enemy and his advantages of terrain he is able to advance only very slowly now that he is not being assisted by the element of surprise, by treason and other circumstances which favored him at first.

Even if the Italians should be obliged to abandon the Piave river line they may be expected to fall back more slowly and offer still more tenacious opposition.

The action through the day has shifted westward from Monte Tomba and Monte Monfenera to the slopes of Monte Pertica where the enemy rushes have been checked. The Italian positions remain substantially unchanged in the region of Monte Grappa, which dominates the whole range of lower hills.

U. S. Red Cross Is There.

The monitor fleet which is cooperating with the Italian fleet off the mouth of the Piave is shelling heavily the enemy positions menacing Venice. A number of American Red Cross ambulances passed through headquarters today toward the Piave front. The men and cars appeared to be in good condition.

Italian aviators who have flown over the invaded districts of Venetia say they saw lines of the civilian population under guard headed for Austria.

William Marconi, inventor of the wireless, has arrived at headquarters and taken a place on the staff of General Diaz, the commander in chief.

Monfenera the Key.

The action ebbs and flows around the slopes of three low mountains just west of the river—Monte Lomba, Monte Monfenera and Monte Cornella. Monte Monfenera is just on the edge of the river and it is here that some of the most desperate fighting has occurred. It is the key to the situation as at that point the river turns into the Venetian plains and the whole battle hinges on control of the river passage leading to the plains.

The first assaults began five days ago, when Von Below's Germans on the lower Piave were swung northward for this supreme blow. The attacks have intensified steadily each day until yesterday and today when they reached the maximum.

Use Bayonets as Knives.

Beginning with artillery preparation, the Austro-German infantry advances came in successive waves, first at the northernmost mountain, Cornella, where the Como brigade of Italians held the line until crowded back by greatly superior numbers. The enemy then took positions back of the town of Querb and violent artillery and infantry attacks were centered on Monfenera and Tomba. Much of the fighting in the mountains was at close quarters with bayonet charges and desperate hand to hand struggles along an extended front. Through Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday charge followed charge and counter attack followed attack. In some of the bloodiest fighting ground has changed hands three or four times.

At the little village of Naranzine on the slopes of Monte Monfernera the enemy first gained lodgment and sought to surround the large Italian force, but was thrown back by a splendid display of the Italian lines, which swept forward with cheers until the explosion was clear. It was the bloodiest kind of fighting with bayonets first and then with bayonets wrenched from their stockets and used as double edged knives.

Heaviest Blow Is Delivered.

Again the enemy massed forces higher up on Monte Monfenera, backed by batteries concentrated from all points. Before this intense shell fire the Italian infantry gave ground slowly until the upper slopes were abandoned, but the fighting goes on with unabated desperation, and it is still too soon to say what the outcome may be of this heaviest blow to break through to the western Venetian plains.

The conduct of the Italian troops is above all praise. They are contesting every foot of the way, fighting like tigers and with spirit and confidence even in the face of greatly superior numbers.

The recent order for 7,000,000 pairs of army shoes at $4.65 a pair is the largest order for shoes ever placed by the government, and the bill will total more than $32,500,000.

COPPERS FALL FOR THE APPLE

Now They Must Answer to the Charge of Raiding an Orchard.

St. Louis, Mo.—Traffic Policemen Marble S. Sands, Clarence Nelson, and Thomas Weingart of the central district were ordered suspended by Chief of Police Young under charges of conduct unbecoming officers and leaving the city without permission of their superior officers. The charges are the aftermath of a raid on an apple orchard in which the three men participated early Sunday morning, October 7.

Complaint reached Chief Young several days ago from farmers in the vicinity of Chesterfield, St. Louis county, that the three policemen were members of a party which drove up to an orchard just north of the Olive street road near that town and began knocking apples from trees and sacking them.

On account of frequent thefts of potatoes and fruits the farmers had organized a vigilance committee and were guarding the orchard. After several sacks of apples had been filled two farmers covered them with shotguns and placed them under arrest.

According to the farmers the policemen admitted their identity gave the numbers of their police badges, and offered to pay for what apples they had sacked. They were taken before a justice of the peace, and upon promise to mail sufficient money to pay for the apples the next day were allowed to go.

The farmers who brought about the capture of the policemen were employed on the farm of Max Tamm, head of the Tamm Glue works, who owns a country home near Chesterfield.

The policemen in their report of the incident admitted having been caught taking the apples and justified their act by stating that the premises on which the trees were located seemed to be deserted and the place entirely abandoned. They also admitted having agreed to pay for the apples and stated that they mailed $5 the next day to cover the amount demanded.

Patrolman Dennis Monahan and Probationary Patrolman Anton Sheibel of the North Market street district were suspended and ordered to appear before the board of police commissioners to answer a charge of making false reports.

Adam Bauer, a railroad watchman, reported that he found the two policemen standing by a freight car in the yards at the foot of Tyler street recently and the car had been broken into and a sack of potatoes almost dragged out the door.

Monahan and Scheibel stated in their report of the incident that they had heard shots in that vicinity and had gone to investigate. Bauer in his report stated he heard no shots. Monahan admitted being several blocks off his beat.

NORWAY TRIES TO STOP GERMAN SPYING

Christiania, (Correspondence of the Associated Press)—Norway is making vigorous efforts to stamp out German espionage within its shores. The Swedish revelations have given a great impetus to the anti-spy campaign.

The interned German ship Berlin is to be removed from Hommelvik to Aasenfiord, further inside the coast line. It has been urged for a long time that the position of the Berlin offered opportunities for espionage on shipping.

Guards have been placed not only over all Norwegian military establishments, but also at some of the large industrial works. Thus a military picket has been posted at the Fredrickstad iron works, where the new slips for 10,000-ton ships are now ready, and trespassers have been warned to keep away.

Under a law of July, 1917 the commune of Christiania has ordained that the chief of police may forbid persons who are not Norwegians to reside in the commune longer than a certain fixed period. A new law concerning the necessity of passports and the expulsion of aliens is to be rigidly enforced after October 1.

A spy case which caused a great flurry for a time was that of a Dane named Kristiansen who has now been expelled from the country. The whole affair developed into an impudent fraud, with one of the belligerent governments as the victims. Kristiansen was obtaining money from this government by giving or promising to give information of no real value about another.

All three were later arrested charged with complicity in the plot.

Through an attorney for Vigillita, who feared arrest, Mrs. Cehler was told that her daughter would be returned to her if she would acknowledge the marriage. The attorney was arrested by Detectives Kennelly and Aughe when he was seen at the celebration of the wedding at the Canglia home.

Josephine Canglia, when questioned by the police, declared that the couple came to her home after they were married and Vigillita desired to rent a room for several days, but was refused. The couple then disappeared and have not been heard from since.

Police are conducting a diligent search for the couple and held the three Canglias for further investigation.

"Hot Time" Yet Popular.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

New York—There has been a great deal of talk recently concerning an appropriate marching song for our soldiers, and a great deal more of press agents' work and plugging on the part of the music publishers, each on behalf of his individual output, but to the minds of those most intimate with the situation, the problem of the soldiers' "chanty" remains unsolved.

I have heard the bands in all the parades so far play, first one song then another, with a little additional stress on the George M. Cohan composition, "Over There," but band after band on each occasion, always reverted to one song, "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

Now, what is there about this old song that makes it stick? That is a question the bandsmen themselves cannot answer. There is something about "Hot Town," they admit, that lingers—and they like it. And with this answer we must be satisfied.

I am no Caruso, I confess, but I must admit that recently after hearing band after band march past, playing this song as if their very lives depended on it, I became obsessed with the melody and found myself whistling it almost continually.

Progress.

"Are you trying to economize?"

"Yes. I've actually gotten on so far that I've quit telling other people what to go without and am going without a few things myself."

NEW MONSTER TANK USED IN OFFENSIVE OF UNDREAMED SIZE

Washington, D. C., Nov. 23.—American officers who have returned from the war front in France knew of the British plan to use tanks on an unprecedented scale in the new offensive and kept their secret. One of these officers today described these tanks as monsters of a size undreamed of before. Their first successes in the war gave a British commander his hunch for this week's drive.

THORNE SUGGESTS U. S. TAKE OVER ROADS

Action for Duration of the War Would Cure Ills Better Than Rate Increase, He Believes.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—In a brief submitted to the Interstate Commerce commission in the 15 per cent advance freight rate case, Clifford Thorne, leading counsel for the shippers, suggests that the commission recommend that the government take over the operation of the railroads for the duration of the war.

Mr. Thorne pointed to the fact that Frank A. Vanderlip, New York banker, testified that he believed the rate increase would act only as a poultice and not cure the railroads' trouble and to the statement of Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania railroad that he did not believe the roads should attempt large bond flotations when the government was putting out loans.

TEUTONS BACK VILLA'S REVOLT

Seek to Cause Disorder That Will Cut Off Supply of Oil to Entente and Cause Distrust.

Juarez, Mex., Nov. 23.—Gen. Eduardo Hernandez, acting commander of the northeastern military zone has taken the field in person at the head of a column of 2,000 cavalry pursuing Villa forces in the Ojinaga sector, according to information received here today from Chihuahua city.

A strict military censorship has been established on all wires to the border.

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 23.—German money and intrigue are stirring trouble anew in Mexico, it is stated on high authority today. Hundreds of Teutons, availing themselves of neutrality, are responsible for the recurrence of fighting and plotting by Villa, Zapata and Felix Diaz. The real seriousness for the United States lies in the fact that the output of the Tampico and Tuxtan oil fields may be curtailed, while the difficulty near the border might ultimately divert some of the nation's war strength from Europe.

Teuton spies are seeking to discredit Carranza with the United States by making it appear he cannot cope with the rebellious factions. They are stirring up anti-American sentiment and trying to bring on American intervention both as a means of detracting from the main war task and to discredit this government with the South American republics. Evidence gathered by secret service agents shows that Diaz has been offered $300,000 to lead an insurrection in Sinaloa.

Villistas are again on the rampage and appear to be well armed and financed with Teuton money. The Germans are pitting faction against faction.

AMERICAN SLACKERS PARADE IN UNIFORM

Two Hundred Men Rounded Up in Paris and Told to Enlist or Come Home.

Paris, Nov. 23.—The Paris Herald reports that more than 200 young Americans wearing the uniforms of ambulance drivers, have been rounded up recently by the American military authorities. The numbers of their passports were taken and they were told to call at headquarters, where all but five appeared. There they were informed again that they must enlist in some branch of the active service overseas or they would be sent back to America, where they would be dealt with as circumstances warrant.

As for the five who did not appear at headquarters, the Herald says, it is reported that when they are found harsh measures against them will be taken.

MONEY IN TREASURY SETS NEW U. S. RECORD

Washington, D. C., Nov. 22.—Additional receipts today from the 10 per cent payment of the second Liberty loan raised the total reported since last Thursday to $1,490,000,000, and made the net balance in the treasury today $1,921,000,000, an unprecedented record. Receipts still are coming in.

Certificates of indebtedness issued October 18, amounting to $385,197,000 were being redeemed today out of the huge treasury balance.

WAR OBJECTIONS LOSE FRANCHISE IN ENGLAND

London, Nov. 23.—The house of commons, by a vote of 209 to 171, adopted an amendment to the electoral bill disfranchising conscientious objectors to war.

SWISS ARMY HEAD DIES.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 22.—Col. A. Audeout, head of the Swiss army, is dead as a result of a brief illness contracted during an inspection trip. While observing neutrality officially, Colonel Audeout made no disguise of his sympathies with the entente allies.

RUSSIA ORDERS PEACE PARLEYS

Commander Reported to Have Resigned Rather Than Open Negotiations with Hindenburg.

DETERMINED TO QUIT WAR

Leaders Declare That Three Months Armistice Does Not Necessarily Mean Separate Peace.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 23.—Ambassador Frances, at Petrograd, has reported that German propagandists are now carrying on almost openly their activities to keep affairs unsettled in the Russian capital.

London, Nov. 23.—An official wireless statement from Petrograd today says that General Dukhonin, has been deposed by the council of the people's commissaries, for "refusing to obey their orders by offering an armistice."

The Russian announcement says that General Dukhonin has been ordered to continue his duties until the new commander in chief Ensign Krylenko, or another authorized person, arrives.

Petrograd (Wednesday), Nov. 21.—The Russian government yesterday ordered General Bukhomin the commander in chief, to open negotiations for an armistice with the commanders of the enemy armies. The proposal to negotiate peace was officially conveyed to the ambassadors of the allied nations at Petrograd.

The formal offer of an armistice to all the belligerents which the council of peoples' commissaries of the All-Russian workmen's and soldiers congress proposes to make shortly is not intended to forecast any effort toward a separate peace. On the contrary, it is declared definitely here that not only is separate peace not desired, but that the rejection of the armistice proposal by Germany, even should it be acceptable to the allies, would mean a continuation of the war by the new revolutionary arm with vigor against German imperialism until the German people "inspired by Russian democratic ideas" overthrow their rulers and demand peace. Confidence is expressed here, however, that Russia's initiative will bring the desired results—if not with the allied governments, then through the insistence of the people of the allied countries, who it is predicted, will bring pressure to bear on their governments.

According to the maximalist government's plan, an armistice will be entered upon first, and if it were successful for three months it is proposed to assemble a peace conference at which an attempt would be made to negotiate Russia's policy of a peace without annexations or indemnities and the self-determination of nations.

London, Nov. 23.—No Russian military communication was issued today. A Petrograd message received by the British admiralty by Wireless Press says.

"A political communique states that by order of the all-Russian workmen's and soldiers' congress the council of 'the people's commissaries' has assumed power with obligation to offer all the peoples and their respective governments an immediate armistice on all fronts, with the purpose of opening parleys immediately for the conclusion of a 'democratic peace.'

"When the power of the council is finally established throughout the country, the council will, without delay, make a formal offer of an armistice to all the belligerents, enemy and ally. A draft message to this effect has been sent to all the people's commissaries for foreign affairs and to all the plenipotentiaries and representatives of allied nations in Petrograd.

"The council also has sent orders to the citizen commander in chief that after receiving the present message he shall approach the commanding authorities of the enemy armies with an offer of a cessation of all hostile activities for the purpose of opening peace parleys, and that he shall, first, keep the council constantly informed by direct wire, and, second, that he shall sign the preliminary act only after approval by the commissaries' council."

AMERICANS QUIT PETROGRAD.

Petrograd, Tuesday, Nov. 20.—Eighteen Americans left Petrograd tonight on a special car attached to the Siberian express on their way to America, constituting the first party of Americans to leave because of the disturbed conditions in Russia. William Cochran and Dr. Wm. S. Thayer, of the American Red Cross mission to Russia, having completed their duties here accompanied the party.

U. S. GRAIN INSPECTION MEETINGS ANNOUNCED

Washington, D. C., Nov. 23.—Criticisms of government standards for shelled corn and the various grades of wheat will be asked at hearings in 17 cities, beginning at New York, November 26.

The list of hearings follows:

New York, November 26. Buffalo, November 27; Toledo, December 3; Chicago, December 4; Omaha, December 5, Minneapolis, December 6, Fargo, N. D., December 8; Spokane, Wash., December 10; Seattle, December 11, Portland, Ore., December 12, Salt Lake City, December 14; San Francisco, December 15; Hutchinson, Kan., December 17; Fort Worth, December 18; Nashville, Tenn., December 22, Washington, D. C., December 27.

U. S. TO TRAIN 100,000 MEN FOR NEW SHIPS

Washington, D. C., Nov. 22.—The shipping board today adopted a plan advanced by Henry Howard, of Boston, its director of recruiting, for training 100,000 seamen to man the government's merchant fleet now building. A number of schools will be established in which the men will be given intensive training for six weeks before going aboard training ships for experience afloat. Training of the men will cost the government about $2,000,000.

FRENCH OPEN ATTACK.

Berlin, via London, Nov. 22.—The French opened a strong attack on the Germans on a six-mile front north of Aisne Wednesday afternoon, according to the official report from general headquarters. The British were still using powerful force against the Hindenburg line in the Cambrai sector.

ECISION OF THE TWINS

By IZOLA FORESTER.

oll-ee!!"

answer. Don looked cautiously ugh the bannister rails. Some- s it is very handy to be only three a half-feet high. Below, in the , center hall, everything was quiet. twins loved the hall when the sunlight streamed in through the tained-glass window at the bend of the staircase.

It was the luncheon hour. Don knew that the grown-ups were safe in the dining room, but he did think that Polly might have stayed within hearing distance.

"Oh, Pollee! Betty's eating the gold- fi!" The little door under the stairs opened cautiously and Polly looked out, shaking her finger in warning.

"You Donnikin!" she exclaimed in a whisper. "Don't you dare call my name. I don't want anyone to know where I am. What have you been doing now?"

"'Tisn't me, Polly," Don protested. "It's Betty. She got on a chair and picked them out, and said she was going to eat them."

From the top of the stairs came a shrill, indignant protest.

"I didn't eat 'em. I played they were all whales and put them in the bathtub."

Polly took one look in the direction of the closed dining room door, gathered her skirts about her and fled up the stairs. Don watched her disappear, Betty clasped in her arms. The ways of sisters were beyond his ken. He began to pine for the companionship of his own sex. Just then the dining room door opened and Uncle Hal came out, followed by the doctor. Don approved of the doctor first because he was not a doctor of pills and bitter medicines. He was the new rector over at the little stone church where the twins went to Sunday school.

Don understood that he had been a college mate of Uncle Hal, and therefore was an all-round good fellow. As they sat out on the veranda now, in the deep willow chairs, smoking, Don sorted marbles on the top step and studied the doctor thoughtfully.

Noticing that Uncle Hal was doing most of the talking, and that the doctor was rather absorbed, he began to connect him with Polly's attitude toward life, and to regard him suspiciously. When Uncle Hal went down to the garage Don ventured to take his place beside the doctor, and talk to him as man to man.

"You know," he said, "Betty and I've decided you ought to marry Polly."

"Oh, you have, have you?" The doctor smiled down at the little six-year-old figure in tan linen beside him. "But has Polly decided? Have you asked her?"

"We did," said Don cheerfully, "but she told us she didn't have any opinion of any man who wasn't brave enough to do his own courting. What's courting? Has it anything to do with kings and queens? Or is it about the police?"

"Courting," repeated the doctor, gently, "is what people call wooing, Don, and wooing is er—er—"

"Just hanging around a girl that you like?" innocently.

The doctor's face took on a deeper tint. He smoked in silence.

"Don!" Polly's voice was fearfully dignified as she stepped from the doorway. "I think you had better go down and play on the beach with Betty. The doctor is leaving very soon."

"I didn't tell him what you said, Polly," said Don reproachfully. "I only told him that Betty and I had decided. I didn't say you had decided, at all."

Polly's face was as pink as a rose as he scampered down the path to join his twin.

The doctor dropped his cigarette stub over the veranda rail.

"Is there any special reason," he said, "why you should treat me in this way?"

Polly turned on him hotly.

"Because you've chosen to stay in this little summer resort, simply fagging for the angels, and marking time, when you ought to be right in the thick of it. You know that Hal's going. I'd go in a minute, if I were a man. As it is, I'm joining the Red Cross and forming a unit here among the girls of the summer colony. Why on earth don't you do something? Anything! If you're not good for anything else, run an ambulance on the front. Do anything but manage lawn socials and strawberry festivals for the benefit of All Souls'."

The doctor stood up quickly, looking down at her with a new expression in his eyes. It was a new Polly who faced him belligerently. He had always thought her the usual type of girl in the summer colony, and while he had frankly fallen in love with her from the first, he had not been keen on telling her so. And now, without warning, Polly had lifted the veil of her frivolity and shown him something of the real woman nature behind it. He answered her slowly.

"I came over today on Hal's invitation to tell him I'd been accepted as chaplain on the Alert. We sail, I believe, the 17th. Before I left I wanted to ask you to be my wife, if I return."

There was a long silence. Polly's blue eyes watched the shore where Betty's pink dress and hat made her resemble some animated blossom bobbing around.

"I think," she said softly, "that the twins' decision was right, after all."

Toys! Toys! Toys!

Friday, November the 30th, we will open OUR BASEMENT, which will be the delight of the children's hearts.

Christmas is only a little over three weeks away. We have been busy making preparations that will eclipse all that we have ever done before. FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 30th, will be the OPENING DAY and what Mother will be too busy to gather her little flock about her and bring them to see our beautiful line of TOYS? Do not miss this wonderful sight for the children.

Do Your Christmas Shopping Early!

Never before has EARLY CHRISTMAS SHOPPING been so urgent and important as this year; for not alone must gifts be bought well in advance for our beloved ones in France and the Training Camps—but the advantages why it is best to make all purchases before the last week, are innumerable.

The crush and rush of the last minute shopper; and the fatigue that results, is avoided when selections are made leisurely; and in this way, too, you avoid the disappointment that is almost sure to result if you delay too long.

So we urge you again and again—the sooner your gift list is arranged and completed, the more satisfaction and pleasure you will derive from your CHRISTMAS SHOPPING.

"I may be mistaken — but I should like your judgment. In the library, among the other books, is one which describes the life of the kaiser and his family—it is put there, I suppose, for all good Germans to read It is illustrated by many photographs. In looking at the photographs, one of them impressed me as curiously familiar; if I should happen to be correct, it would make a most startling article for your newspaper. But I wish you to judge for yourself. You will find the book lying on the table in the library, and the photograph in question is on page 68 If you will look at it, arl then return here, I should consider it a favor."

Considerably astonished, Dan descended to the library, found the book, and turned to page 68. Yes, there was a photograph of the emperor, with the empress and Princess Victoria. another of the crown prince, with his wife and children; another of the princes—Eitel-Frederick, August, Oscar, Adalbert. * * *

And Dan, looking at it, felt his eyeballs bulge, for he found himself gazing at the face of Kasia Vard's companion.

He told himself he was mistaken, closed his eyes for an instant and then looked again. There was certainly a marvelous resemblance. If it should really be the same—Dan's head whirled at thought of the story it would make!

He closed the book, at last, climbed slowly back to the boat deck and sat down again beside M. Chevrial.

"Well?" asked the latter. "What do you think of it?"

"If they are not the same man, they are remarkably alike," said Dan.

"I believe they are the same."

"But it seems too grotesque. Why should a Hohenzollern travel second class, dressed in a shabby walking suit and without attendants?"

"There is a middle aged German with him, who is, no doubt, his tutor, or guardian, or jailer—whichever you may please to call it"

"His jailer?"

Chevrial smiled.

"The emperor is a father of the old school and punishes his sons occasionally by imprisonment or banishment under guard. I fancy that is the case here. Before I left Paris, I heard rumors of indiscretions on the prince's part with a young lady in Berlin, which had made his father very angry. This journey, perhaps, is a penance. At least, it is worth investigating."

"It certainly is," agreed Dan warmly, and fell silent, pondering how best to prove or disprove this extraordinary story. It was decidedly of the sort the Record liked, if he could only verify it, his return to the office would be in the nature of a triumph! But to prove it! Well, there were ways!

A low exclamation from his companion brought him out of his thoughts.

"Behold!" said Chevrial; and, far away to the right, Dan caught the gleam of a light.

"A ship?" he asked.

"No, no, it is the lighthouse on what you call the Island of Fire. It is America welcoming you, my friend."

And Dan, with a queer lump in his throat, took off his cap.

"America!" he repeated, and Kasia Vard's words leaped into his mind. "The land of freedom!"

"Yes," agreed his companion, softly; "you do well to be proud of her! She is at least more free than any other!"

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE LANDING.

When Dan Webster awoke, next morning, his first thought was that something was wrong, and it was a moment before he realized what it was. The screw had stopped. Instead of quivering with the steady, pulsing like vibration to which, during the past week, he had grown accustomed, the ship lay dead and motionless. He got on deck as quickly as he could, and found that they were anchored in the shelter of Sandy Hook, with a boat from quarantine alongside. Already the deck was thronged with excited passengers; many of the women, in their eagerness to go ashore, had put on their hats and veils and even their gloves. But word got about that there was some sickness in the steerage, and that it would probably be some hours before they could proceed.

Dan took a long look at the familiar land; then he hurried below to breakfast. He had planned his campaign before he went to sleep the previous night, and he was eager to begin it. Breakfast, therefore, did not take him long, and he was soon searching the decks for the man who, possibly, was a son of the kaiser, but, much more probably, merely a young German who made the most of a chance resemblance.

Dan possessed the aplomb which only years of work on a great paper can give a man; he had wormed interviews from many reluctant and exalted personages; he had asked questions which the other man was certain to resent, often quite justly; he had drilled himself to believe that, when he was on the trail, all mankind was fair game, and that any device which would drag the truth from them was justified—the truth, the truth, that was the end and the justification of newspaper methods! Nevertheless, his heart beat a little faster when, at last, he perceived the object of his search leaning against the rail at the rear of the upper promenade and gazing out to sea.

"I've got buck fever," he told himself. "It's because I'm out of training." And then he wondered if the prince was thinking of Germany, and of the lady love from whom he had been torn.

Nobody else, apparently, had any thought for Germany or for the open sea. Every one had crowded to the side rails to stare at the land or at the smudge of smoke which marked Long Island, and the stern of the ship was deserted. Telling himself that he would never have a better chance, and that he must finish with the affair before the ship reporters came aboard, Dan braced himself, approaching the solitary and somewhat pathetic figure, removed his cap and bowed respectfully. The prince, abruptly wakened from his day dreams, looked up with a start, and met Dan's smiling eyes with an astonished stare.

"I see your highness does not remember me," said Dan, good humoredly. "That is not remarkable, but I was conceited enough to think it just possible that you might."

"No," said the prince, finding his tongue, "I fear I do not * * *" He stopped abruptly. "For whom do you take me?" he demanded.

"Surely I am not mistaken!" and Dan looked at him more closely. "No—it is really your highness! I cannot be deceived!"

The prince met his gaze and shook his head, and tried to laugh. But he was not a good liar—his father had long since recognized his unfitness for any diplomatic mission.

"I see it is useless for me to dissemble," he said, in a low tone. "But I am here strictly incognito, and I beg that you will not betray me. Where have me wet?"

Dan's heart leaped with exultation. And then a little feeling of shame seized him. It was too bad to have to betray the fellow—but duty demanded it! Perhaps, however, it could be done in a way that would not be offensive. He opened his lips to explain, when a stocky figure suddenly thrust itself between them, and Dan found himself gazing into a pair of irate eyes.

"What is this?" demanded the newcomer, though his voice, too, was carefully lowered. "Who are you, sir?"

Dan felt his good resolutions ooze away at the other's brutal manner.

"I am a reporter," he said.

"What is your business?"

"Gathering news."

"Your business here, I mean?"

"I was just interviewing the prince," explained Dan, blandly. "The Record would be very glad to have his opinion of the Moroccan situation, of the Italian war, of the triple entente, or of anythink else he cares to talk about. Perhaps he could find a theme in the destruction of La Liberte."

He spoke at random, and was surprised to see how fixedly the other man regarded him, with eyes in which apprehension seemed to have taken the place of anger.

"One moment," said Pachmann, for it was he, and he turned and spoke a few rapid words of German to the prince, who reddened and nodded sullenly. Dan judged from the sound of the admiral's subsequent remarks that he was swearing; but he preserved a pleasant countenance, the more easily since, happening to glance up, he saw Chevrial leaning over the rail of the boat deck just above them and regarding the scene with an amused smile. At last, having relieved his feelings, the admiral fell silent and pulled absently at the place, where his moustache had been.

"When does your paper appear?" Pachmann asked at last.

"Tomorrow morning."

"You would not wish to use the interview before that time?"

"No."

Pachmann breathed a sigh of relief, and his face cleared.

"Then we are prepared to make a bargain with you," he said. "It is most important that the prince's incognito be strictly preserved until tonight. If you will give me your word of honor to say nothing of this to any one until 8 o'clock this evening, I, in return, give you my word of honor that the prince, at that hour, will grant you an interview which I am sure you will find of interest. Do you agree?"

Dan reflected rapidly that he had nothing to lose by such an agreement; that 8 o'clock would release him from his promise in ample time to write his story; and the interview might really be important.

"Yes," he said; "I agree; but on one condition,"

"What is that?" demanded Pachmann, impatiently.

"That the interview be exclusive."

"Exclusive?" echoed Pachmann. "I do not understand."

"I mean by that that no one else is to get the interview but me," Dan explained.

A sardonic smile flitted across Pachmann's lips.

"I agree to the condition," he said. "And you on your part agree to say no word to any one; you are not to mention the appointment which I will make with you."

"I understand," said Dan "But, interview or no interview, I am to be released from the promise at 8 o'clock."

"Yes. Very well, then. I accept your word of honor, and I give you mine. At 7 o'clock tonight, you will call at the German consulate and ask for Admiral Pachmann. I shall be in waiting to conduct you to the prince."

"I thank you," said Dan, and walked away, treading on air Then another consideration occurred to him. All this was going to interfere with his evening with Kasia. He must see her and explain that he would be late. But an official stopped him at the gangway and explained that, under quarantine regulations, each class must keep to its own quarters until the boat had docked.

The delay was less than had been feared, for the illness in the steerage turned out to be well defined typhoid; so, at the end of two hours, the big ship began to move slowly up the harbor, with the passengers hanging over the rails, for the first glimpse of the great city. There was the green shore of Long Island; and then the hills of Staten island; and then, there to the left, loomed the Statue of Liberty, her torch held high. Dan took off his cap, his eyes moist; and then, as he glanced at the faces of his neighbors, he saw that they were all gazing raptly at the majestic figure, just as he had been. Most of them, no doubt, had seen it many times before; some of them, perhaps, had committed the sacrilege of climbing up into the head and scribbling their names there; they had glanced at her carelessly enough outward bound for Europe; but now she had for all of them new meaning—she typified the spirit of their fatherland, she welcomed them home.

And finally the wonderful skyline of New York towered far ahead, the web like structure of the Brooklyn bridge spanning the river to the right; little clouds of steam crowning with white the summits of the towering buildings, and 1,000,000 windows flashing back the sunlight. There is nothing else in the whole world like it, and the 1,000 passengers on the upper decks coming home, and the 1,000 men and women crowded on the lower deck, seeking fortune in a strange land—all alike gazed and marveled and were glad.

Then, with a battalion of tugs pushing and pulling and straining and panting, the ship swung in toward her dock, and soon she was near enough for those on board to see the faces of the waiting crowd, and there were cries of greeting and wavings of handkerchiefs, and the shedding of happy tears—for it is good to get home! And at last the great hawsers were flung out and made fast, and the voyage was ended.

At this moment, as at all others, the first cabin passengers had the precedence, and filed slowly down one gangplank, their landing tickets in their hands, while at another the stewards proceeded to yank off the hand baggage. Dan, leaning over the rail, watched the long line of passengers surging slowly forward, and finally he saw Kasia and her father. He would see them on the pier, of course, for it would take them some time to get their baggage through, and he could explain to Kasia about the other engagement. He followed them with his eyes — and then, with a gasp of astonishment, he perceived just behind them, also moving slowly down the gangplank, the prince and the man who had called himself Admiral Pachmann.

But those men could have nothing to do with Kasia! It was just an accident that they happened to be behind her. And then he grasped the rail and strained forward, scarcely able to believe his eyes. For Pachmann had spoken to Vard, who nodded and walked hurriedly on with him, while Kasia, with a mocking smile, tucked her hand within the prince's arm and fell into step beside him. Along the pier they hastened to the entrance gates, passed through, and were lost in the crowd outside.

Dan stood staring after them for yet a moment; then, with the careful step of a man who knows himself to be intoxicated, he climbed painfully to the boat deck, dropped upon a bench there, and took his head in his hands.

There, half an hour later, a steward found him.

"Beg pardon, sir," he said. "Are you ill?"

Dan looked up dazedly

"No," he said. "Why?"

"The passengers are all off, sir. If you have any luggage, you'd better be having it examined, sir."

"Thank you," said Dan, and got to his feet, descended to the lower deck, surrendered his landing ticket, and went unsteadily down the gangplank.

The pier was littered with baggage and crowded with distracted men and women watching the inspectors diving remorselessly among their tenderest possessions. Each was absorbed in his own affairs, and none of them noticed Dan's slow progress toward the little office of the chief inspector. After a short wait, an inspector was told off to look through his baggage, and, with Dan's declaration in his hand, led the way to the letter "W," where his two suit cases were soon found. Dan unlocked them, and stood aside while the inspector knelt and examined their contents. He was through in 10 minutes.

"Nothing here," he said, and rose. Then his eyes ran Dan up and down. "I see you have a small parcel in your coat pocket. May I see it?"

Without a word, Dan handed him the parcel. The inspector turned it over and examined the seals.

"What's in it?" he asked.

"A little electrical device," Dan answered.

"Well, I'll have to open it—it might be diamonds, for all I know."

"Go ahead," said Dan, and the inspector broke the seals, unwrapped the paper, and disclosed a small pasteboard box. He lifted the lid, glanced inside, and then looked at Dan.

"What is this? A joke?" he demanded.

"I don't understand," Dan stammered.

"You said it was an electrical device."

"That's what it is."

"Either you're crazy or I am," said the man; "and I don't think it's me," and he thrust the box under Dan's nose.

And Dan's eyes nearly leaped from his head, for the box contained a cake of soap, cut neatly to fit it, into which had been pressed a number of nickel coins.

Lloyds Guessed Wrong.

From Capper's Weekly.

Lest we underrate the job, here is a little ancient history. In April, 1915, the odds of "Lloyds" in London was 2 to 1 that the war would not end by June, 1915, but 10 to 1 that it would end before December, 1915, and 15 to 1 that it would not last until the spring of 1916.

In England all carts and wagons must bear the owner's name and address before being used in a public highway.

Americans Fighting in France

Lord Northcliffe in the Chicago Tribune

I do not suppose that there are very many people in this country who know what a large number of Americans have been fighting the Germans in France ever since the war began. You will before long have a very big and I am sure from what I have seen of them a very formidable force in the field. But you have had for three years and three months past a number of brave and adventurous young Americans putting their backs into the war alongside of the British and the French. That is how I am able to describe a visit to American troops on the French front, although you have not as yet officially taken your places on that front with the armies that you have raised for the crushing of the Prussian attempt at world domination.

In September, 1914.

The first time I came across Americans at the war was in September, 1914, only about a month after it had begun. During the battle of the Marne I was billeted in a village where there were a number of dispatch riders belonging to the British army. I was a good deal surprised to find that among them were many from the United States. On their motorcycles they were doing excellent work and thoroughly enjoying it.

Before this, in the very first days of the war, there had been numerous enlistments of Americans in the French foreign legion. It seemed as if every American young man living, or even staying as a visitor, in Paris, felt that he must be "in it." These also were rapidly turned into good soldiers. The French have testified over and over again to their pluck and endurance and other valuable fighting qualities. . .

The Flying Service.

There were, and still are, many Americans in the French and British flying services. American boys make very good airmen. They have cool heads and bold spirits. They very often know something about machinery, and readily pick up that technical knowledge of engines which is so useful to the driver of an airplane.

I am glad to say that hundreds of American airmen are now being trained by British officers, with many Canadians among them, at the great aviation camps in the province of Ontario, Canada. In a week or two these camps are to be moved to Texas, where flying is possible during the winter on account of the milder climate and the comparative absence of wind. There is no doubt that this close association of Americans and British flying men will have a good and lasting effect.

Fought Over London.

I heard a young American pilot who has served with the British army describe in New York the other day how he took part in repelling an air raid on London. He brought down one of the enemy machines with great skill and then, unfortunately, had the bad luck to be hit. He managed to get to ground without further mishap, but was in a hospital for some time and finally had to be invalided home. He is only one of many to whom the British nation is grateful for their services, given voluntarily and always with courageous devotion

Some few months ago I had the very interesting experience of visiting a Canadian regiment in which some hundreds of Americans were serving I paid this visit by request of Sir Douglas Haig, who has a high opinion of these American soldiers. They were coming out of the trenches one afternoon, after being in them for two horrible, muddy, dangerous weeks. I met them near the village where they were to be in rest billets for a short time. They came down a hillside through a wood of tall pine trees, came down with long steps and cheerful calls to one another, as if they had been having the easiest, happiest time in the world.

Obviously Americans.

It was easy to see what continent they came from Tall they were, and spare of figure, with long, serious jaws and far-seeing blue grey eyes. Release from the cramped positions and the tension of the trenches, where there was water two feet deep, and where the shelling was almost continuous, made them like schoolboys freed from their tasks. They were covered with mud. Some of them had their heads or arms bandaged But they were lithe and active, and when they were paraded for inspection before being dismissed to the cottages and barns in which they were to find quarters, they had a kind of smartness, in spite of their fatigue, in spite of their muddy appearance, which impressed me as a characteristic detail suggestive of the American continent.

Were Chewing Gum.

I noticed, by the way a number of them were working, and I heard afterward that the habit of chewing gum had been introduced among British and French soldiers by their American and Canadian comrades. The army doctors are inclined to think that it is quite a useful innovation, for they say that chewing gum has a soothing effect and anything which can quiet the nerves of men who are under the fire of trench mortar and mine throwers, of which familiarly "Minnies" from the German word "minenwerfer," is certainly one.

Those who are sending parcels to the soldiers of the American expeditionary force in France should certainly include packets of this sweet meat

Another thing which should always be put in is a home newspaper I mean local newspaper which gives the little details for which the boys at the front long so pathetically when they are away from home. They like to see what their friends are doing. They like to read about "church and chapel." They like to know that Miss Smith entertained tea for Miss Brown The boys at the front also like to have plenty of the world's great news in papers to tell them what is going on, but the local home paper is a gift for which they are always grateful.

What They Said.

I saw those American soldiers have a feast on some rather special occasion and talked with many of them. They assured me that they were very glad to be taking part in putting an end to the horrible organized savagery of the Prussian and that they were well looked after. They said they could not understand why there was at that time so much pro-German talk in the United States.

They called the Germans "slaughterers" and said, "If our people at home only knew what they are doing to French and Belgian women and children, they would certainly would agreed that the war should stop until the Prussians are driven out." They told me with glee how, when the Germans put our boards in front of their trenches with "Why not have peace talk" chalked on them, the only reply they got was a tremendous bombardment which cured them of that particular trick most effectively

About German Propaganda.

Another trick in which the Germans indulged with special reference to the Americans then fighting against them was to spread the report that the allies had hired them to fight The hire which they received amounted to $1.25 a day. This may have seemed a very large sum to the German mind The wages paid in Germany were notoriously small.

But the men with whom I talked in the pine forest and in the village close by were certainly not the kind of men who could be attracted by $1.25 a day into giving up their usual occupations. There were business men among them, real estate men, lumber men, university graduates, engineers. That silly Germany myth was, like so many of their inept attempts at propaganda a boomerang which has turned to hurt those who launched it.

A Third Lesson.

Now the German propaganda talk in the light of the American armies which are in training for the task of helping to win the war There is a stern warning in Holy Scripture against the folly of underestimating your enemy's strength. The Germans have already had two lessons which ought to have proved to them the wisdom of the biblical adage They said at the beginning as they had said for years before the war, that the French were worn out nation and could not stand in battle against them They called the British army "contemptible"

Let the American people remember these taunts That which the Germans are flinging in their insolence at the American armies will I know be proved in the same crushing and significant way.

NEED FOR GOOD FITTING SHOES.

An axiom frequently attributed to Napoleon was to the effect that an army traveled on its stomach. Surgeon Jones, of the United States army, says that, while that statement was true in olden times, it is not true now. Armies travel now upon their feet, he says. In olden times the limitation of an army lay in its difficulty in getting a food supply Now the machinery for provisioning an army is so well organized that the commanding general is not stopped by the limitations of his food supply. But he knows that he cannot crowd his men too far, else their feet will give out.

In one march on the Mexican border in which 17,000 men participated 21.5 per cent of those who fell out and had to be transported in ambulances or wagons failed because of poor feet.

In another march participated in by 11,000 the percentage was 58.39. In a study of the feet of 30,359 soldiers it was found that 21,586 had corns, 18,106 had toes that were jammed or crowded together, 1,481 had bunions, 2,145 had overriding toes, 8,751 had pinching in of the big toe with enlargement of the bones at the base joint, 3,644 had ingrowing toenails, 1,204 had hammer toes, 5,227 had collosities, and 18,463 had good feet.

It is to be remembered that the recruiting examiner throws out applicants with very bad feet, An equal number of civilians would have made a much worse showing.

Of these more than 30,000 men only 5,417 were wearing shoes which fitted them, 6,906 were wearing shoes that were one-half size too small, 14,492 had shoes that were one size or more too small, 3,511 had shoes that were too large.

The army shoe is very much the best shoe made. It was devised after a most careful study of the human foot in action made by the best men in the army. It is right in every way insofar as any shoe is right. The soldier is not only supplied with these shoes but he is instructed in shoes and the care of his feet.

If so large a proportion of soldiers wear shoes that do not fit, we can be certain that very few civilians wear properly fitting shoes. Especially is this true of adolescent boys and girls, and practically all of the ruining of feet is done in the years of adolescence. After that the poor cripples hobble through life paying the penalty of their youthful folly.

To properly fit a shoe the soldier stands on a scale which measures the length from heel to toe; 2 is added to the measurement on the scale. Then a tape line is used to measure the circumference around the ball of the foot. Then the shoe is tried on. It must be comfortable when the soldier stands with forty pounds of weight on his shoulder. The end of the great toe must not be less than two-thirds of an inch from the end of the shoe. The ball of the foot must not spread out broader than the sole when the weight is carried on the front of the foot and at the same time the shoe must not be too lose. If there are bunions, callosities, or corns, a shoe stretcher with adjustable knobs must be used to fit the shoe to the foot

Dr. Johnson's Views on "Woman."

From Boswell's "Johnson."

Mrs. Knowles affected to complain that men had much more liberty allowed to them than women.

Johnson—Why, Madam, women have all the liberty they should wish to have. They have all the labor and the danger, and the men all the advantage. We go to sea, we build houses, we do everything, in short, to pay our court to the women.

Mrs. Knowles—The doctor reasons wittily, but not convincingly Now, for the instance of building the mason's wife if she is ever seen in liquor, is ruined; the mason may get himself drunk as often as he pleases, with little loss of character, nay, may let his wife and children starve.

Johnson—Madam, you must consider the mason does get himself drunk, and his wife and children starve, the world will oblige him to find security for their maintenance. We have different modes of restraining evil Stocks for the men, a ducking stool for women, and a pound for beasts. If we require more perfection from women than from ourselves, it is by doing them honor And women have the same temptations that we have; they may always live in virtuous company men must mix in the world indiscriminately. If a woman has no inclination to what is wrong, being secured from it by no restraint to her * * *

Mrs. Knowles—Still, Doctor, I cannot help thinking it a hardship that more indulgence is allowed to men than to women. It gives a superiority to men which I do not see how they are entitled to.

Johnson—It is plain, Madam, that the other must have the superiority, as Shakespeare says "If two men ride on a horse, one must ride behind."

Our Representatives Overseas.

Lyman P. Powell, in the Review of Reviews.

America's official representatives are in high favor for their own intrinsic worth. Said an English officer to me at the meeting in London of the "Eagle Hut." "This country has had such able representatives in London as America. Lowell, Bayard Hay, Choate, Reid and now Mr. Page, second in discretion and good sense to none." When I was at the seat of the Belgian government I heard Brand Whitlock and after a day with him I could only subscribe to all of them. Mr. Sharp is serving us in Paris with the same sane and forethoughtful efficiency and when a party group were with him and Joffre one day waiting for a half hour a Frenchman remarked to me, "the two are much alike," which was the highest praise a Frenchman could bestow.

"Shoddy" Not So Bad.

From the Youth's Companion.

A word, like a person, finds it hard to live down a bad reputation. In the textile trade "shoddy" means the fibers recovered from the disintegration of woolen cloth—good, serviceable material. Yet no manufacturer dares to label his goods as "shoddy," for to the public at large the word means something false and trashy It is not strange that the manufacturers are hunting for a substitute word that has no disagreeable meaning.

GREAT MEN.

Ruskin

All great men not only know their business but usually know that they know it, are not only right in their main opinions, but they usually know that they are right in them only, they do not think much of themselves on that account. Arnolfo knows that he can build a good dome at Florence; Albert Durer writes calmly to one who had found fault with his work, "It cannot be better done," Sir Isaac Newton knows that he has worked out a problem or two that would have puzzled anyone else;—only, the" do not expect their fellowmen therefore to fall down and worship them, they have a curious under sense that the greatness is not in them, but through them

Iowa's "Pumpkin Slingers."

Although the wooden guns handed out to the "rookies" at the various army cantonments when the mobilization of the national army began were a source of much amusement to the soldiers they were at least safe for the men who handled them

That is more than can be said of the guns given to an Iowa regiment at the beginning of the civil war "These guns," according to a pamphlet published by the State Historical society, "were more dangerous to friend than foe. They were of uneven caliber and many of them had crooked barrels. Concerning these, one Dutch member of an Iowa company said: 'One might be killed more as 10 or 12 times before de tam dings would shoot off.' The men in the regiment called them 'pumpkin slingers,' and pronounced the barrels as 'adapted to shooting around hills.'

"Other arms furnished included Rifled muskets, Prussian muskets, Belgian rifles, Harper's Ferry muskets, Spencer carbines, Sharp carbines, Colt revolvers, navy revolvers, Whitworth rifles, Colt revolving rifles, Minie rifles, Springfield muskets, Garibaldi rifled muskets, French rifles and many other brands of antiquated arms."

Power of Big Guns.

From the Chicago Journal

We hear much and have read more about the power of big guns and havoc they create, yet few people really understand the immense power behind one of these modern engins of destruction What do you understand by the "power of a 15-inch gun?" Here is an illustration Take a wall 12 inches thick and made of the hardest steel then take an automobile and drive seven miles away from the wall Arrived at that point you will find a big gun aimed at the wall you have left seven miles behind and which you cannot see Go over to the gun and pull the lanyard This steel that you release by pulling this lanyard will travel through the air the entire distance you have come by automobile and will go right through the 12-inch steel wall The most powerful land guns ever made are the German howitzers or 16.5-inch guns. The most formidable steel and concrete forts are cracked open by these huge guns as though they were made of paper Naval guns cannot be developed to the same size as land guns because it is more difficult to handle one of these aboard a ship For that reason the greatest effective range with a naval gun is from eight to 10 miles The largest naval gun is the 15-inch gun on the famous British superdreadnaught Queen Elizabeth. These great guns fire projectiles which weigh a ton The United States however, now has guns defending the Panama canal and New York which hurl through the air a mass of metal weighing almost 400 pounds more than the British superdreadnaught's guns.

Making Kultur Hum.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger

Always ready to make 'a few remarks' on public occasions, the kaiser spoke in a particularly felicitous vein at the banquet in Constantinople with his great and good friend the sultan of Turkey He referred eloquently to the privilege he had enjoyed in standing upon ground "where Turkish forces by land and sea performed immortal, glorious deeds." Truly he could have said no more had he been visiting Armenia, nor have more deeply appreciated the honor of being made a field marshal in the Turkish army His expression of resolute confidence that the war would be brought "to a happy conclusion" must have been deeply consoling to Mohammed V, who has been able to get little consolation of late from the progress of his arms. "In peace time our peoples will be welded still more firmly together," the kaiser added, "in the peaceful work of kultur" This graceful recognition of the similarity of German and Turkish civilization was richly deserved. Kultur would have a great chance all through Asia Minor if these two congenial allies could win the war

The U-Boat Verdun.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

Between January and October, 1917 Germany perhaps sank 3,000,000 tons of shipping in excess of the new bottoms set afloat in that period That is a guess, for official figures are inconclusive and baffling, but good judges put it at something like that

This is a very grave loss, for there are only about 25,000,000 tons engaged in Atlantic carrying

We know how American railroads, coordinating for war have made a given equipment of cars and locomotives perform decidedly greater service than before by insisting on a full load for every car, and so on Since war was declared, with but little increase in equipment they have moved about one-fourth more freight than before. To a degree the same thing has happened at sea every ton performs more service than before And under war pressure shipyards are rapidly nearing the point where they will overtake the submarine

But, even with destruction at this height, comparisons of official figures suggests that the chance of a ship's being sunk in the war zone is about one out of 300. Arrivals, departures and sinkings, as officially reported, give odds of 125 to one against a ship's being attacked, while, when an attack occurs, the odds in favor of the submarine are only three to two—quoting from the Journal of Commerce, which recently made an elaborate compilation and comparison of ally admiralty reports.

The U-boat embarrasses Germany's enemies; but as a means of ending the war it is turning out another Verdun.

Other Uses for Grapes.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

Other usese for wine grapes than for wine making have been discovered or are being perfected, that it is expected will reduce to a minimum any loss that may be threatened the wine grape grower by complete prohibition legislation, according to Frederick T. Bioletti, head of the viticultural department of the University of California.

It has been found that a good quality of grape syrup for preserving fruits, and other uses, can be made from wine grapes and that it is estimated that this sirup, if found marketable, should bring the grape grower at least $15 a ton for his grapes. This is considerably more than the grape grower has been receiving in recent years. It has also been shown that commercial alcohol can be very profitably made from grapes, said Franklin Hichborn, manager of the California prohibition campaign.

FALSE TALES TO DISCOURAGE GIFTS

German Propaganda in East St Louis Breaks Out Anew.

East St. Louis, Mo.—Here is the latest German propaganda which is being circulated in East St. Louis and vicinity in an attempt to discourage relatives and friends of soldiers from providing them with comforts for the winter.

In order to make the tale more interesting an East St. Louis woman is supposed to play the principal part. In brief, she is supposed to have recently sent to her son, who is in a training camp, a nice warm sweater which she had spent much time on in knitting.

How It Goes.

A week or so after she is supposed to have sent it she visit the son at the camp

"Where is the sweater I sent you?" she is heard to ask

"What sweater?" queries the son, bewildered.

He tells her he had heard nothing of a sweater, although many parcel post packages had arrived in camp of late.

And then the mother and son start out The son is showing her about the camp when they come upon the captain of the son's company

"Why, there's your sweater," the mother is supposed to whisper to him. "That's the one I sent to you."

"Well, let it go at that," replies the son, so the story goes. "You are aware what would happen to me if I accused a superior officer of such a thing"

There are various finales to the story. It is all according to the imagination of who is telling it.

Stories All Colored.

Similar stories have reached the ears of federal agents stationed here. They are all colored and twisted so as to suit local affairs. Most of the weird tales going the rounds in East St. Louis concern the boys of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth field artillery, the East St. Louis volunteer regiment encamped at Houston, Tex.

Anyone who knows of anyone else who circulates such stories should immediately report to the police or federal authorities

South American Trade Triples.

Trade between the United States and South America is three times as great as in the year before the war A compilation of the National City bank, of New York, shows that the total exports to that continent in the eight months ending with August (the latest month for which figures are available) aggregated $188,000,000 against $65,000,000 in the same months of 1914 and the imports from South America were $43,000,000 against $157,000,000 in the same months of 1914 Thus the total trade with that continent in the eight months of 1917 was $620,000,000 against $222,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1914

To Argentina Chile and Peru the exports have more than trebled and to Uruguay quadrupled while to Brazil, Colombia Ecuador and Venezuela the exports are nearly three times as great as in 1914. To Argentina the total for the eight months ending with August 1917 is $62,256,000 against $19,649,000 in the same months of 1914 to Brazil $40,157,000 against $15,973,000, to Chile $32,973,000 against $10,900,000 in the corresponding months of 1914.

Imports from each of the South American countries show large increases, but especially those from Argentina Uruguay, Chile and Peru. From Argentina the imports of the eight months of the current year are $133,869,000 against $40,752,000 in the same months of 1914 from Chile, $96,426,000 against $15,954,000 from Uruguay $28,389,000 against $8,522,000 and from Brazil, $106,335,000 against $36,633,000 in the corresponding months of 1914

This increase continues down to the very latest moment for which figures available, the August, 1917, exports to all South America having been $24,888,000 against $5,312,000 in August, 1914, and the imports from that continent in August, of the current year $49,336,000 against $15,096,000 in August, of 1914.

The share which the United States is now supplying of the trade of South America is very much greater than before the war. The bank's compilation shows that merchandise from the United States formed about 30 per cent of the imports of all South America in 1916, while in 1913 we supplied but 15 per cent of the total imports of that continent. The United States took in the calendar year, 1916, approximately 30 per cent of the exports of South America, and in 1913 but 17 per cent

The principal articles in which the growth occurs are, on the import side, wool, hides, copper, nitrate, India rubber, quebracho, coffee, cacao. Or wool, our imports from all South America in the eight months ending with August 1917 amounted to $98,000,000 value against only $11,000,000 in the same months of 1914, hides $54,000,000 in 1917 against $21,000,000 in the same months of 1914, copper $56,000,000 against $9,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1914, quebracho $6,000,000 against $2,500,000, and nitrate $36,000,000 against $11,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1914. In fresh meats the imports from South America have fallen off very greatly from approximately $7,000,000 in the full year 1914 to $250,000 in the eight months ending with August, 1917, even at the greatly increased prices.

Fewer Newspapers.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

For 20 years the number of newspapers and periodicals in the United States has been steadily declining, relatively to population. In the last decade or so the number of daily newspapers has notably decreased. A contemporary reports that, though the population of the 14 largest cities in Michigan has doubled, the number of daily papers has fallen from 42 to 23.

No doubt like causes have produced a like effect elsewhere. Quite recently consolidations of dailies in first class cities have attracted attention. The number of considerable cities with no morning paper and of still bigger places with only one morning paper appears to increase. Within our recollection, five morning papers have disappeared from Chicago, though the population of the city has much more than doubled.

The cause, of course, is the steadily increasing cost of establishing and publishing a newspaper. The investment which formerly would have launched a daily paper in Chicago or New York now hardly suffices for Kalamazoo, and operating costs are so high that a paper must win very substantial support or lose a lot of money.

War has greatly increased operating costs by raising the price of paper, other materials and labor. Probably these war costs have been a governing motive in some recent consolidations. The new revenue law, which not only increases postal charges enormously but provides for a zone system, falls heavily on newspaper profits, and will presumably accelerate the movement toward consolidation, sectionalism and elimination.

BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP

Why use ordinary cough remedies, when Boschee's German Syrup has been used so successfully for fifty-one years in all parts of the United States for coughs, bronchitis, colds settled in the throat, especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning, gives nature a chance to soothe the inflamed parts, throw off the disease, helping the patient to regain his health. Sold in all civilized countries, 30 and 90 cent bottles.—Adv.

False Limbs for Animals.

A new invention of artificial legs for horses, mules and dogs was offered to the Philadelphia branch of the Red Star Animal Relief by a French-American veteran who refuses to disclose his name.

This man, who, since the war started has taken 21 trips to Europe with horses for France claims that although the horse or mule will no longer be good for active service, it may be used for light farm work if these legs are used.

The leg, or crutch which has been used successfully in the United States, is made of steel, with a special quadrant spring imitating the vertical and lateral flexings of the ankle and fetlock By means of this many crippled horses and mules, which would otherwise be killed, will be given a chance to live

NEW AUTOMATIC LIGHT BUOY

Produces Its Own Electric Current and Requires Only Casual Attention Being Operated at Small Cost.

Because an automatic light buoy designed by an inventor of marine apparatus produces its own electric current and demands only casual attention, the cost of maintaining it amounts to practically nothing, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Its mechanism is not complicated. A vertical shaft mounted on ball bearings is actuated by a weighted horizontal arm that swings back and forth as the buoy is rocked by the waves. The motion is transmitted through gears to a high-tension magneto. Each time the weights swing either to the left or the right, the generator makes a few quick turns and develops a strong spark that passes through a gas-filled glass tube and produces a bright flash of light.

Obviously the strength and frequency of the flashes increase as the sea grows rougher

The primatic outer cylinder of the lamp is red, blue, or any desired color There is no filament in the gas-filled tube

Fort Fairfield, Maine.—"For many months I suffered from backache caused by female troubles so I was unable to do my house work. I took treatments for it but received no help whatever. Then some of my friends asked why I did not try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and my backache soon disappeared and I felt like a different woman, and now have a healthy little baby girl and do all my house work. I will always praise Lydia E. Continue Winter Fishing.

Owing to the esotablishment of additional cold storage plants in Newfoundland, it is probable that the winter fishery will be continued in Placentia, Trinity and Bonavista bays, as well as on the southwest coast, until the ice obstructs operations. It is said that this is an opportune time further to develop turbot fishing in he deep waters of Trinity bay.

A store that gives real attention to your personal wants—

Because a specialist is in charge of each department.

Boys clothing—mens clothing, hats and caps, shirts, ties, pajamas and night robes, underwear and work clothes. One man as the head of each department giving his entire energy and thought to his line. Bringing concentrated effort upon the one proposition, then, each department head, under the general guidance of the management. Don't you think the highest service, the most in quality, the fullest measure of results, "in all ways" are to be obtained in this way for your money?

Each department head studies the wants of the trade—studies to yield the "top value" for money coming through his division. "Top value to you" is the managements methods of determining the value to the store of a "department head." It's the only way we can grow. We are growing daily.

Klemme Commercial League

Klemme, Iowa,

Nov. 28th, 1917.

Dear Sir:-

The Klemme Chapter of the Red Cross Association is going to make a special effort to raise a sufficient sum of money so that the Klemme Chapter can supply it's proportionate share of the great world needs.

Our neighboring towns have all done splendidly and let every one in both Ell and German Township put their shoulders to the wheel and try to outdo our neighbors as this Red Cross work is one of the greatest causes for which one can strive.

We are planning on a great Auction Sale which will be known as the "Klemme Red Cross Day" and our plan is this—to have each farmer give something or rather donate something to this sale which is to be sold on December 8th, 1917 in Klemme. We want every farmer to donate something that will help the Red Cross to realize a little money—give us a few chickens, a pig, a calf or perhaps a bushel of corn or oats or whatever you feel like giving—each business man will be called upon to give something of which he has in stock to donate towards this sale.

We are going to try and make this sale day December 8th one of the big red letter days in the history of Klemme and we want each and every one in the two townships turn out to this sale and help us make it the biggest success of any Red Cross day held in any town of the state.

Now there will be a committee out to see you and will take a list of what you will be willing to give toward making this sale a success—they will call on you some time during the next week or ten days and we kindly ask that you let them wait on you promptly when they come so as not to take up much of their time as they will have a large territory to cover it as quickly as possible. This committee is donating their time and labor besides money as well and if they are willing to do this let us be willing to give amply and those who are simply giving have the advantage of saving their time. Now in this great thanksgiving week let us not forget that this is one of the great mission causes in the world and let us all be thankful that we can stay by our firesides and let us not forget those boys at the front who are making it possible for us to enjoy this security and give them a helping hand and comfort in time of need.

Remember, let us all turn out to this sale on Desember 8th and make it a big success. Sale starts at 1:30 o'clock sharp.

Very truly,

There is a good anecdote of an Irishman giving the password at the battle of Fontenoy, at the time the great Saxe was marshal. "The password is Saxe; now, don't forget it," said the colonel. "Saxe; faith, I won't. Wasn't my father a miller?" "Who goes there?" cried the sentry, after he had arrived at the pass. The Irishman looked as confidential as possible and whispered in a sort of howl: "Bags, yer honor."

Klemme Soldier Dies at Deming

OBITUARY

Benjamin Talmage Schaefer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edd. Schaefer, was born March the 31st, 1896, in German township, Hancock county, Iowa, and died at Deming, New Mexico, November 30, 1917. He had a humble disposition and was of a quiet nature, a very kind and obedient son and brother. He attended church and Sunday school from his earliest childhood boyhood and manhood years. He loved and honored the place where his father and mother worshipped. He had been taught at his mother's knee how to pray and the beauty and power of a prayer life became more and more real to him as he grew older He realized that the only life worth living was one in fellowship and sweet communion with God through Jesus Christ and without God life was not worth while. At a revival meeting held in the Germantown church in the winter of 1912 he consecrated his life and all to the Master's service and his desire was that his life might become more and more like the life of the Christ he loved and endeavored to serve Ben was raised in a Christian home and everything that was of an evil or sinful nature that might prove a temptation to him was kept away from him which gave him the opportunity to grow to manhood without forming any evil habits. He was a member of the Germantown congregation, a member of the Epworth League and Sunday School.

After this country became involved in the European war and his country demanded young men for her army he responded to his country's call and was drafted into the United States Army the 20th of September, 1917, and placed in Co. E, Division 350 Infantry, and stationed at Camp Dodge at Des Moines. October 31st, he left Camp Dodge with many of his comrades for Deming, New Mexico, and was placed in Co. B, Division 126, Machine Gun Battalion. While there he took sick with the measles which later developed into pneumonia which caused his death. He leaves to mourn his death his father, mother, two brothers, one sister, two grandfathers, two sisters-in-law, twenty-seven cousins, eleven uncles, twelve aunts, besides many friends and comrades who mourn with the bereaved parents.

Funeral services were held at the German M E. church at 1:30 o'clock. Rev. Meyer conducted the services. The remains were laid at rest in the Klemme Cemetery.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

The department of astronomy and astrophysics at the University of Chicago is making preparation for observing the total eclipse of the sun which will be one of the six to occur in the United States during the present century. This total eclipse will be visible on June 8, 1918 over a narrow strip, having a maximum width of about 60 miles and extending from the state of Washington through parts of Oregon, Wyoming and Idaho, across Colorado and Kansas and finally reaching Florida about sunset. The duration of totality will be two minutes and two seconds at the coast of Washington, and less than half that time in Florida.

A traveling bathtub in a motor car, manned by an American doctor and a Red Cross nurse, is on its way through the devasted district around Nesle, France carrying medical aid and soap to 1,200 undernourished, unsmiling little French children who swarm over a group of seven villages. While the doctor pumps water through the shower the nurse scrubs. As the child whitens the water blackens. At the finish the rubber shower tube is suddenly shifted into a bucket of fresh cold water and the bath ends with an unexpected douse accompanied by screams and squeals.

The principal entente belligerents have about 170,000 motor cars and the central powers have 130,000 engaged in the war. The cars in use by the entente powers are distributed as follows: England 30,000 including 15,000 for conveyance of supplies; France 80,000, including 25,000 for carrying supplies; Russia 40,000 including 20,000 for carrying supplies; Italy 10,000 including 4,000 for carrying supplies; Belgium 10,3000; Roumania, 1,700 and Serbia 125.

Gardeners who had only evenings in which to care for their vegetable patches, were handicapped by the little daylight allowed them. With this difficulty in view a New Orleans electrical company has put on the market a light which readily lights a fair sized garden. The light is mounted on a pole and its glow intensified by a reflector. The lower end of the pole is pointed and set deeply in the soft soil. The plug may be attached to a socket within the house.

When the former czar was asked to state his wishes as to the course the railway which connects Petrograd and Moscow, should take he drew a perfectly straight line between the two capitals and the engineers proceeded accordingly, although they had many natural difficulties to overcome and the expense would have been much less if they had made some deviations. This is probably the longest straight railway line in the world.

The Harvard graduate school of business administration in cooperation with the department of forestry announces a course in the lumber business for college graduates who look forward to undertaking some branch of lumbering and also to graduates who desire special instruction in the lumber business. The course covers two years and is open on graduates to receive a degree of master in business administration.

The average sized American walrus is as big as an ox and often weighs more than a ton. A walrus was recently killed by some whalers near Point Barrow whose head weighed 80 pounds, and skin including flippers 500 pounds. The animal had a girth of 14 feet the skin was from half an inch to three inches in thickness and the blubber weighed 500 pounds.

It was the traveling circus of Baron Von Richthofen made up of 40 or more airplanes, which surrounded Captain Guynemer the French aviator and succeeded in killing him. It has been the method of these air soldiers to travel in large parties and surround allied machines. Circling about they prevent their escape and finally shoot down their adversary.

There were 5,848,930 forest trees raised at the four state nurseries in New Zealand during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1917, and 5,419,569 trees were planted in the eight government plantations of the dominion covering 2,760 acres. The total area planted since the start of operations in 1896 is 29,992 acres.

In the vault of the United States land office at Springfield, Mo., are 1,500 undelivered patents to government lands aggregating 150,000 acres, and an effort is being made to find the patentees, else the titles to the land involved will always be imperfect. Some of the patents are dated prior to the civil war.

The stock of gold in the United States, as estimated by the treasury, reached its low point during the war at the end of 1914 and its high point at the end of last June. From $1,887,200,000 on August 1 1914 it declined to $1,815,900,000 on January 1915 rose to $2,600,600,000 on July 1 1917 and stood on Dec 1 at $2,035,300,000.

In the urgent deficiency appropriation bill passed by congress the appropriation for the transportation of the army and its supplies was fixed at $375,000,000 by the conferees. In the original House bill the proposed appropriation was $750,000,000. The Senate increased it to $512,000,000 and the conferees agreed to a compromise.

A new project of American engineers is a giant canal 250 miles long, to connect the Arctic ocean and the Baltic sea extending from Kondalaska on the White sea to Tornea near the Swedish frontier, on the Gulf of Finland. The cost is estimated at $150,000,000.

Many young women of England have formed a league of honor, each promising "by the help of God to do all that is in my power to uphold the honor of our empire and its defenders in this time of war by prayer, purity, temperance and self-denial."

The four biggest firms in the United States, doing a business of nearly $150,000,000 a year, depend on nickels and dimes. There are four 5 and 10 cent stores in this country that made sales last year of $87,000,444 from nickels and dimes.

Birmingham is the headquarters of the glass eye trade in England, and that city has brought its manufacture of this particular article to great perfection. Eyes are sent to all parts of the world.

Coal to the amount of more than 150,000 tons has been taken in boats down the Ohio river, from the mines on the Kanawha river, to Cincinnati and vicinity during the last two months by the aid of artificial rises in the river produced by drawing water from the pools formed by the dams above Huntington, W., Va.

Against the $797,630,000 federal reserve notes outstanding, the law requires a gold reserve of 40 per cent, or $319,052,000. But the gold actually held to secure them, in the hands of the reserve agent or reserve board, amounts to $560,111,000.

WEST LIBERTY HAS TERRIBLE TRAGEDY

Wife and Mother Murdered and Husband Commits Suicide Thanksgiving Day.

West Liberty Ia., Dec 1.—While preparing Thanksgiving dinner for her four children Mrs. Albert Dunlap was shot and killed by her husband. Dunlap then committed suicide.

Unknown to his family, Dunlap secreted himself in the cellar of the residence during the morning. His wife went to the cellar to get some coal and as she reached the top of the stairs with the coal, Dunlap shot. She fell backwards down the stairs, where Dunlap again shot her twice. He then shot himself in the head.

In a drunken frenzy, Dunlap drove his wife from home several weeks ago. He was sentenced to 30 days in the county jail on charges of assault and battery brought by his wife.

Dunlap's mother was at the residence assisting her daughterinlaw in the preparation of a Thanksgiving dinner at the time of the shooting. She went at once to the cellar, but both her son and his wife were dead when she found them. Four small children survive.

Suit for divorce had been filed by Mrs. Dunlap and officers here say the man had threatened to kill his wife at the time she caused his arrest a month ago. He is said to have habitually failed to support his family and Mrs. Dunlap did washing to provide for herself and children. Dunlap and his wife were about 35 years old and had lived all their lives in this community.

LOSSES SUSTAINED IN STORM LAKE BLAZE

Storm Lake Ia Dec 1.—A summary of the losses sustained in the fire here yesterday morning is as follows: E. L. Banion building $70,000. B. B. Fiscus, furniture stock $30,000. George Cattermole implement stock, $10,000; T. H. Chapman, law library $500. A. L. Whitney law library $1,000. Judge James Deland law library, $500. F. F. Faville law library, $5,000. Storm Lake Lumber company $20,000. G. M. Triplett drug stock $10,000. Dr. E. J. Schultz $2,000. Steffen Bros. garage $2,000. R. Reynolds, confectionery $800. Mrs. J. C. Cleaveland, building $2,000. L. S. Dlugosch building, $12,000. Park Bros. building and postoffice fixtures, $30,000. Masonic lodge, third floor of Park building furniture and all records, $7,500. Mrs. Mary Scharz building $500. Commercial National bank, $1,000. D. G. Lagrange $500. Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul railway depot $6,000.

The losses are about half covered by insurance and a large part of the Chapman and Whitney libraries were saved, but the entire library of F. F. Faville was destroyed as was the drug store of G. M. Triplett and the corporate stock of F. E. Fiscus.

RED CROSS ROOSTER SELLS FOR $1,268.00

Fonda Ia. Dec 1.—A most unique observance of Thanksgiving day took place here when the farmers and merchants went together and contributed live stock and merchandise for a great auction sale which was held on the streets yesterday afternoon. The record price for the sale was made by a White Leghorn rooster donated by F. Beal of the chicken fancier which was sold and resold until he netted $1,268. The auction totaled $3,800.

A kangaroo court was held during the afternoon and various visitors from out of town were fined the mayor of Fonda acting being the first victim. He was charged with having broken a small pox quarantine.

A big turkey dinner and supper was served by the ladies of the Red Cross at which over 2,000 were served. Bazar and carnival features were pulled off during the afternoon and a big Red Cross ball closed the day's festivities.

GRAND JURY OF IDA COUNTY DID BUSINESS

Ida Grove Ia., Dec 1. The grand jury for the November term of the district court finished its business by returning two indictments against parties in the western part of the county. Harry Cooper for taking goods from an officer and M. L. Gordon for selling and concealing mortgaged property. The grand jury also returned another bill against Alfred Hoffman, the young Ida county farmer who was indicted at a recent term of court for assault on a hired man with intent to commit great bodily injury. A jury was obtained in this case and a part of the evidence heard when it was taken from the jury by Judge Alberts and sent back to the grand jury on an error made in the indictment. In all the grand jury returned five indictments, including those against Ernest Rathburn and Ray O'Meara on a charge of rape.

CRAWFORD COUNTY TO HAVE FARM AGENT

Denison Ia Dec 1.—Crawford county is to have a farm agent whose salary is to be paid by the federal government. The undertaking has been canvassed in the county and more than the needed number of farmers have said that they would cooperate with the agent the coming year. Every member is to pay $5, which goes to pay the traveling expenses of the agent. A mass meeting in the interests of the movement will be held at Denison tomorrow.

SIOUX RAPIDS SENDS SIX MORE YOUNG MEN

Sioux Rapids, Ia., Dec 1.—Six more Sioux Rapids young men have joined the colors. Berger Peterson has gone into the navy, while A. E. Rolland, Elmer Bray, Clarence Hageman, "Shorty" Geiger and B. M. Burlington, Ia., Nov. 30.—Following the statement of his mother to the coroner that her testimony at the inquest was false, Joe McKinney, the Des Moines county farmer boy, held in custody on suspicion of having murdered his brother Albert, broke down and confessed to Sheriff Earnest. McKinney claims he acted in self defense.

BORN IN GERMANY HE CAN'T ENLIST

Omaha, Neb., Nov 30.—Carl Offe, of Wall Lake, Ia., wants to fight the kaiser, but the government won't let him because he was born in Germany. He came here to enlist in the marine service, but found his German birth barred him.

Otto is 18 years old and came to this country when he was 8 years old. His father died in Germany. His mother, who lives at Wall Lake, has not been naturalized and the son declared she has pro-German sympathies, while he is ready and anxious to do his bit for this country.

STORM LAKE VISITED BY $200,000 BLAZE

Thanksgiving Morning Fire of Unknown Origin Is Worst in Town's History.

Storm Lake, Ia., Nov 29.—Fire discovered in the E. L. O'Danion real estate office at 3:30 o'clock this morning, destroyed property valued at approximately $200,000 before it was extinguished at daybreak. The cause of the fire is a mystery. It is the worst fire in the history of Storm Lake.

The principal losers are as follows:

E. L. O'Danion, real estate office.

Lane-Moore Lumber company, yards and office building.

Masonic Temple, three-story building.

The following concerns, located in the Masonic Temple, were also losers:

E. B. Fiscus, furniture store.

G. M. Triplett, drug store.

F. F. Faville, law office.

Dr. E. J. Schultz, dentist.

Park Bros., architects.

Steffin Garage company.

United States postoffice.

It is still too early to learn the individual losses and the amounts of insurance they carried.

A heavy wind blew part of the time the fire was in progress and firebrands were carried long distances. At one time the roof of the C. M. & St. P. depot was on fire but that blaze was quickly extinguished and without material damage being done to the building.

DES MOINES—A salaried inspector of explosives for the state of Iowa is soon to be appointed by the federal department or bureau of mines which has under its jurisdiction the enforcement of the new explosives law. Under this law all persons who handle explosives must be licensed.

GLIDDEN—Glidden, the home of Iowa's first war martyr—Merle Hay—will not tolerate the teaching of German in the public schools. A petition, signed by more than 300 residents, will be presented to the board of education, asking that body to oust the German courses.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

DEMAND IOWA COAL PRICES BE LOWERED

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 30.—Iowa has appealed to President Wilson for a reduction in the prices fixed by the federal coal administration on coal in Iowa, declaring that the rates fixed are excessive and have increased instead of decreased the prices charged consumers.

The public hearing conducted by the governor and the league of municipalities was continued indefinitely, pending a reply to the appeal to the president.

The message to President Wilson set forth the nature of the Iowa hearing, and said in part:

"From the information before us we find that the extreme cost of production at the mouth of the mine is $2.25 per ton at the present time, mine run. Operators appearing before us testified to costs at the present time ranging from $1.90 to $2.25 per ton. This includes labor, supplies, depreciation and other costs.

"The record also shows that under normal conditions operators have been satisfied with a profit over cost of production at the mouth of the mine of from 10 to 12½ cents per ton, whereas, the present maximum fixed price does permit of profits aggregating more than 100 per cent on the investment in these properties. This was conceded of record by actual operators, under oath on the witness stand."

TWO IDA GROVE MEN HELD ON INDICTMENTS

Ida Grove Ia Nov 30. The Ida county grand jury returned three indictments against Ernest Rathburn and Ray O'Meara, youths each about 20 years of age, sons of wealthy parents, who are accused of decoying 16-year-old Ida Knudson and 17-year-old Elsie Hargens into an automobile and assaulting them. An indictment for rape was returned against each young man and a joint indictment for conspiracy.

They were immediately rearrested on bench warrants issued by Judge Marcon Hutchinson. Their bond will be increased from $5,000 to $20,000 each. County Attorney J. A. Murphy is being assisted in these cases by Assistant Attorney General James Kindig. Prior to the meeting of the grand jury State Agents O. O. Rock, of Logan and J. S. Risden of Cedar Rapids were here gathering evidence.

CAMP DODGE MEN GET WARMER CLOTHING

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 30.—Soldiers at Camp Dodge are warm today in spite of the wintry weather. That's because the chilly ones got some knitted articles yesterday from the Red Cross.

Maybe a few were left out, but they will get their share of wristlets, sweaters and socks as soon as their names can be secured. The distribution Monday was conducted by John L. Griffin, who is in charge of Red Cross work at the cantonment. He gave out 5,396 sweaters, 1,411 wristlets, 1,111 pairs of socks and 100 scarfs.

DRAFT LAW EVADER TO FEDERAL PRISON

Man Arrested Near Devil's Lake, N. D., Convicted by a Courtmartial.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 29.—Felix Thornton, I. W. W. organizer, and draft law evader, has been sentenced to 10 years in the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, following a verdict of guilty on charges of desertion by a general courtmartial in the Eighty-eighth division of the national army at Camp Dodge.

Thornton is one of four draft evaders arrested a month ago near Devils Lake, N. D. where it is said they were attempting to reach the Canadian line. They were brought to Camp Dodge and turned over to officers of the Eighty-eighth division for examination. An opportunity to serve was offered Thornton, according to Maj. W. A. Graham, division judge advocate, but he refused, replying in a sneering manner to the questions put to him by the examining boards.

ALLEGED LIQUOR TOTER ARRESTED AT IDA GROVE

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 29.—The alleged theft of a motor car to meet a homecoming bootlegger resulted in the arrest of Walter Anderson and Edward Barnhart and the issuing of a warrant for the arrest of Eddie O'Brien. Anderson and O'Brien are alleged to have stolen an automobile Saturday night from J. M. Kennedy and to have driven to Denison where they met Barnhart with two satchels of whisky which, it is charged, he imported from St. Joseph, Mo. Returning to Ida Grove, they wrecked the car and abandoned it in the road, according to the police. J. W. Kindig, assistant attorney general, will prosecute Barnhart for bootlegging and Anderson and O'Brien for robbery.

LIQUOR CASES WILL BE GIVEN PRECEDENCE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 29.—Liquor cases will be put first on the docket in the court here. Breaking and entering cases, robbery and other offenses will be superseded by liquor violation litigation. The chief of police says that when bootlegging cases have to wait the witnesses get away and it is hard to produce the evidence. Because of the efforts to keep the town free of liquor, more especially because of the soldiers, he says all are cooperating to put liquor cases through promptly.

ALTA WOMAN KILLED IN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Alta, Ia. Nov 29.—Mrs. George Ericksen was killed in an automobile accident near here when the car skidded in the snow. Mr. Eriksen was injured, but the infant babe of the pair was uninjured. Death ensued before help could be secured, as the occupants of the car were pinned under the machine.

This is the third of a series of automobile accidents which have happened here within a few days. Joe Gregg and Jim Nooman, of Cherokee, collided with Gus Oatman south of Alta. Gregg sustaining a broken arm and the others severe cuts. Both cars were smashed. Harold Nelson collided with a car on the Storm Lake road receiving severe cuts about the head. The two cars smashed.

FORMER TREASURER NOW SUES THE COUNTY

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov. 29.—The board of county supervisors has received a shock in the form of a claim against the county for $10,975.18, filed by J. P. Christensen, republican county treasurer for four years up until January 1 when he was succeeded by Fred Maxfield, democrat.

The claim represents fees which Christensen says are due him for collections on township and county road taxes from 1913 to 1916 inclusive, in addition to other large sums which he claims the county owes him.

INSPECTORS TO ENFORCE NEW EXPLOSIVES LAW

Washington, D. C., Nov. 29.—Inspectors for 41 states and Alaska to enforce the federal explosives law under supervision of the bureau of mines were appointed yesterday by President Wilson. Those for the other states will be named in a few days. The appointments include:

The attack was launched by exceedingly heavy [illegible] from the German guns and [illegible] machine fire from the direction of Bourlon wood. The assaulting infantry [illegible] pushed through and this morning troops were [illegible] the new positions strongly, thereby strengthening the British and giving the British command an important piece of high ground.

The enemy attempted a raid [illegible] south of Gravelle late yesterday, but the advancing infantry was caught by British machine gun rifle and artillery fire and driven off before reaching the trenches.

The weather this morning was favorable for military operations. The night was fine and mild and the roads [illegible] so dry that the dust was flying.

The British are continuing the straightening in process along the new line.

Berlin, Dec 1. Numerous British and French prisoners were brought back by German storming detachments on various sectors near the coast, today's official statement says.

BIG GUNS ROAR IN ITALY.

Rome, Dec [illegible]. Intense artillery fire all over the Italian front was reported this afternoon.

A British monitor in action near the lower Plave stopped almost direct hits against enemy bridges and boats in the vicinity of the Piave [illegible].

With the Italian Armies in the Field, Dec. 1.—Italian aviators today reported a heavy troop movement behind the Austro-German lines. It was believed the enemy despairing of success in forcing a breach in the Italian line was preparing to move men for use elsewhere.

General Diaz's forces are now definitely on the offensive at many points on the mountain and Plave fronts. The enemy has not ceased his efforts to find a weak spot, but the fierceness and impetus of his attacks have notably lessened. The Italian morale, as a result, has increased to the most complete confidence in the ranks that only will the line hold, but that reforcements will enable even offensive measures against the enemy.

Heavy snow in the mountains to the north were slowing up fighting in that sector today.

Aviators report that the enemy is feverishly active along the Tagliamento river, where he is compelling the civilian population to assist in the construction of new lines of defensive trenches and works on the eastern bank of the river, to which he probably would fall back in case of a reverse along the Plave.

The coming of American officers is regarded as highly satisfactory and perhaps significant of coming events.

American Engineers Help Splinter Hindenburg Line; Then Carry Out Wounded

By Associated Press.

British Army in France, Monday, Nov. 26.—American engineers, the first American troops to be engaged in military operations on the British front, took a prominent part in the breaking of the Hindenburg line by General Byng last week Military necessity has made it impossible to speak of their presence before, but it is now possible to inform the people of the United States that engineers of the American army had a large part in pushing up the vital railways behind the advancing British soldiers

New Record In Rail Laying.

As a matter of fact the American engineers have been laboring on the roads through the devastated battlefileds of the Somme district for nearly four months and two of their men who were wounded, were the first American casualties announced from Washington. The speed with which the lines have been laid up through the broken Hindenburg defenses during the past week has called forth the highest praise from the British authorities. The Americans have been working in shifts 24 hours a day and no such amount of track has been laid in this region in so short a time before The manner in which they stood up under the strain has led to their being dubbed the force of American Athletes," for these untiring soldiers are today as fit and as willing as they were before the battle began

Naturally the Americans have for a long time been working under the range of enemy artillery and more than once they have come under heavy shell fire. One of the most striking sights along the front has been that of the engineers laboring coolly at their tracks with great shells bursting 100 yards away

Work Nights on Ridges

At one time the Germans cut loose with their guns on a section of the track and tore up three miles of rails which had been laid with much labor, but they scarcely had finished this bombardment when the twin lines of steel began to creep forward once more. After the engineers had reached a point where they were exposed on the skyline, it was necessary to work at night or on foggy days in order to avoid enemy observation.

There have been three forces of Americans employed in this region since about August 1. Two of them have been occupied with the operation and maintenance of light railways and the other has been constructing narrow gauge lines.

The importance of this work hardly needs emphasis, for it is well known that over these railways food, ammunition and material of all sorts are poured up to lend support to the fighting forces

Love Sound of Guns.

The correspondent has visited many of these engineers since their arrival and found them as fit as possible and eager for work. Most of them undoubtedly look forward to the time when they will be able to join the American forces, but just now they are content to do their bit here and learn valuable lessons in military railroading

The correspondent was talking with three officers today and the only anxiety they expressed about the future was the fear that they might later be, compelled to work far back of the lines out of the fighting zone. The engineers love to hear the guns and get as close to the firing line as military orders permit Some of them had an unusual experience much to their liking on the first day of the offensive The British called for volunteer stretcher bearers to go forward to the battle field and bring in wounded British and Germans. A large number of the engineers offered their services, which were accepted They just had finished a hard days work on the railway but they gladly undertook the new arduous and dangerous task and labored through the night getting injured soldiers back to the dressing stations They were highly complimented by the British for their efficiency in this line of service, which was rather far reached from building railroads.

BILLION WON FROM ITALIANS

German Chancellor Declares Teuton Arms Everywhere Victorious and Warns Enemies.

Berlin Nov 29 via London Nov 30 —The war situation was reviewed before the reichstag today by Count George F von Hertling, the new imperial German chancellor He declared that Germany was ready to enter into peace negotiations as soon as the Russian government sent representatives having full powers to Berlin The chancellor said he hoped and wished that the present efforts would take definite shape and "bring us peace"

German arms, the chancellor said, have been uniformly successful and the submarine warfare will reach the aim intended for it He said that the ships sunk will exceed that of those newly constructed He praised the army and navy and eulogized the home population for its patience and endurance under great privations Political reforms would be carried out but the fundamental principles of the imperial constitution cannot and shall not be changed He said in part

German Aims Successful.

"We are approaching the end of the year that has been full of far reaching and decisive events in many theaters of the war I am proud and thankful to say that the arms of Germany and her allies have been successful on almost every occasion and everywhere"

He said the fighting on the Flanders front has continued almost without interruption since July and that the British army was superior in number and that several French divisions had taken part in the fighting Notwithstanding the loss of some villages and farms the German front there remained unshaken and the enemy was as far as ever from his object of reaching the Flemish coast to destroy German U-boat basis. He added

Says British Tanks Failed.

"Recognizing the failure of their attacks in Flanders, the British are now seeking near Cambrai a decisive result. The hope which Great Britain placed upon the wholesale use of tanks has not been fulfilled. They lie destroyed on the battle field by successful German counter measures.

"The initial British success was parried with the entrance of our reserves. The French also have had local successes northeast of Soissons and before Verdun, but every strategical exploitation of these have been prevented by the German army command Every one remembers the events in the east which led to the conquest of Riga and Jacobstadt The glorious advance of the armies of the central powers in Italy holds the world in suspense even today Italy's army has lost a considerable part of its forces and half of its total war material. It also has lost stretches of land which provided it with rich supplies. It has not yet been possible to collect all the booty, calculated in money value at thousands of millions of marks.

Relieves Pressure in West.

"Further the success of our victories from the Isonzo to the Piave is an effective relief to our own western front. In the same way this victory also makes itself felt in Macedonia, where the enemy now appears to be giving voluntarily the slight success which he obtained west of Lake Ochrida.

"From the Sinai peninsula the British are operating against the Turkish troops in Palestine and have been able to achieve certain initial successes there. These, however have no influence on the general war situation from a military standpoint. In the theater of war in Asia Minor and in Irak the situation is unchanged."

Praises Germany's Fleet.

After declaring that the German war fleet had thoroughly fulfilled the hopes and expectations placed in it, the chancellor continued:

"The high seas fleet, whose constant activity often has been veiled from the public view, deserves the thanks of the country. It has, since its glorious day off the Skaggerak, lately shown anew, after a long interval, in the capture of the islands of Oesel, Dago and Moon, in typical cooperation with the army and in its lately successful fight in the German bight in the North sea against a considerable superiority of forces, its constant readiness for battle. As a support and reserve it stands behind our submarine boats, it protects their places of support and opens out a way for them into the open sea"

The chancellor then reviewed the submarine campaign which he said is the only effective way of battling the power of Germany's enemy and the economic war forced on her He was hopeful of its success, and said that the allies were unable to make progress against it by their commandeering neutral ships or building new ones

Count von Hertling expressed the wish that the territories formerly under Russian sway Poland Lithuania and Courland would have the right of choosing their own governments and could obtain that political form which corresponded to their conditions and culture. He said that affairs in this direction were still completely in a state of uncertainty and that reports in the press indicating that a definite agreement had been reached one one point were premature

He referred to Germany and her allies as having placed themselves on the foundation of the papal peace note of last August and said that every ground had been removed for the foolish argument" that the object of her enemies was to destroy German militarism which was destroying the peace of nations. He said

"It has been shown where in truth the peace destroying militarism can be sought Italian Minister Sonnino in his speech on October 26 expressly waived the thought of general disarmament and Premier Clemenceau goes so far in cynicism as to expressly shut out Germany and Austria-Hungary from the peaceful community of nations of the future when right shall take the place of armed force Premier Lloyd-George has declared distinctly that the aim of the war is the destruction of German commerce and that the war must be continued until this end is reached Indeed, the lust of conquest falsely attributed to us, is now placed before the world through the publication of secret treaties of the Russian government: Our war aim from the first day of the defense of the fatherland and the inviolability of its territory freedom and independence of its economic life. On that account we could greet joyfully the pope's peace appeal. The spirit in which the answer to the papal note was given still is alive today, but—so much the enemy must admit the answer signifies no license for the criminal lengthening of the war

New Appeal to Italy.

"For the continuation of the terrible slaughter and the destruction of irreplacable works of civilization and for the mad, self mangling of Europe, the enemy alone bears the responsibility and will also have to bear the consequences. This applies especially to Sonino (Baron Sonnino, Italian minister of foreign affairs). If the Italian authorities who drove into the war the unfortunate population of a beautiful land bound to us by thousand fold memories had taken the hand of peace held out by the pope the frightful defeat of their armies, with all its associated consequences, would not have taken place.

"May Italy's friends accept this as a warning and lend an ear at last to the voice of reason and humanity"

In conclusion the chancellor said that Germany's watchword must be "Wait' Endure' Hold out!"

The speech was received with applause from almost the whole house, only the extreme right and extreme left not participating.

The war credit of 15,000,000,000 marks, asked for by Chancellor von Hertling, passed its first and second readings in the reichstag yesterday The third reading has been set for Saturday.

Herr Scheidemann, for the socialists, said peoples of the warring countries must conclude peace with each other The German people did not want the Polish crown for new duchies. Poland, Lithuania and other territories might determine their future as they liked He declared that German labor joyfully welcomed and supported the first peace step of the Russian revolution and ardently awaited the day when the workmen of France and Great Britain would meet them along the same lines.

ESCAPING SLACKER SHOT.

Santa Fe, N .M., Nov. 30.—Charles Crawford, who escaped Sunday night from the Taos county jail where he had been held on a charge of failure to register for the selective draft, died in a hospital here of wounds received when he was recaptured Tuesday.

BOY STOLE KAISER'S TREASURES

Berlin, Thursday, Nov. 29, via London, Nov. 30.—A 17-year-old school boy was arrested today in connection with the robbery on Monday of the imperial residence, Wilhelmshoehe at Cassel. Most of the objects of art which were stolen have been recovered.

IOWA INFANTRY REACHES FRANCE

One Regiment, With Troops Belonging to Guards in Every State, Makes Trip Without Losing Man.

TO TRENCHES NEXT STEP

Great Movement of Troops Revealed and Discussion Indicates Another Move Soon

Washington D C, Dec 1 - Announcement of the arrival in France of the first national guard units give the first official notice that an extensive troops movement has been accomplished despite hostile submarines, shortage of troop and supply ships and other obstacles but without the loss of a man Thousands of men have been moved to the seaboard from all parts of the country loaded on transports and safely landed in France without any general knowledge of the facts having been disclosed to the country at large.

War department officials were gratified at General Pershing's decision to announce the arrival of the national guard forces but permission to publish the designations of the guard units now at the training centers in France still is withheld Unless General Pershing sees fit to release the information, there is no present prospect of its publication

It can be stated, however, that the brief dispatch of today covers a large movement that has been in progress for several weeks. The next stage will be actual occupation of front line trenches.

Guard units to be sent later will be more sectional in character the grouping of the old divisional organization having been adhered to as closely as possible. The entire country, however, shares in the honor of having its representative units now at the front in the world war

To Rush Other Divisions.

Secretary Baker has announced that as fast as men and ships are ready they will be combined and additional forces sent to join General Pershing. By this means guard divisions first to show themselves fitted for transportation to the training camps in France, will be first to go. It appears possible that the regrouping of national army divisions, made necessary by the use of drafted men to fill up depleted national guard divisions, will determine the order of the first national army units to be sent over. In order that regrouping two national army divisions were formed, one representing the whole eastern section of the country and one equally representative of all middle states. All of the far west is already in the national army division at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash

If the same policy is followed with relation to the national army that has been followed in connection with the national guard, it seems likely that these three divisions, other things such as training and equipment being equal, would be the first of the national army to go over, as every state in the Union would then have national army men at the front as it now has national guardsmen.

The Rainbow division made up of state troops from 33 states, includes a regiment of Iowa infantry.

By Associated Press.

With the American Army in France (Thursday), Nov 29.—National guardsmen from every state in the union have arrived in France, it is today permitted to be announced. They are among the troops now training or lately arrived

For the information of the relatives and families of the men, every one who sailed from the United States has arrived safely in France.

While it is not permitted to disclose the identity of units, it may be said that all those which sailed from the United States have arrived safely and that some already are in training within sound of the guns on the battle fronts.

They are showing a spirit in keeping with the purpose of all concerned to make the American expeditionary force a homegeneous American army, in which each division, whether regular, national guard or national army, cannot be distinguished in efficiency from the others. The former state troops are billeted over a wide area and are pronounced excellent soldiers.

Welcomed by French.

The guardsmen have been arriving in the American zone for many weeks. They are scattered, but as far as possible the units from the same state have been kept close together, except in one case. They found the regular army had made good preparations for them, and while many are billeted in houses in French towns, others have been quartered in low wooden barracks specially erected.

The troops from the various states have been recognized by the French population, and have been welcomed enthusiastically. Many of the units on arriving in billet towns wore the French red, white and blue cockade pinned to their campaign hats. These were given to the soldiers when they landed at base ports. After a sufficient time to rest from the journey, which in some cases has been extremely tiresome, the troops have been set to work training for actual service at the front. In all quarters they are declared to be most enthusiastic and their soldierly qualities have drawn high praise from the French instructors.

In Excellent Health.

During the last few days, one unit has been working with grenades and automatic rifles, while another has been working out military problems in maneuvers. Another unit has been in the instruction trenches, which bring them as near as possible to actual fighting conditions. Many of the former guardsmen in training have heard guns roaring in the distance. They are all being given the same course of instruction as the first contingents of regulars have undergone.

FRANCE LIMITS USE OF COAL.

Paris, Nov. 30.—Strict economy in the use of coal in France is necessary this winter in order to avoid a shortage. This is being accomplished by the issuance of coal cards by which an amount is allotted to each family with a limit of 264 pounds a month for families up to four persons.

FOUR KILLED IN EXPLOSION.

Trenton, Ont., Nov. 30.—Four workmen were killed and two injured in an explosion in one of the buildings of the British chemical company here early today.

THREE ENTENTE SPIES EXECUTED IN GERMANY

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

Amsterdam, Nov 10.—Three Germans, including one noncommissioned officer one private, and a civil official have just been executed in Germany as entente spies. The leader of the group, according to the German newspaper accounts, was a Dr Roos. His associates were Joseph Schnitzler, a noncommissioned officer in an artillery battalion at the front, and Albert Strudel a soldier in a telephone section in Coblentz

The Cologne Gazette gives the following account of the case:

"Dr Roos, who had been a failure in his profession and in life, while on a business journey to Switzerland in 1915, made the acquaintance of a certain Joseph Kraft in Geneva. Here Dr Roos was also introduced to an alleged Captain Barrat

It was agreed that Roos should settle in Frankfort, and from there send military and economic information to Switzerland to a covering address, Grevilliot Geneva The information was written by Roos in invisible ink between the lines of newspapers which were then sent in a wrapper looking quite innocuous in the post As a reward Roos at once received an advance of 2,000 francs and a monthly payment of 1 000 francs was guaranteed him

"In October 1915, Roos began his activities in Frankfort At first he had his own observations only to rely upon, but later he gained accomplices in Strudel and Schnitzler He sent several reports monthly until finally the secret writing was discovered and it was ascertained that he was the sender. Soon afterwards his accomplices were discovered. All three made full confession. The court martial condemned all three to death The punishment was carried out soon after

BRITISH NAVY PROVIDES AGAINST EVERY INCIDENT

Base of British Grand Fleet, Nov. 30. —The head of the British admiralty, speaking the other day in the house of commons, flung out a challenge to the German navy He said "I disclose no secret, or if it is a secret, I disclose a fact which I should be glad to tell the enemy—when I say that the British grand fleet in its northern base lies behind no shore defenses, but relies on its own strength alone"

Ceaseless activity is the motto of the grand fleet Neither men nor ships are permitted to gather rust or barnacles. From its base at the northern tip of the British Isles, it sweeps day and night the 140,000 square miles of the North sea, on ceaseless vigil, in unflagging hope that one day its watching will be rewarded by a meeting with the enemy under circumstances wherein he cannot avoid battle

The harbor which has been the home of the grand fleet for three years is probably the finest of its kind in the world The battleship squadron, for example within their own particular section of this great base, have room for every kind of practice maneuvers, including target practice.

Night target practice, which also is conducted within the harbor, is always an interesting sight.

There is an infinite variety to the turret practice on a big battleship. The officer in charge of the turret speaks "An enemy shell has come in through the turret, killing men Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 6 Right gun disabled. Connection with rest of ship lost. Carry on." The "dead men" file off to one side and watch their comrades work as they would in actual battle. There is the zest of a game to it.

It is play, but play with a deadly efficiency behind it, for it is intended that in actual battle there shall not be a single possibility with which these men will not be ready to deal

GERMAN WAR INDUSTRIES PUT OVER SEVENTH LOAN

Copenhagen, Nov. 30.—Tabulation of subscriptions to the Seventh German loan show that over a fourth of the total of $12,500,000,000 was contributed in subscriptions of over 1,000,000 marks, each, 1,032 subscribers averaging over 3,000,000.

The sixth loan had only 770 subscribers in the super-million class.

There was a marked decrease in the number of small subscribers as well as the total number of subscribers.

The only classes showing an increase in number of subscribers or total subscribed are those above half a million which are responsible for over a third of the loan. These figures are indicative of the extent to which the loan was subscribed by war supply interests.

THREE-HOUR RIOT MARKS QUEBEC POLITICAL MEET

Sherbrooke, Que., Nov. 30.—A riotous crowd broke up a meeting here at which Minister of Justice Doherty and Hon. C. C. Ballantyne attempted to speak. The front of the theater in which the meeting was being held was wrecked and there were many fist fights among persons in the audience. Mr Doherty is a member of the cabinet of Sir Robert Borden.

The disturbance was the most serious that has yet occurred in the province of Quebec in the present general election campaign. The rioters were held back only by a fire hose at the stage door when they attempted to storm the stage where the speakers were.

The riot lasted more than three hours.

ALLIED CONFERENCE OPENS PARIS MEETINGS

Paris, Nov. 30.—The inter allied conference, which has been called for the purpose of discussing closer unity in the prosecution of the war, and coordination of resources, opened in the ministry of foreign affairs shortly after 10 o'clock this morning, with 15 nations represented. The French premier, M. Clemenceau, presided and welcomed the delegates, emphasizing the gravity of the responsibilities resting on the assembled statesmen and military officials.

The delegates immediately went to work, subdividing into committees, the composition of which had been arranged at preliminary meetings.

OMAHAN KILLED IN AN AUTO ACCIDENT

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 30.—Charles R. Robel, manager of Lord Lister hospital, Omaha, was killed early today near Oakland, Ia., when a car in which the parents and six brothers and sisters of the dead man were riding ran into the ditch because of a heavy fog and overturned. They had been spending Thanksgiving with another brother, an officer at Camp Dodge. Others were only slightly hurt.

AMERICA GUARDS RUSS DEMOCRACY

Keeps Faith in Shattered Nation Despite Dealings of Bolsheviki With Civilization's Enemy.

BANS TALK OF TRAITORS

Manufacture of Supplies Continues, Although Care Will Be Taken They Are Not Misapplied.

(Copyrighted by the United Press, 1917)

Paris, Dec 1 America is insisting that the allies adopt a more sympathetic policy toward Russia The result of the revolution must be saved to democracy

As the champion of world democracy America is not inclined to look upon Russia solely from the viewpoint of the aid her armies might give to the allied armies in the fight against the central powers. The United States is not going to stand idly by and see lost for all time the democratic advantages already gained by the Russian revolution

The United Press is informed today that this is the attitude of the American delegates attending the interallied conference here. The talk of "traitors in Russia" is being discouraged by the Americans for they believe there is still hope that out of the chaos will come a fighting force that will be of inestimable service to the allied cause before the end of the war

By Associated Press.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 1.—The American government is shaping what is described as a tolerant policy in dealing with Russia in her present straits, so as to show hope and faith for the ultimate triumph of a sane democracy.

It was declared today that even should the bolsheviki conclude an armistice with Germany there is no present intention to broadly list Russia as an enemy.

Contracts for supplies of material for Russia, it was said, would go forward as usual in the hope that they would be applied to the cause of world democracy. It was pointed out again, however, that these are under control at all times and can be prevented from falling into hostile hands.

BELIEVE 18 MINERS IMPRISONED, DEAD

Rescuers Fail to Reach Scene Imprisoned Thursday by Mysterious Explosion.

Christopher, Ill., Dec. 1.—Rescuers have been unable to open the Old Ben mine to search for the 18 men entombed by yesterday's explosion. A second explosion was heard within the mine at 3 o'clock this morning. It is thought that the 18 men are dead.

The first explosion wrecked the main shaft and the airshaft. The men in the mine were caught on the 600-foot level.

Officials of the coal company said they could not assign a cause for the explosion. Only a few men were in the shaft when the explosion occurred.

LENINE RULE FALLS BEFORE COALITION

Bolsheviki Probably Control New Government by Socialists, Formation Indicates.

London, Dec. 1.—The government of Nikolai Lenine has fallen, according to Petrograd dispatch to the Daily Chronicle dated Wednesday. It has been succeeded by a coalition cabinet of advanced socialists, in which, however, the bolsheviki are represented.

A Russian communication received here by wireless announces a union between the all-Russian central executive committee of the council of workmen's and soldiers' delegates with the executive committee elected by the all-Russian peasants' congress. At a meeting of these bodies and the Petrograd council of workmen's and soldier's delegates a unanimous agreement was reported as to laws concerning land and peace and to the law resting control in the hands of the workmen.

Petrograd, Nov. 30.—A coalition government consisting of bolsheviki, minimalists, internationalists, the left parties and the social revolutionaries was in progress of formation today.

The new government will consist of a ministry representing all these factions. The congress will be composed of 108 members of the workingmen and soldiers, an equal number of representatives of the peasants' congress, 100 delegates from the army and 60 from trades unions.

SWEDEN WILL MEDIATE.

London, Nov. 30.—A Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company says that the Swedish legation at Petrograd has agreed, at Laon Trotzky's request, to act as mediator between Russia and Germany and has already sent to the Berlin foreign office a note proffering a truce and peace negotiations.

AMERICAN FLYERS BEGIN ACTIVE SERVICE

By the Associated Press.

With the American Army in France, Dec. 1.—A substantial vanguard of the great army of American aviators which eventually will operate in France has arrived near the front.

For weeks some of them had been training actively for battle front service, cooperating with the maneuvers of the American troops, rehearsing and practicing attacks. Army flying fields have been established in certain sections and for days American soldiers in many parts of France have been watching American aviators circling above their heads.

Alhambra, Cal., Adopts Exclusive Design in Which City's Emblem Is Used Effectively.

Artistic lamp-posts of concrete and n have been erected in Alhambra, l., which were made especially for city according to a design that been copyrighted, so that posts this type cannot be used elsewhere. he insignia of the city is a cresnt and star, which is suggestive of Moorish palace in Spain bearing the same name as this California town. The emblem has been used very effectively in designing the arms which support two of the three lights on each post. It also appears on the sides of the base. Above each of the latter ornaments is a mission bell. One of these bells serves as a door to the fuse box situated within.

Playgrounds in Parks.

That city could well boast of being nearly ideal for residential purposes could it be said that it provided a well-equipped playground within easy reach of every home, says a playground expert. Primarily and fundamentally the writer believes in a complete separation of park and playground, but this is impossible in any city called to mind, through lack of suitable area for play and this is more to be desired than parks for mere breathing space. The only reasonable solution then is to have some equipment and conveniences for play in every park unless close by an official playground. Yet the history of small parks where special provision for juveniles has been made plainly show that it has usually brought spoliation and general untidiness impossible to overcome except when confined to well-defined areas within protection of hedge, fence or wall. And this should be provided in the original plan of every park, or later the park design will have to undergo changes to admit of this very necessary provision for childhood's happy play.

GOOD SCREENS CHEAPEST

Expert Says Copper Wire, Although More Costly, Will Outlast Iron Many Times.

That it does not pay to use cheap iron screens on any building more valuable than a chicken house, is the opinion of Dr. J. D. Walters, professor of architecture and drawing in the Kansas State Agricultural college. Persons erecting new dwellings should equip them with screens that will last many years, he says.

"An average two-story house contains upwards of two dozen openings that should be screened," said Doctor Walters. The best screens are made of a strong white pine sash and a copper wire screening. Another grade is made of fir lumber and a screen material made of a composition called white metal. The cheaper grades are made of yellow Southern pine and covered with common iron wire screening.

"The first screen named is rather expensive on account of the high price of copper, but it does not need to be painted, and should last 12 years. The iron wire screen, on the other hand, will rust out the first season and rarely lasts more than two or three years.

"A screen door should be made with a hardwood sash and should be provided with the best kind of spring hinges and a knob lock. There should be sufficient cross rails and cross braces in it to prevent sagging. The window screens are usually fastened at the top by cheap black varnished butts and are hooked at the bottom with a cheap hasp and staple."

WILL TRAIN CITY MANAGERS

Kansas State University Establishes Course Which Is First of the Kind in This Country.

Kansas is preparing to establish in its state university a four-year course in city management, the first of its kind to be established in the country. When a man, or a woman either, is graduated from this course he will have had thorough training in every department of city affairs except politics, and will go out to help run cities as a trained man goes into a factory or business. Prof. F. W. Blackmar, who is head of the economics department and has been instructed to prepare the details of the course, had this to say concerning the need for such a school:

"No man can manage a business unless he has a thorough understanding of its nature. The man who manages a city ought to be as experienced as an engineer, or a teacher. Why cannot universities train men for managing cities as well as it can for other professions? That is what we propose to do. The course of study for training city managers should be about one-half the ordinary classroom and lecture work and the rest laboratory investigation into the actual needs of municipal operation."

Pretty Exterior Finish Effects.

Beveled siding, shingles and brick are used to finish the exterior of many houses now. The combination of these materials does not produce a patch finish, but they harmonize beautifully. The brick are used in the foundation walls from grade to the sills, and in the porch railing wall.

The sides of the house are finished with beveled siding up to the second floor, and with shingles the rest of the way to the roof. If the shingles are stained some fairly dark tint and the beveled siding is painted some light color or white, with the window sash dark, the effect produced is very pleasing.

Trade Development Profitable.

The competition of cities to secure trade for their manufacturers, wholesalers and jobbers is particularly keen. The development of package car service, the expediting of merchandise, the extension of trade territory through co-operative effort in shipments and the covering of districts, the quick adjustment of claims, the generating of enthusiasm for certain communities as trade centers—this work is vigorously and persistently carried on by chambers of commerce, with field secretaries, trade magazines and trade trips, and the money spent in this work returns a hundred fold in new accounts and increased orders.

Retail Interests Benefited.

Through chamber of commerce work the retail interests in a community are brought together to work together for improvement in local methods of merchandising, for investigation and elimination of "fly-by-night" concerns and fraudulent advertisers. Credit bureaus are often maintained, and truthful advertising is a thing insisted upon. Universal trading conditions locally are considered and worked out, not only for the protection of the retail stores, but for the protection of the customer.

THE RECIPE LADY

By JANE OSBORN.

Among other things Mardy Graham wrote recipes.

She had begun with big ideas about writing short stories for the popular magazines, a play or so and possibly a best seller. But now, ensconced in her very own little studio apartment in a dingy New York side street, she considered herself quite fortunate when she kept the pot boiling by writing anything at all.

After the rejection of that first play of hers, the ambitious Mardy had taken one reef after another in her sails. Still she chose to sail her own little craft in her own way and she had not been completely discouraged.

In spite of the two years of uphill work Mardy had spent in the big city she had something of the old-time reticence of well-bred women of her class against permitting the publication of her photograph. She didn't quite like the idea of appearing morning after morning in some Western paper as the originator of countless ways of making cakes, muffins, stews and puddings, the like of which she had not even tasted for many a moon. "But still," reflected Mardy, as she sat before her desk in the apartment, "I really am that recipe lady."

So Mardy went forth to the photographer's one day and sat for her picture, and with the usual misgivings and hopefulness she waited the finishing of the proof.

Mardy gave one last lingering look at the proofs and then quite deliberately tore them in two. "Let me have the bill and then destroy the proofs," she said. "That picture won't do. I'll have to buy a picture of a girl that does look as if she wrote recipes."

So it was that the picture that appeared with Mardy's daily talks on matters culinary was that of a calm-eyed, young housekeeper, and the readers were delighted.

Then the editor man told Mardy that he was going to New York on business and would call at her "office," and from time to time on the day that the editor was coming Mardy spent minutes trying to remove the home touches from the little workroom where she ground out her copy. She really didn't want the man whose friendship she had won through her letters to know that those rooms were all that she knew of home. The recipe lady, of course, must have a home and a kitchen, or how would she know so much about cooking?

But even when the editor knocked the old brass knocker that Mardy had fastened to her studio door, Mardy had not quite decided how she would explain about the picture. She trusted that she would not mind making the explanation when she saw him. If the attachment that he had told her in his letters he felt for her depended on the picture, rather than on her clever letters, what was she to do? She know that she was prettier than that picture, but perhaps it was just that type of face that had attracted him.

But before the first ten minutes of the call, during which Mardy felt that she had been becoming reacquainted with her best friend—for such the writer of the letters seemed to ner—Mardy forgot the picture. Then she caught the keen eyes of the man studying her face. She knew it was time for an explanation.

"You see, I suppose, that that picture is a fake," she confessed. "I don't look like it at all, do I? I had my picture taken especially for you," she said, "but it didn't look the part."

"No," he said; "you don't exactly look like the staid young housewife of the picture. You're not that type, exactly. But where did you get the picture that you did send?"

"I had to get something," Mardy began her confession. "So I asked the photographer to get a picture that did look the part. He had a hundred or so pictures—some of them of professional models and others pictures of paintings they had photographed. He said there was no copyright on the one I decided to take, so I didn't hesitate."

"No, it wasn't copyrighted," said the man. "You see I painted that picture. I used to dabble in that sort of thing, you know. That was then to me a picture of the ideal I had never met—a housewifely sort of girl that thought only of her own home. She was still my ideal when you sent a copy of that picture to go with the talks. I suppose the photographers got the photograph at the time my picture was hung. Some of the papers wanted it. It took a prize or something at an exhibit, I believe."

"And it is still your ideal?" asked Mardy. "I'm sorry that I appropriated it—very sorry."

"No, it isn't now," exclaimed the man, "for since I have known you in the letters and since I have seen you here I have found a new ideal—a woman that has as many ambitions and as many disappointments as a man might—not that complacent, smug little housewife—though my ideal could do all that sort of thing, too, if she had to. But she has more spirit. Don't you understand? Dear little recipe lady, you are my ideal, and I came on from the West to find you. I knew you so well from those letters."

And the little recipe lady, because it was so long since she had had some one to trust, buried her little head in the arms that were outstretched to her, and whispered her answer to the question that he asked her.

Extinction of the Buffalo.

The following statement concerning the buffalo was made by Dr. W. T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological park. "It is by no means true that the extermination of the buffalo is due mostly to the encroachment of human beings on their feeding grounds, rather than to their wholesale slaughter. The great bison herds of the plains, from Saskatchewan to Texas, were all of them exterminated by systematic robe hunting, hide hunting in summer, killing for tongues, and slaughter for all other excuses imaginable. This occurred long before any of their ranges were wanted by man either for cattle grazing or for agriculture. The legitimate industries of man played no part whatever in the extermination of the bison, either West or East. The slaughter was systematic and deliberate, and far in advance of the agriculturist and stock grower."

World's Thickest Tree.

It is said the largest tree known, in thickness, is a partly-decayed chestnut in Sicily, which is 60 feet across. Mexican cypress and the oriental plane have reached 40 feet. This puts the California big tree and the baobab in the background, but the big tree is of greater bulk in combined height and girth and the baobab is thickest in relation to height.

Propellers Run Tandem.

Experiments made in boat propulsion with one propeller, one behind the other, show that but little increased speed is obtained by the arrangement; and rotating the two screws in opposite directions, either at the same or different speeds, has little effect on the results. It is, however, claimed that the double screw gives better control of the vessel.

Persistent.

"You wouldn't kiss a girl against her will, would you?" asked the leap-year maiden. "No, I would not." Then she tried another approach. "Would you resist very much if a girl tried to kiss you?"—London Answers.

CHAPTER XXIV.

PACHMANN SCORES.

Dan Webster never had any definite recollection of how he got to his rooms. Somebody must have carried his bags to a cab and put them and him inside it, and he must have given the cabby the number of the apartment house where his rooms were, for after a certain time he found himself in a cab which had stopped in front of it, with Marshall, the doorman, staring in at him.

"I think he's drunk, that's what I think," said the cabby, who had got down, suspecting that his services would be needed. "He ought to be put to bed and left to sleep it off."

"I don't understand it," said Marshall. "I never saw him like this before. Paris must surely be an awful place!"

The cabby chuckled, and together they got Dan out and into the elevator; but when the doorman had paid and dismissed the cabby, and tried to follow his advice, he met with unexpected resistance.

"Go away, Marshall, and leave me alone," said Dan. "I heard what that fellow said; but I'm not drunk—though no doubt I look it. Just go away and shut the door. I'll thank you another time. There's a good fellow!"

And in the end, Marshall went doubtfully away

Dan went to work at himself immediately with mechanical thoroughness He filled his tub with cold water, undressed and plunged into it, dipping his head under half a dozen times. Then he rubbed down with the roughest towel he could find, gave himself a vigorous massage from head to feet, took a sharp turn with a pair of dumb bells, got into fresh clothes, and began to feel more like himself

"There," he said, "that's better. Now let's see if this thing is real, or only a nightmare."

He went to his coat, got out the pasteboard box, placed it on a table, sat down before, and carefully removed the lid.

No, it was not a nightmare. There was the cake of soap—pink, scented soap—weighted with the nickel coins. Poising the box in his hand, he understood why the coins had been added. Without them, the box would have been too light. He pulled one of the coins out and looked at it It was a German piece of 20 pfennigs, such as any one on the ship might have used He put it carefully back, and lay down on his bed to reason the thing out.

How had the substitution been made? How could it have been made? Every day the box had been in his pocket, every night it had been beneath his pillow. There was only one explanation—the change must have been made while he was asleep. Some one had entered the stateroom, slipped out the other box with a cautious hand and substituted this one. Whoever it was must have been familiar with the weight of the other box and with the way it was wrapped and sealed. But how was that possible? No one could have seen Miss Vard give it to him, no one could have known that he had it.

And then Dan sat suddenly erect. Chevrial might have known. Chevrial might have seen him slip it into his pocket as he dressed. Yes, Chevrial might have done it. Who was Chevrial? How should a wine merchant know so much about spies and diplomacy and German princes? There had always been about him an air of power, of reserve force. Yes, and an air of mystery—the air of one who knows a great many things he does not choose to tell.

Chevrial was undoubtedly a spy himself.

And, as he found this answer, Dan wondered that it had not occurred to him long before. For it furnished the clue upon which Chevrial's words and hints and looks and warnings were strung together as on a thread!

There could be no doubt about it: Chevrial was a spy, engaged in some desperate plot—no ordinary plot, for a prince and admiral of the German empire were also engaged in it, and heaven alone knew how many others!

There was one thing to be done at once. He must go to Kasia Vard and confess that he had been outwitted. And he trembled as he thought what the loss of that little box would mean to her! Why had he been so dense, why had he not suspected * * *

Telling himself that self accusations would do no good, he finished dressing hurriedly, let himself out, and ran downstairs without waiting to call the elevator. At the front door he met Marshall, whose face brightened at sight of him.

"So you're all right again, sir?" he said. "I'm glad of that!"

"Yes," and Dan slipped a bill into his hand. "I had a little shock that sort of upset me. Many thanks for looking after me, Marshall. I'll not forget it."

"That's all right, sir. Thank you, sir. Hope you had a good time?"

"Splendid. Come up and see me tomorrow. I brought a little memento for you from that awful place called Paris!" and leaving Marshall staring, he ran down the steps to the street, sought the nearest subway station, and 20 minutes later mounted the steps of the house on West Sixty-four street, whose address Kasia had given him — a quiet house in a quiet neighborhood. His finger trembling as he touched the bell. How should he ever face her!

A negro boy answered the ring.

"I wish to see Miss Vard at once," said Dan, and produced a card.

"Miss Vard is not here, sir."

"Not here? Has she gone out?"

"No, sir; she's been to Europe and ain't got back yet."

Dan steadied himself against the wall, for he felt a little dizzy again.

"I know. But she must be back! Her boat docked three or four hours ago."

"We was expectin' her today, sir—her and her father; but they ain't got here yet."

Dan looked at the boy for a moment; then he gave him a silver dollar.

"Are you sure?" he asked.

"Yes, sir; I'm sure," and Dan could see that he was telling the truth.

"Have you a 'phone?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

"What's its number?"

The boy told him and Dan jotted it down.

"Will you give the card to Miss Vard as soon as she arrives?" he asked.

"Yes, sir, I'll do that."

Dan wrote a hasty line on the card, asking Kasia to call him at once, and added his telephone number. Then he turned wearily away, and went back to his rooms. There was nothing to do but wait. And he found waiting most trying of all. The minutes dragged miserably, each of them weighted with self accusation, but the afternoon shadows began to lengthen and still his telephone had not rung. Finally he called for Kasia's number and asked for her. A voice which he recognized as that of the negro boy answered that she had not yet returned.

"It's those Germans!" Dan muttered to himself. "It's those damned Germans! They've got her into it, somehow!"

And then suddenly he remembered his appointment, and snatched out his watch. It was nearly 6 o'clock.

"I'll drag it out of them!" he said. "I'll drag it out of them! and if Chevrial's there . . ."

He stopped. Chevrial and the Germans could not be in collusion—such an alliance was unthinkable. But how else to explain it . . .

Dan gave it up; but a good dinner at a nearby restaurant restored him something of his self confidence. After all, this was America. Europe might be honeycombed with intrigue and over run with spies, but they would find their occupation gone on this side the water! And he himself would explode a bomb in the morning's Record that would shake them up a little! So it was a fairly confident and self controlled young man who mounted the steps of the German consulate at five minutes to 7. A flunkey in livery opened the door to his ring.

"I have an appointment with Admiral Pachmann," said Dan, with a sudden cold fear at his heart that he would be laughed at; but instead he was shown at once into a little ante-chamber.

"Sit here a moment, sir," said the footman, and hastened away, closing the door behind him. But it opened almost at once, and Pachmann himself entered. Dan drew a deep breath of relief; it was all right then!

Pachmann fairly radiated good humor. All his roughness of the morning had disappeared, and he greeted Dan beamingly.

"I am most glad to see you," he said, in such a tone that Dan almost believed him. "You are prompt—but that, I am given to understand, is an American virtue. However, I am prompt, also. The car is waiting."

"The car?" Dan echoed.

"You will understand," Pachmann explained, "that, since the Prince is incognitio, it is impossible for him to remain at the consulate—that would at once betray him. I was uncertain, this morning, as to our arrangements, or I should have directed you to the proper address. However, it is but a step," and he opened the door.

Dan followed him along a handsome hall to the carriage entrance, where, at the foot of the steps, stood a limousine. As soon as they appeared, the driver, who had been standing at the hood, bent and cranked his motor and then sprang to the door and opened it.

"Enter, my dear sir," said Pachmann, and followed him into the car. The door slammed, the driver sprang to his seat, and they were off. In the semi darkness, Dan fancied he heard a repressed chuckle, and a vague uneasiness stole upon him. But he shook it off. What had he to fear?

"You will remember," said Pachmann finally, "that this interview is not a thing which we desire, but to which we consent because we must. You placed us, this morning, in a very awkward position. You newspaper men of America have a method all your own. The manner in which you entrapped the prince compels my admiration. How did you know that it was he?"

"There was a book on the ship with a history and portraits of the royal family," Dan explained. "I happened to be looking it over and recognized the likeness at once."

"So?" said Pachmann, and there was a note of surprise in his voice, which told Dan definitely that, whatever Chevrial's plot might be, this German was not in it. "You have sharp eyes. But the likeness may have been merely a chance one. It must have seemed most strange to you that a prince of the empire should travel alone as a passenger of the second class."

"It did. That was why I approached him as I did."

"It was most clever. We admit it. Ah, here we are."

The car had stopped, and Pachmann opened the door. As Dan alighted, he glanced up and down the street, but did not recognize it. It was a street of close built apartment houses and private dwellings [illegible] in Ne[illegible]," she confessed. "I don't the p[illegible]especially for you," she and t[illegible]didn't look the part."

And Dan, as he saw the other's face, breathed a sigh of relief. Yes, it was the Prince. For a moment in the car, he had feared that he was being tricked. Pachmann had undoubtedly chuckled!

The Prince bowed coldly. His face was very gloomy—in striking contrast to Pachmann's, which was beaming more than ever with good humor.

"I feel that an apology is due Your Highness," said Dan, "for the way in which I sought to entrap you this morning. Please believe that I was about to promise to do what I could not respect your incognito when this gentleman intervened. In my article for tomorrow, I shall try to say nothing that can offend you."

"I thank you," said the Prince gravely.

"All this is wasting time," broke in Pachmann, impatiently. "Proceed with your questions, my young sir."

"What is the purpose of Your Highness's visit to America?" asked Dan.

The Prince hesitated and glanced at Pachmann.

"Perhaps it would be best for the explanation to come from me," said the later smoothly, but with a sardonic smile upon his face. "The Prince travels in search of health. He is of a most studious disposision—sits up with his books far into the night—becomes so absorbed in them that he forgets to go to bed, even to eat. So the emperor, in fear that he would injure his health—you can see by looking at him he is most delicate—decreed a trip around the world, made incognito in the simplest fashion, during which he was not so much as to look inside a book. This accounts for the fact that never once on the voyage over did you see him with a book in his hand. That is the whole mystery, my young sir."

Dan, glancing at the Prince, saw that he was red with anger; but he could not repress a smile at the absurdity of Pachmann's explanation. The Prince was evidently as strong as an ox, and had anything but the appearance of a student.

"You may have heard some idle tales," went on Pachmann, rubbing his hands with pleasure, "of a love affair—of a barmaid, perhaps. Berlin is always full of such gossip, and you American journalists hear it all. But believe me, it is merely gossip, the truth is as I have told you."

The Prince had wheeled upon Pachmann, his eyes blazing.

"It is too much!" he cried, in German. "You insult me, and you shall answer for it. I warn you!" and he store to the door.

"Farewell, my Prince!" said Pachmann, and waited, with a sneer on his lips, until the Prince's heavy footsteps died away down the hall. Then he turned back to Dan. "Behold that Princes have rages just as other men," he said.

"I don't blame him!" said Dan. "I wonder he didn't knock you down."

"So?" and Pachmann's eyes took an ugly gleam. "I fear the interview is at an end."

"I have another question to ask," said Dan quietly. "Where are Mr. Vard and his daughter?"

Pachmann's eyes narrowed to mere slits and his face became positively venomous.

"I was expecting that question," he sneered. "What do you know of Vard and his daughter?"

"They are friends of mine. I saw them leave the pier with you. They have not yet reached their apartment. Where are they?"

"I cannot tell you."

"You mean you will not?"

"Put it that way, if it pleases you."

A storm of rage was hammering in Dan's brain.

"I would advise you to tell me," he said, tensely.

"You threaten?"

"Yes," and Dan took a step toward the admiral. "I would advise you to tell me."

Pachmann did not stir. He glanced with ironic eyes from Dan's white face to his working [illegible]uses imagin[illegible]. Then he threw back his

The anger had ebbed from Dan's brain, although his attitude had not relaxed. Staring into Pachmann's leering face, he realized that he must think and act quickly. The first thing was to escape; with a deep breath he braced himself and sprang for the door—to plunge straight into the outstretched arms of a man on guard there.

There was a moment's struggle; then Dan felt his feet kicked from under him, and fell with a crash that shook the house. In an instant two men were sitting on him, holding him down.

Then Pachmann came and looked down at him, his lips twitching with triumph.

"Young fool!" he sneered. "Young fool!" And then, in German, to the two men, "Take him away! In yonder!" and he pointed toward a door at the rear of the hall.

One-fourth of the United States, or 550,000,000 acres, are covered by forests. More than 22,000,000,000 cubic feet of wood is cut yearly, valued at $1,375,000,000.

NEW NAVY CREATED BY U. S. DURING WAR

When Present Program Is Completed America Will Rank as Second Sea Power.

By SENATOR CLAUDE E. SWANSON

Washington, D. C., (Special),—Congress and the administration are both deserving of great credit for the rapid improvement, increase and efficiency of the navy. During the years in which Wilson has been president, congress has appropriated more than $2,200,000,000 for naval purposes, which exceeds the total of appropriations for naval purposes from the beginning of the new navy in 1883 up to the Wilson administration by more than $250,000,000. By the warm and earnest cooperation of congress and the administration, the United States, when its present program is completed, will have easily the second largest navy in the world. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, congress has appropriated $1,604,000,000 and authorized contracts for $271,000,000. During the last two years the appropriations by the United States for naval purposes have far exceeded those of any other nation for the same length of time, either in peace or war.

New Navy Created.

The legislation for the increase of the navy is material and personal and changing and reforming its management has practically created an entirely new navy. Its increase in efficiency has been as marked as its increase in size. Marksmanship and the records of officers and men have daily improved and their efficiency in every respect become greater.

The navy and marine corps have been increased until they now constitute a force of more than 250,000 men. Since the declaration of war the navy by volunteer enlistments has been increased from 64,000 to more than 145,000. In addition to these there are in the naval reserve 49,000 men, in the national naval volunteers 14,500 men, in the hospital corps, 6,500 men, and about 5,000 in the coast guards. There are now about 13,000 commissioned and warrant officers in the navy and reserve. The marine corps has grown since the declaration of war from 13,000 to more than 33,000 by volunteer enlistments. To raise, train and officer this largely increased force was indeed a great undertaking, and the department is deserving of commendation for the promptness and efficiency with which it has been done.

Size of Navy Tripled.

There are three times as many vessels in the naval service now as there were when the United States entered the war. Every battleship and cruiser that was in reserve has been fully manned and commissioned. Many hundreds of vessels and fast motor craft have been surveyed, taken over and converted into patrol boats. Many vessels have been completed since the war began by hurried construction and have been promptly put in service. More than 250 merchant vessels have been armed with naval guns and supplied with naval crews and officers.

The American fleet has been provided with supplies and ammunition and made ready for action for any demand that might be made upon it.

In addition to getting ready the fleet existing, the navy department is also carrying out the largest ship construction program in the history of any nation. It has now in process of construction 787 vessels, extending from superdreadnaughts to submarine chasers. The total cost of those under construction at present is estimated at more than $1,150,000,000.

To Lead In Destroyers.

Arrangements were recently made for completing a very large number of destroyers in addition to the many already under construction, and these when finished will give us the largest number of destroyers of any navy in the world. These destroyers are indispensable for warfare against submarines and for protecting our commerce and destroying the commerce of our enemies. Formerly it took 20 months to construct destroyers. Arrangements are now made for these to be [illegible] within 10 months.

The fleet, in order to be kept in repair and ready at all times, has required large construction at the various navy yards, including dry docks, wharves, warehouses, piers, barracks, etc., all of which are being rapidly provided. An aircraft factory is being built and the navy department is supplying itself fully with the aircraft so much needed.

The navy has been in continuel training since war was declared, and the records made by officers and men have been exceedingly fine and most gratifying. A large fleet of destroyers has been sent to aid our allies in Europe, and the largely decreased loss in shipping from submarines attests to their efficient and successful work. I have read the reports from our navy in foreign waters, and these show accomplishments of which we should indeed be proud. The navy has the responsibility of safely transporting our troops to France and this has been successfully done.

Spirit of Men the Best.

The health, spirit and enthusiasm of the navy, both in men and officers, are fine. When it is remembered that when this war started the navy was short about 1,000 officers from its then authorized strength, and that the list of officers could not be largely increased by graduates from the Naval Academy, and that most of the new officers and men had to be taken from civil life, drilled and made efficient and acquainted with their new work, it seems to me the accomplishments of the navy have been most remarkable. What has been done could only have been achieved by the most thorough co-operation in the navy and continuous, long, and hard work by the officers and men. The American navy in this war will fully measure up to its highest standards of the past.

WOMAN WHO SLEW MATE IS ACQUITTED IN IDAHO

Caldwell, Id.—After 12 minutes' deliberation the jury in the district court returned a verdict of not guilty in the case of Mrs. Lorensa Calzacorta for the fatal shooting of her husband, Juan J. Calzacorta, at their home in Nampa, July 8.

The Calzacortas were prosperous Spaniards and according to the testimony developed family troubles as a result of Calzacortas' relations with an American woman. This and the husband's demand that his wife and children leave his home within 24 hours, on penalty of death, formed the basis for the defendant's plea of self defense.

It is less than a score of years since the first heavier than air machine successfully carried a passenger into the air. It is less than 15 years since the art of controlling such a craft was imparted by the inventor to another, yet today aircraft have been standardized and factories turn them out with the ease that motor car builders produce their product.

Harry Lauder's Prayer.

This prayer for America and the allies, was written by Harry Lauder, the famous singer, while he was in Detroit, November 14. It was requested by the editor of the Chalmers Monogram, house organ of the Chalmers Motor Car company:

"Let us remember we are all citizens of a great nation—AMERICA. That we are what our forefather made us—Freemen—and that we never will in any degree subject ourselves to the dominion of German Prussian rule.

We believe what God says: We should love our enemies, but God does not expect us to love His enemies.

It is not for glory, riches or honors we fight, but for Liberty alone, which no good man loses but with his life.

—Harry Lauder.

Sammy Is a Friendly Critic.

From Answers, London.

The American soldier has become quite a familiar figure to us in the London streets. He is, in his own eloquent slang, a "rubber neck"—a raw sightseer, determined to see everything.

Have you ever noticed the air of immense interest he wears as he "mooches round" absorbing the sights and sounds of this old city?

"Say, stranger," I heard one Sammy remark, "this little old town of yours is fine and dandy. But I'm awful lonesome for a real building."

He went on to describe the glories and the conveniences of skyscrapers, of central heating, of lightning speed elevators.

"But we've got to hand it to you for real good looks," he concluded generously. "England can knock spots off the U. S. A. for natural beauty!"

American soldiers are prepared to like Britishers, and do like them. They can be frank in their criticisms, but they are equally frank where they consider praise is due.

"Your English girls are the loveliest in the world!"

That comment has been made very often by them in the last two months.

"London theaters certainly beat ours to a frizzle!" So spoke a big New Yorker, and a man from Chicago echoed his opinion.

Yes, the Sammy can be generous in his praise. He is a bit argumentative of course. We can't blame him for that.

"We Americans would sooner talk than eat!" said a stalwart officer of the federal forces. "And we just love to start a scrap!"

"You need waking up a bit in England," said a progressive westerner. "Why don't you have a cabaret in every one of your restaurants so that your young folks could have a good time along with the rest, and dance and enjoy themselves more? It would keep a lot of people out of public houses, believe me. It would bring the young folk together, it would give them healthy exercise. You ought to get a move on and start things!"

Air raids have been a matter of great interest to the newcomers, one of whom said:

"Guess we didn't realize there was a war on, and we heard the bombs drop!"

It has been rather difficult to persuade the American soldiers to take cover during raids. Many of them have stood boldly out on doorsteps, gazing skywards, regardless of shrapnel and high explosives.

"This is too good to miss!" they are apt to declare. "It's a dandy show, for sure!"

There's one point about the fighter from the U. S. A., be he soldier or sailor, that strikes one immediately. It is his optimism, his perpetual cheerfulness.

One of the cheeriest spots in the whole of London is that rendezvous of Americans, the Eagle Y. M. C. A. hut. Nearly all the helpers are America, so that the men don't feel so very far from home, after all.

"We Americans are having a real dandy time in England!" said a bronzed and burly Sammy.

The Dog's Eye View of Life.

From the Spectator, London

It is no longer possible to take a bird's eye view of life. Like a dog in a crowd, we must be content to follow our noses till destiny may deliver us. In ordinary times we do in some hypothetical sense foresee the future. We know, of course, that any moment may be our last and all our calculations may fail, but civilization depends upon man's willingness to forget these facts. We proceed to ourselves that we are immortal, and by the light of experience we foretell and act upon a calculation of probabilities. We say that tomorrow we will do so-and-so, and next year something else, and a few years hence, when our children have grown up, we intend to do differently again. But now at the present crisis we cannot see a step in front of us. The longest sighted admit themselves short sighted. We do not know where we shall live, or what we shall do, or what our income will be, or what will be the demands upon it. We do not know, alas! how many of those we are accustomed to call "we" will be with us, whether our special trade or profession will revive, or whether our particular form of leisure will be tolerated. We are, as we say, "at a loss to know"—our vision is crowded out by events greater than ourselves. There is a sense in which each one of us must drift, however hard he or she may be working. We can no longer steer. We think about the great things of life and say, "Shall we ever be ourselves again?" and we look at the little things close to us and wonder if the potato patch will be once more a lawn.

The effect upon character of this increase of sorrow and decrease of care cannot but be great. We cannot take thought for tomorrow even if we have no heart to enjoy today. Most of us are doing hard work, often of a mechanical kind, needing close attention. It is not only the soldier who has been obliged to submit to discipline. The discipline of detail is a stern one, and to that we have all had to submit. The word "irksome" comes often to the lips of the grumbler. Setting aside, however, the small spirited men who whimper because they cannot make up their minds to inconvenience, there are a great number of usually cheerful people who find the present circumscribed outlook—we are speaking only of each man's private horizon—distressing. They have lost the pleasure of planning. They have always been accustomed to feel that, however disagreeable their present situation, happiness lies before them. This, that, and the other fortunate event will come to pass, they feel sure; their undertakings, failures at present, will succeed; their children will take a satisfactory turn; they mean to live in a more suitable place. To them all expectation is roseate. Even if they are fortunate, they do not dwell upon the moment. They love to feel how things—in the future—will go from good to better.

Occasionally we all, even those of us who admit that the screening off of the distance has been something of a rest, become tired of our own short view. We grope to the window and try to see out. However dreary the outlook, we feel we should like to see it. But the blind remains down. We must go back and busy ourselves in our enclosure.

King George Like T. R.

From the London Chronicle.

I think one's first impression of the king, and also one's last, is that he is genuine all through. There is not an atom of pose about him. One could not imagine him either wanting to strike an attitude or succeeding in doing it. The instinct for such exhibitions has been mercifully omitted from his makeup. The restless, mercurial, caporing, egotical temperament of the kaiser stands, I should judge, as the precise opposite of what King George either is, or could be, or would ever wish to be.

I have only once been honored with an audience of his majesty. But it lasted nearly an hour and a half; we talked freely on many things—frank himself, the king encourages frankness in others—and I look back upon it as one of the surprises of my life. A surprise, because as the king in an easy lounge suit sat back in his chair and held forth in an animated strain, with vivid movements and gestures and an occasional hearty burst of laughter, or turned upon me a Lewis gun of questions as to the state of feeling in a belligerent country from which I had just returned, or expounded very earnestly his views of the kingly office, I realized how little I had known him and how many were the gaps in my preconceptions of his personality.

Time and again the king reminded me of Colonel Roosevelt. Both are men of an eager, impetuous nature. Both hold strong opinions and unfold and maintain them with zest and emphasis. Both have a healthily developed instinct for speaking out. Both come at you directly, plunge into subjects without any formal preliminaries, and discuss them with a downright expansiveness that is much more apt to err on the side of indiscretion than over caution. The king has not the colonel's engaging many sidedness, the colonel has not the king's selfless modesty. But both are men of quick emotions and decided views, whose bent is toward action, and who get from every hour its fully 60 minutes of life.

Chinese Building Roads.

United States Consular Report.

The Foochow district has been conspicuous for its absence of roads. A network of thousands of miles of narrow stone footpaths suitable only for pack carrying by coolies supplied this section of China with its sole means of distributing goods by land. The stone "roads" on the whole were in so deplorable a condition that the use of pack animals was out of the question. In order to demonstrate in a practical manner the advantages of good roads the local authorities recently completed the construction of about 12 miles of macadam road in and about the city of Foochow. The innovation was received with enthusiasm, and with a year 838 jinrikishas, 90 bicycles, and 48 carriages were in use on the road.

The authorities, backed by the native chamber of commerce, now propose to construct a macadam highway along the river for a distance of 7 miles to the upper stone bridge. It is planned to purchase suitable motor vehicles for use on this new stretch of road. The route has been surveyed, and it is expected that $65,000 will be spent on its construction and the purchase of the motor vehicles to be used for freight and passenger traffic. Following the completion o this project, it is probable that a road connecting Foochow with Pagoda anchorage, the steamer port of arrival, 12 miles down the river, will be laid out.

Man and Lion Die in Battle.

Lion and man, lying alongside one another both terribly mauled and both quite dead, told a silent story of a titanic struggle "somewhere in Africa." The deceased was Trooper Norman Sinclair, a native of Prestonkirk, and while on military duty his body was found lying beside the king of beasts which he had killed. A remarkable tribute to his memory has been paid through the devotion of native troops. There has now been placed on his remote grave an iron cross, which weighed two hundredweight, bearing his name, the date of his death and the words, "Died for King and Empire." For the last 300 miles the cross was borne by carriers over a practically unknown country.

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will get as great relief as I did from its use."—Mrs. S. D. McABEE, 122 Dewey Ave., Spartanburg, S. C.

Chicago, Ill.—"For about two years I suffered from a female trouble so I was unable to walk or do any of my own work. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers and determined to try it. It brought almost immediate relief. My weakness has entirely disappeared and I never had better health. I weigh 165 pounds and am as strong as a man. I think money is well spent which purchases Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Jos. O'BRYAN, 1755 Newport Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Red Cross Totals Eighty-one Mark They Want More

RED CROSS NEWS

By the Red Cross Correspondent

New Members

Musfelt, Mabelle Waterman, Adna Church, S. M Eckman, Florence Behringer, Mr. Tom Nelson, Miss Mable Smith, Mrs H. C Beier, Mrs. Geo. Schoenwetter, Mrs. J. C. Kerstmer, Mrs. Neivt Moberly, Mrs. W. Schlawem, Mrs. Fred Kothenbutal, Henry Beier.

Have you read this list of names? Read them again and while you are reading them think how the Red Cross is growing and then decide that if you have not given your name as a member, that you will. We have now eighty-one members. Help us to make the list total the one hundred mark. Let us forget our little pettty jealousies and personal interests—let's all work together and have a good community organization. All join hands and make this the biggest organization Klemme ever had—a Red Cross that we can be proud of

At the meeting of the executive committee Mrs G A. Pabst succeeded Mrs O. E. Austin as Chairman, Mrs. Austin having resigned that position. Mrs. O E. Austin was then appointed Treasurer to take the place of Mrs. Wiles

Next week the Red Cross will meet in their new quarters, the basement of the First National Bank. The Red Cross have been forced to move around a great deal on account of the scarcity of suitable buildings and the rapid growth of the organization.

SILVER WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Saturday, December the first, was a happy occasion for Mr. and Mrs. August Ridder, when in the presence of their children and immediate relatives they were permitted to celebrate their silver wedding. It reminded them of the fact that for twenty-five years they had journeyed the pathway of life together, sharing with one another the joys and sorrows of life.

One of the things that made the day a very pleasant one to Mr. and Mrs. Ridder was the fact that all of their children were permitted to be present and help the parents celebrate Another fact that made the day a happy one was the presence of Mrs. Ridder's mother, Mrs. Beier.

At about eleven o'clock all the invited guests met at the home of Mr. Ridder and after greetings and congratulations had been extended and tokens of love, consisting of silverware and other useful gifts were presented to the couple, a short program was given consisting of songs, prayer and a short address by the pastor, Rev. A. H. Meyer, after which all the guests sat down to a bounteous dinner prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Ridder.

The following guests were present: Mother Beier, Lydia Beier, Emil Beier, Henry Beier and family, Fred Ridder and family, Wm. Kulper and family from Waterloo, Iowa, and Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Meyer.

We wish Mr. and Mrs. Ridder many more years of companionship together and may it be their joy and lot that after another twenty-five years they may be able to celebrate their Golden Wedding under just as favorable circumstances as they did their Silver Wedding.

PROF. REESE ENLISTS IN NAVY

Left Friday Night For Des Moines

Prof. U. K. Reese heard the call to Arms of Uncle Sam and left for Des Moines last Friday night to take his examinations. Mr. Reese enlisted in the Navy and will immediately go to an eastern training camp from that point. After completing the seaman training he will take up some special branch of the service.

Mr. Reese came here in September and has made a great many friends here who did not like to see him go. His leaving also left a vacancy in the school room that is hard to fill in such a capable manner as Mr. Reese performed the duties.

The appreciation of his good fellowship and teaching qualities was shown when the pupils of the school presented him with a nice wrist watch a shaving set and a beautiful flat ruby ring.

We join Mr. Reese's many friends in wishing him much success and that good luck may follow him wherever he is called to serve our country.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our appreciation to those who so kindly assisted us in our recent bereavement of our most dear wife and mother; and to those who honored her memory with beautiful floral offerings.

OBITUARY OF MRS. BERTHA BARZ

Mrs. Bertha Barz, nee Priebe, was born November 30, 1849, at Luepcow, Province of Pommerania, Germany. There too she was raised and educated and confirmed in the Christian faith in the Evangelical Lutheran church. In the year of 1874 she came to America with her mother and made St. Paul, Minnesota, her destination. There July 1st of the same year she was united in marriage to August Barz, to whom she was a faithful wife and helpmate until her death. Their union was blessed with eleven children, 8 sons and 3 daughters, of whom one son, August Jr., was recalled by death in 1899. In the year 1876 she accompanied her husband to this vicinity, where they bought a farm and through diligence worked themselves from poverty to comfortable circumstances. They were charter members of the Reformed Church of Ell township, as well as of the Reformed church in Klemme. In the fall of 1914 they retired from their farm and settled in Klemme.

The final cause of her death was heart disease. She passed away Saturday, December 1st, having reached an age of 68 years and 1 day, and her remains were laid to rest in Calvary Cemetery, December 4th, with services in the Reformed church.

"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return to God who gave it."

She is survived and her death is mourned by her husband, 10 children, 7 sons and 3 daughters; 27 grand children; 1 great grandchild and many friends.

PERUNA Best All Around Medicine Ever Made

I Hope You Will Publish This Letter

Mr. W. H. Edgar, 49 Cooper St., Atlanta, Georgia, writes:

"I suffered for fifteen years with rheumatic symptoms. Peruna cured me and I think it is the best all around medicine ever made. I hope you will publish this letter for the benefit of others who suffer."

MISS DID HER SWEET BEST

Dainty Maiden Interfered With Coal Wagon but Failed in Effort to Induce Team to Budge.

Irish profanity is not green. Frequently it is blue. It was recently—on State street, above Main, muses the Springfield Republican. This cloud of sulphurous rhetoric rose from the driver's seat of an overloaded coal wagon. Three horses—possibly they belonged to the union—went on strike. And the Irish driver, armed with a whip, tried to break the strike. And the horses flapped their ears, swished their tails and twisted their necks to blink at him A whisp of thin, blue smoke spouted from his clay pipe to mingle with the fires of his wrath. The lash of his whip smacked the brass-studded harness, and a crowd on the sidewalk howled

"Mush' ya bogger, mush'" yelled a voice

"Veer out the tiller lines and nail 'em on the bottom" laughed a second

And still the horses blinked. Michael rose to new heights of novelty, and the coal cart sagged

A young girl tripped down the street in a loud coat shouldered through the crowd and stared, with a gasp of horror pursing her delicate lips Then her eyes narrowed, and she stepped out into the gutter

"You stop beating those horses," she shrilled or I'll have you arrested" Michael glowered at her and smiled "an' maybe you kin get thim goin'," he suggested

"Of course I can she tossed her head and climbed up on the grimy load of coal

She grasped the ponderous reins in her tiny hands, stiffened her back and scorned the whip with an acid smile "Come darlings she cooed "be nice and pull this little load right up the hill" The sidewalk audience hooted She did her sweet best And the off horse stretched an elastic neck to see what manner of malady the gods had inflicted upon him now The middle horse flapped his ears again; the nigh horse switched his tail Then all three sighed with resignation and—didn't budge Finally a motor truck came along and yanked the cart to the top.

Bread Winner Is Wanted

After a girl gets on the shady side of twenty five she drops the affinity business and begins to hustle around for an ordinary bread winner.

WOMEN

Prepare for War

Thousands of women have overcome their sufferings, and have been cured of woman's ills by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This temperance medicine, though started nearly half a century ago, sells most widely to-day. It can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid, and every woman who suffers from backache, headache, nervousness, should take this "Prescription" of Dr. Pierce's. It is prepared from nature's roots and herbs and does not contain a particle of alcohol or any narcotic. It's not a secret prescription for its ingredients are printed on wrapper. Send 10c. for trial package to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—"About six years ago, after my little boy came, I could not gain back my strength. I developed quite a severe case of woman's trouble. I had inflammation and suffered with bearing-down pains which would be so severe I would have to lie down. I became so weak that all I wanted to do was lie and rest. It seemed that every spark of vitality had left me. I consulted a doctor and he said nothing but an operation would help me, but I would not consent. I had seen Dr. Pierce's Medicines advertised, so at once began taking the 'Favorite Prescription' and the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and it was not long until I noticed my appetite was returning, I could eat, so I knew it was doing me good. I took about twelve bottles and it was well worth it for it completely restored me to health, without the operation. For this I am so thankful and am always advising my friends to try Doctor Pierce's Remedies. I always keep the 'Extract of Smart-weed' on hand. Many of my friends (through my advice), have used the 'Smart-weed' and all pronounce it good."—Mrs. W. H. Avis, 314 S. 19th St.

Hezekiah's Progress.

Speaking at a dinner, Senator Porter J. McCumber of North Dakota referred to the progress of the farmer, and smilingly recalled this little story:

Uncle Josh was on his way to town one afternoon, and chancing to see his friend Abner working in an adjacent field, he paused for a small chat over the barbed wire fence. Incidentally inquiry was made after Abner's eldest son, Hezekiah.

"Hezekiah is in the city now," answered Abner, with some show of pride. "Been there most a year."

"Yes, I know that," returned Uncle Josh. "What I was wonderin' was which side he was on."

"Which side he was on," queried Abner, with a puzzled expression. "I don't just quite git ye."

"What I mean, Abner," explained Uncle Josh, "is Hezekiah buyin' gold bricks yet, or has he started in to sell 'em?"

Need of Haste.

A man whose duties keep him up o' nights, entered a downtown restaurant at a late hour one evening, relates an exchange He glanced at the clock, then at the calendar then at the menu, from which he ordered a frugal repast, Then he waited, nervously.

At the end of ten minutes, he succeeded in catching his waiter's eye.

"Look here, how long am I going to have to wait for that grub I ordered?" he inquired

"Oh, I guess it won't be long now," yawned the waiter. "In a hurry?"

"In a hurry? Say I ordered a meal without meat because it is meatless day And if I have to wait five minutes longer, it will be a wheatless day, and I won't get a thing!"

Family Pride.

"My dear, in writing to our boy in the army, remember that your letter will be read by the censor," said Mr Dubwaite.

"Oh, bother!" exclaimed Mrs. Dubwaite "Then I'll have to look up the dictionary. I'm not going to have any strange man seeing what a poor speller I am."

Strategy.

"Githerty keeps a bundle of his wife's love letters tied up with a pink ribbon"

"And he's been married for years! A sentimental chap, isn't he?"

"Not particularly, but he's crafty. By digging that bundle of letters out of his trunk at the psychological moment he has stopped many a tirade."

A Saving.

"Do you find it economical to live so far out in the country?" asked one woman.

"Yes," replied the other. "My husband has to make such a rush to catch the car he never has time to eat much breakfast."

CHAPTER XXV.

THE TRAP.

To Kasia Vard the day had been one of manifold excitement. Like Dan, she had awakened to find the boat motionless, and had run to the window to gaze entranced at the green slopes of Sandy Hook. Home! Home! She fairly sang the words as she dressed and rushed on deck. From that instant, every moment was charged with emotion, culminating as she leaned against the rail and gazed with misty eyes at Bartholdi's masterpiece. She remembered how, 10 years before, her father, with tears streaming down his cheeks, had lifted her in his arms for her first sight of the majestic Goddess, and had explained to her, in a voice broken by emotion, why this statue stood here, at the entrance of his great harbor, holding her torch high in the air.

The ship swept on, and Kasia, with a sigh of joy, turned her eyes forward for the first sight of New York.

It was at that moment her father joined her. One glance at his face, and she had placed her hand within his arm, walked back with him to their suite, entered and closed the door.

"Now tell me," she said. "What has happened?"

"I have just seen Pachmann," answered her father hoarsely. "He has arranged for the final conference as soon as we land. It will be at the consulate. There is yet one danger," and he dropped his voice. "Pachmann has discovered that there are spies on board—French spies. They suspect something—how much we do not know. But it is necessary for us to evade them. We will leave the pier as soon as we land with Pachmann and the Prince. Pachmann will have a car waiting—he has made all arrangements. Here is your landing ticket."

Kasia took it and slipped it inside her glove.

"Very well," she said. "But the baggage?"

"We cannot wait for that it would be too dangerous. I will return for it as soon as the conference is over." His eyes were burning with excitement, his lips twitching with nervousness. "I am glad that the hour is at hand," he added. "I feel that I could not endure a longer delay—these hours of suspense are dangerous for me."

Kasia laid a calming hand upon his arm.

"I know, father," she said. "You must not permit yourself to dwell upon it so. Let us go on deck again and watch the landing."

"No; we are to wait here," said her father. "These last moments we must not be seen," and he sat gnawing feverishly at his fingers.

The long minutes drifted by. They could hear the rush of feet and chatter of voices on the deck outside, then excited cries of recognition and greeting, as the boat swung into the dock, and finally the clatter of the gangplank as it was run into place. Almost at once there came a tap at the door. Vard sprang to open it and found Pachmann and the Prince outside.

"You are ready?" asked the former.

"Yes," and Kasia and her father stepped out upon the deck.

"You have your landing checks? Good. Then we will start."

They joined the long line moving down the gangplank.

"This way," said Pachmann, the instant they reached the pier, and led Vard hurriedly toward the entrance.

Kasia, left with the Prince, glanced into his moody and downcast face.

"So we are permitted to have another chat," she said, smiling at his woebegone appearance, and tucked her hand under his arm. "You look as though you needed some advice. What is wrong?"

He glanced at her, then looked away, and answered with a shake of the head.

Just beyond the entrance stood a handsome limousine, its motor throbbing. Pachmann hurried them all into it, stepped round for a word with the driver, then himself jumped in and slammed the door. The car started with a jerk, backed out of the pier shed, and headed away northward through the streets of Hoboken. This way and that it turned and doubled, while Pachmann gazed anxiously through the little window in the back. No one spoke, but they all watched Pachmann's face. At last they were in the open country, with a smooth road ahead. The driver opened his throttle, pushed up his spark, and in a moment they were whirling along at 40 miles an hour. Pachmann looked back for yet a moment; then he turned with a sigh of relief and sank back into his seat.

"We have evaded them," he said. "But we will take no chances."

On and on went the car, climbing to the top of the Palisades and threading the Jersey woods; mile after mile along woodland roads, past country estates, through little villages, on and on. At last, on a long stretch of lonely road, they stopped, and the chauffeur climbed down, detached the license numbers at front and rear, and strapped on another set. Then onward again, back toward the river, and finally, at the Fort Lee ferry, down to the water's edge. The boat was about to start when the car ran on board; in another minute it was moving out into the stream. No one else had come on board nor was there any sign of pursuers on the bank.

Leaving the ferry, on the other side, the car at once plunged into a tangle of by streets, and Pachmann half drew the curtains. Then turning southward along Riverside drive, it joined the endless procession of cars there in which it became at once only an indistinguishable unit. Finally it turned eastward along a quiet street, swung sharply around one corner and then around another, and stopped.

"Here we are," said Pachmann, threw open the door, and jumped out

The prince followed, and, without looking back, walked straight across the sidewalk and up the steps of the house opposite. Pachmann, with a smile on his lips, waited to assist Miss Vard to alight.

But this is not the consulate!" she protested, looking first at the house and then up and down the street She had never seen the consulate, but she knew it would not be in such a house nor in such a street. Besides, there was no flag above the door

"No, it is not the consulate," said Pachmann smoothly, and turned to Vard. "I found, at the last moment, that there was a reception at the consulate today which would make our conference there impossible. I managed to procure this house, where one of our secretaries lives, and where we will be secure against interruption But if you prefer the consulate, we can, of course, wait until tomorrow——"

"No, no," Vard broke in. "Let us get it finished at once—there has been too much delay."

"I agree with you," said Pachmann. "I, also, am anxious to get the affair settled," and he led the way into the house. "If you will wait here, Miss Vard," he added, and pulled aside the hangings before a door opening from the hall. "We will not be long."

Kasia stepped through the doorway, and the curtain dropped behind her. She heard the footsteps of her companions mounting the stair to the upper story; then all was still. She glanced about the room: it was a rather small one, furnished as a sitting room, with furniture both cheap and scant. There were two windows, side by side, which opened upon a little court or area way closed in by high walls, topped by an ugly and formidable iron chevaux de frise, which would be equally effective in preventing any one getting in or getting out.

She soon exhausted the interest of this limited prospect, and, turning back to the room, spent a long half hour wandering about it, looking at this and that, endeavoring to keep her thoughts occupied. She was vaguely uneasy, a feeling of oppression weighed upon her, and from moment to moment she caught herself listening for some sound, but the house was absolutely still. Finally she drew a chair to one of the windows, and sitting down, stared out again into the little court. It was dark and damp and well like and apparently never swept, for its pavement was littered with rubbish. Again she caught herself listening, her head half turned. But she heard no sound. It must be past the middle of the afternoon; she should be getting home to set their rooms in order, for tonight Dan was coming * * *

And again she was listening, rigid, breathless in her chair. There was no sound; but suddenly, with nerves a quiver, she sprang to her feet, crossed the room and swept back the hangings at the door. She was surprised to find that the door itself had been closed. She turned the knob, but the door did not open; she shook it, but it held fast. And then she realized that it was locked.

It was a moment before she understood. Then, very quietly, she crossed the room to another door and tried it. She had expected it to be locked also, but to her surprise it opened. Beyond it was a bed room, also with a window opening on the walled court, and beyond the bedroom was a windowless bathroom. There were no other doors.

She returned to the outer room and again tried the door, testing it cautiously but firmly with her whole strength. Yes; there could be no doubt of it—she was locked in. She went to one of the windows, raised the sash and looked out. It was at least a 12-foot drop to the flagged pavement of the court. That might be managed with the help of the bed clothes, but there remained the high wall and the threatening iron spikes. Below her, she could see that a small door opened from the court into the basement of the house, but it had no other exit.

She found the fresh air welcome, and sat down, at last, before the open window. She was much calmer than she had been; now that she was face to face with danger, the feeling of oppression vanished and her courage rose. She was a Pole, she had been trained in a hard school, she was not afraid. No, she repeated passionately to herself, she was not afraid; and how she hated that smooth tongued German, with the cold eyes and smiling lips! Treacherous! Treacherous!

"If you will come this way," said Pachmann, and Vard tramped after him up the stair to a room on the second floor.

The prince was already there, standing at the window, hands in pockets, staring moodily out.

"Be seated, Mr. Vard," said Pachmann. "My dear prince, will you not sit down?"

The prince flung himself into a chair.

"And now, Mr. Vard," went on Pachmann, sitting down very deliberately face to face with the inventor, "our answer is ready for you."

"Very well; let me have it," snapped Vard, twitching with impatience.

"We refuse to accept your conditions."

For an instant there was silence, then Vard leaped to his feet, his face livid.

"So you have been playing with me!" he cried. "Well, I suspected it! And you shall pay! Oh, you shall pay!" and he turned blindly to the door.

"One moment!" called Pachmann, and his voice had in it a ring of command which Vard had never hearl before. "Sit down. I have still something to say."

"I do not care to hear it."

"That is nothing to me. You shall hear it!"

With a glance of contempt, Vard strode to the door and turned the knob; but it did not open. He wrenched at it madly, but it held fast. In two strides he confronted Pachmann.

"What is the meaning of this?" he demanded.

"The meaning," replied the admiral sternly, "is that you are a prisoner here until I choose to release you. Now will you sit down?"

Vard stood for a moment, his face deadly white, his hands clasping and unclasping convulsively, staring down into Pachmann's leering eyes; then he went slowly back to his chair.

"That is right," said the German. "It will be best to take this calmly. In the first place, I want you to realize that you are wholly in my power. Nothing that occurs in this house will ever be known to the outside world. If you should fail to reappear, there will be no one to trace you. You will remember that we have your daughter also. And I say to you in all seriousness, and as emphatically as I can, that neither your life nor your daughter's life will cause me to turn aside or even to hesitate. I would kill you with my own hands and then your daughter—yes, and 1,000 like you, if need be—rather than that this chance should be lost to Germany. I say to you then, that either you will consent to my proposal, or both you and your daughter will suffer the most consequence"

Vard's eyes had never left the speaker's face, nor had any expression come back into his own. But the last words he laughed contemptuously.

"It is useless," he sneered. "I am not one to be frightened."

"I am not trying to frighten you—I warn you."

"Your warning is useless. I reply to you in all seriousness that neither my life, nor my daughter's life—no, nor the lives of 1,000 like us!—would persuade me to put this power in your hands. But you dare not kill me. In this brain, and there alone, is the great secret."

"You forget," Pachmann reminded him, "that in your baggage is a complete machine. I do not really need you."

At the words, Vard burst into a shout of mad laughter. Pachmann watched him, and his face fell into haggard lines.

"So that is it!" jeered the inventor, when he had got his breath. "So that is the great secret! Well, Pachmann, to that I answer 'Checkmate!' Go get the baggage! You are welcome to what you find there!"

"You mean the machine is there?" demanded Pachmann thickly.

"Just that!"

"Where is it then?"

Gazing into his adversary's bloodshot eyes, Vard had another burst of strangling laughter.

"I have already told you," he said. "In this brain—there!—there alone!" His face was red now, strangely red, and his words were queerly jumbled.

Pachmann sat looking at him for a moment, then he rose.

"We shall soon see if you are speaking the truth," he said. "Whether you are or not makes no difference. If there is no machine in your baggage, you can construct for us another"

"Oh, shall I," screamed Vard, also springing to his feet. "Shall I! How good of you, that permission!"

"You shall construct another," repeated Pachmann, between clenched teeth. "Oh, you will be glad to consent, once I turn the screw; Come prince."

He tapped at the door, and there came from outside the scrape of a sliding bolt. Then, standing aside for the prince to pass, he looked once at Vard, and turned to close the threshold.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE TURN OF THE SCREW

It was a moment later that Kasia Vard, still sitting at the window staring out into the court, searching desperately through her brain for some plan of escape, was brought quivering to her feet by a shrill scream, followed by the sound of a terrible struggle on the floor above. There was a heavy tramping to and fro, the thud of falling furniture, a dull crash that shook the house—and then silence. It was over in a moment, but Kasia stood rigid for a moment longer, her hands against her heart, before she flew to the door and wrenched at the knob.

The door did not yield. Panting with excitement, she snatched up a chair and drove it with all her strength against the lower panel. The chair flew to pieces in her hands, but the door held firm. She looked about for some other weapon, she heard the sound of a sliding bolt, the door swung open, and Pachmann entered. He looked at her and at the broken chair, and smiled slightly.

"I come to reassure you, Miss Vard," he said, "since I suppose you must have heard the noise of our little combat. No one was injured; but your father, after a burst of rage at finding himself in our hands, during which I found it most difficult to control him, has had what appears to be an epileptic seizure. Is he subject to epilepsy?"

"I have known him to have attacks," said Kasia, in a voice, with a shuddering remembrance of the desperate crisis which each had come.

"There is nothing to be done, I think, except to loosen his clothing and bathe his head and wrists?"

"No—that is all." Mechanically her hands were smoothing her disordered hair.

"And there is, of course, no danger. Nevertheless, you may wish to go to him."

"I do wish it."

"Then come with me," and he led the way up the stair. "Your father is in there," he said, pausing before a door leading to an inner room. "I will get some water,"

The Men Who Have to Stay.

Captain Arthur Hunt Chute, in Harper's Magazine.

Just before a mine goes up, if a premonition has been given, the feeling of suspense in the front line is like that on board a doomed ship. The order is given to abandon the trench, and in a panic every man rushes for safety in the rear. But not every man can leave. Sentries must still man the parapet, they remain at the post of duty till death. The chaps who did the birkenhead drill, or the sentry who stood to his post in Pompeii, have nothing on the sentry on the front line, who stands by his post of duty while the mine is being sprung under his feet.

On one occasion we were abandoning a trench where the explosion of a mine was imminent, it was pitch dark, and the night was perfectly quiet, when there came the dread premonition of a mine. The order was given for all except the sentries to retire, and in a panic of fear I rushed to the communicating trench.

There flashed before me the momentary picture of a sentry at his post of duty, standing on the rim of the fire trench with fixed bayonet, firm and imperturbable, gazing into the gloom of No Man's land. Under his feet were the rockings of an earthquake that soon should engulf him. But though the earth were removed his duty remained, and he as a soldier stood firm. A few minutes later, with a reverberating roar he went up with the mine. The momentary and flashing glimpse of that gallant sentry remains for me my most heroic, soul-enkindling memory of two years of war.

Sometimes in the springing of a mine no warning whatever is given. With a roar that is heard for 100 miles or more the bowels of the earth burst forth and whole regiments are swept away. Human beings and trenches alike are tossed as from a giant geyser in a soaring flood of fire and smoke and debris.

I saw a mine like this spring without warning on the Third Canadian division. My division the Ters Canadians was holding trenches just in front of Hill 60, at Ypres. The Third division was on our left. It was about 5 o'clock on a beautiful June morning. A profound peace was reigning when without the slightest warning, there came a deep roar such as I had never heard before, and the trenches to our left were literally swept hundreds of feet into the air. In this awful mine perished Major General Mercer, C. B., and the flower of the Third Canadian division. So out of peace profound, by the springing of a mine, the worst aspect of the real front may suddenly reveal itself.

THINK, TALK VICTORY.

From the Chicago Herald.

"You ask me what my war aims are? My aim is to be a victor." Thus Clemenceau, the new French premier, spoke to the chamber of deputies. The chamber promptly voted its confidence overwhelmingly.

Clemenceau sounded the right note not only for France but for all the allied nations, not only for the nations collectively but for every patriotic individual thereof. There must be no thought of compromise with the world's enemy. There must be no talk of failure. There must be nothing, even in the face of any setback, save a steel hand determination to conquer.

The man who talks of the impossibility of beating Germany is a bad American. The man who talks of compromise with militarism and autocracy sins against the nation. This is no time for an attitude of philosophical suspense on the part of any patriot, still less for exhibitions of world sorrow and dejection. It is a time for girding up the loins for putting our feet upon the solid rock of dauntless resolution, for triumphing absolutely over every doubt or fear that stands between us and the thought of ultimate success.

"In spite of all we shall conquer the Goth."

The American Look.

From the North American Review.

Several European writers have remarked on the appearance of the American soldier as a type so strongly set in its individuality that it has evoked interest in a world where faded vision can but picture men in khaki.

What in him, may we ask, at this time of storm and stress has gained such wide attention? Not his points of feature, nor strength of stature, nor shade of skin and hair. None of these. It is the American look. That expression of intensified keenness (which the English mistook for seriousness), the look connoting eagerness, zest and—best of all—still unsatisfied interest in the world.

As far back as 1777 when Burgoyne with his Hessians surrendered to the colonial army after the battle of Saratoga, that same impression of the American expression was apparent as conveyed by a Hessian prisoner, who wrote in his memoirs:

We passed through the American camp, in which all the regiments were drawn out beside the artillery and stood under arms. Not one of them was uniformly clad; each had on the clothes which he wore in the fields, the church or the tavern.

They stood however like soldiers well arranged and with military air in which there was but little to find fault. All the muskets had bayonets, and the sharpshooters had rifles. The men all stood so still we were filled with wonder. Not one of them made a single motion as if he would speak with his neighbor. Nay more, all the lads that stood there in rank and file, kind nature had formed so thin, so slender, so nervous, that it was a pleasure to look at them and we were all surprised at such a well formed race.

In all earnestness, English America surpasses the most of Europe in the growth and looks of its male population. The whole nation has a natural turn and talent for war and a soldier's life.

Mrs. Bone Necklace.

From the Los Angeles Tribune.

We turn aside for a moment from the asperities of life to contemplate the pleased countenance of Mrs. Harriet Bone Necklace. Resident though she is of the distant Wakpamni district of the Pine Ridge Indian agency in South Dakota, her justified joy must arouse gratification everywhere.

To Mrs. Harriet Bone Necklace the national emergency food garden commission gave a prize of $5, which was but a trifle and a national certificate of merit, which is a reward worth having, for the best canned vegetables grown in a war garden. Her exhibit included one quart of wild plums, one quart of green corn, a quart of string beans and another of rhubarb, two quarts of garden beets, a quart of garden peas, a glass of plum butter, one of strawberry preserve and one of buffalo berry jelly. Harriet, we salute you. Mr. Bone Necklace, you are indeed a lucky man.

No "Citizen of the World."

From the Detroit Free Press.

It sounds loftily grandiloquent to call one's self "a citizen of the world." The phrase is mouth filling. Tagore, the Bengali poet, decries nationalism also, and would have world citizenship; nevertheless his grievance against Great Britain is that she gives India no aid toward becoming a nation.

But just what does our street car orator's phrase mean? Simply being free from all local attachments, being "on his own," having no standing in any country; if wronged or injured having no redress save by grace of the authorities, yet amendable to the law of any land where he happens to be, unable to travel unchallenged through lack of a passport and unable to get one because of claiming no rights as citizen of any nation.

Such would be the status of "a citizen of the world" at present, were there any such thing. The phrase is meaningless. A man is a citizen of some country in fact or theory. The country in which he is born is his country. He may repudiate it, may dishonor it, nevertheless [illegible] section of Hoop Net, Iowa, found Evert Bales. Mrs. Wheeler's County. It was that he should never [illegible] upon or hear the name of his country [illegible] damned. Thus he learned what it ought to be without hope or fear and the hopes, resentments and memories which are to one's own country.

Yet there is a still more dreadful thing than this—that of the men exiled because they have attempted the ruin of their country. Benedict Arnold, disappointed and remorseful cut to the quick under Franklin's charge that he sold himself for "30 pieces of silver" and dying in the endeavor to drag on his old buff and blue continental uniform is at once one of the most execrated and pathetic figures in American annals.

The Old Fashioned Drunkard.

Speaking of old fashioned things, what has become of the old fashioned town drunkard? Of course the temperance people will say that he died long ago from Bright's disease but that is not the point. The old fashioned town drunkard has simply gone the way of other old fashioned things, and while there are men in all towns who imbibe too freely the typical little town drunkard of the past has disappeared forever from the scene—he and his family.

For it was his family, rather than the drunkard himself, that was conspicuous in the minds and hearts of the little community. He had a good family—a wife and daughters and sons, and everybody felt sorry for them and seemed to show them especial attention because of the weakness of the father. They had a hard time getting along but folks helped them. But it couldn't keep the wife from appearing downcast when she met people and the girls were not cheerful and the boys didn't like to talk about their father like the other boys.

Every year or two the town drunkard "got religion" and "quit." There was great rejoicing in the town, and in the family the light of heaven seemed to come down and stay. The children got new clothes, and the mother bought a new dress, and people talked about the great difference between the family now and a month ago.

But the old fashioned drunkard soon "fell from grace." He showed up at home in a maudlin condition, and peace and happiness and light went out at home, and the clothing of the children became shabby, and the mother did not go down town, and folks wondered how the family managed to live. Only the mother and God in heaven know how the family managed to live—and it can not be recorded here on earth the sorrow that the family knew.

The Camouflage of Wheat.

From Daily Financial America.

The selling of wheat products in England below the price obtaining here is something in the nature of political camouflage. Much criticism has been aroused here, we among others contributing, by the rates our bakers were charging against the prices his brother workers in England were getting.

It now leaks out that the British government is carrying in its budget $200,000,000 to cover losses sustained by selling wheat in England below cost. This is a sort of robbing Peter to pay Paul method, it strikes us. To render the people a service, they are merely asked to pay taxes instead of increased price for necessities. The politician well knows that the layman will subscribe money for war purposes cheerfully, while he would seriously object to any increase in the cost of living. Mr. Politician, therefore, takes up the slack under cover of a war budget. Mr. Layman subscribes right heartily, and the trouble is averted. There is humor even in figures, if you look at them rightly.

HOUSETOPS ARE UTILIZED

Roofs of Small Homes in Palestine Are Devoted to Many Purposes, Including Quarters for Stock.

Housetops play a very important part in village life in Palestine writes Rev. C. T. Wilson in "Pleasant Life in the Holy Land." In the hilly districts the one-storied rooms are often built back to the side of the knoll or hill on which the village stands, or where it is in a valley, a perpendicular rock surface will occasionally be utilized as one of the walls, and the roof will thus be on a level with the street above. Where such a village is dependent on the spring for its water supply the roof will be made flush with the roadway, in order to get a greater area from which to collect the water for the cistern below. When this is done, it is often impossible to tell from above where the street ends and the roof begins.

The roofs, although really domed, are not unfrequently afterward leveled up so as to make them quite flat, or sloping slightly to one corner to throw off the rain more easily. They are put to an infinite variety of uses, thus in a village built on the side of a particularly steep valley where it was almost impossible to find a flat space I have seen a housetop used as threshing floor. Where the house is not built against the hillside, faggots of brushwood used by the women for firewood are often piled up on the roof for safety. During the dry season I have seen goats and sheep folded there at night and in the hot sultry nights of summer the whole family will frequently sleep on the housetop. In the case of a number of rooms built close to each other for a family of sons the roofs will join, though sometimes at different levels. In some cases the roofs are reached from the streets by an outside staircase.

The best word-picture of the ancient city of Jerusalem is Pierre Loti's. He went thither on a pilgrimage from Egypt across the desert, along the same line which has been followed by the English forces. "The sun rises, pale, ominously yellow, a sun of storm, amid threatening clouds," he writes. "Beyond, a large city is gradually revealed, on stony and mournful mountains; through the dust and lashing rain it is not easy to distinguish it. . . . Jerusalem, recognizable from all other towns, with its formidable walls and its little cupola-covered roofs of stone; Jerusalem, gloomy and high, inclosed within its battlements, under a dark sky. . . ."

Interesting Distinction.

"One way to find out who likes you and who doesn't," remarked Miss Cayenne, "is to learn to play the violin."

"What has that to do with friendship?"

"The people who like you will call you a violinist. Those who don't will call you a fiddler."

If you ever get acquainted with yourself the chances are that you won't find your company so very agreeable.

Let's not be overanxious to grasp an opportunity that is too hot.

Why That Lame Back?

Morning lameness, sharp twinges when bending, or an all-day backache; each is cause enough to suspect kidney trouble. Get after the cause. Help the kidneys. We Americans go it too hard. We overdo, overeat and neglect our sleep and exercise and so we are fast becoming a nation of kidney sufferers. 72% more deaths than in 1890 is the 1910 census story. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands recommend them.

An Iowa Case

W. H. Simmons, Forest City, Iowa, says: "My back pained as though it were being pulled apart. Often sharp, knifelike pains darted through me, making me almost helpless. Mornings I could hardly get out of bed and to stoop took all my strength. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills did me so much good that I kept on [illegible] boxes in all and since then my back has never bothered me."

NEW SERIAL PHOTO-PLAY AT THE IDLE HOUR

Tuesday evening completed the last installment of "The Shielding Shadow" and all ended well—as the story goes—the death of the villian and the happy marriage of Leontine and her sweetheart, together with the clearing up of several mysteries. On next Tuesday evening the new serial will begin, "The Gray Ghost," featuring Eddie Polo, the man who played "Pedro," in "Liberty." In order to get the people interested in the new serial the management of the Idle Hour has decided to give a FREE SHOW on next Tuesday night, the beginning of "The Gray Ghost." This promises to be one of the best serials in filmdom and you should be on hand at the first installment. Remember it is FREE! Show starts at 7:30 p. m.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH NOTES

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

God says, "Remember the Sabbath Day, to keep it holy. Six days shall thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." Ex. 20: 8-11.

Parents, how are you spending the Lord's holy day? As you regard this sacred day and spend it, so will your sons and daughters. Our children seldom think more of the importance of keeping the Sabbath and of attending the worship of God in the sanctuary than parents do themselves, nor can we expect them to. Therefore, we as parents, ought to see to it that our place in church is filled by ourselves.

Preaching service at 10:00 o'clock Sunday morning.

Sunday school at 11:00 o'clock.

Epworth League at 7:30 o'clock in the evening. Leader—Mrs. Albert Yahnke. Topic—"The Plague of Discontent." This will be a union service throughout the evening.

A welcome to all.

VETERINARIAN WILL MAKE KLEMME CALLS

Mr. J. S. Wesson, the Veterinarian of Garner, was in Klemme the other day on business and while here stopped at the Times Office. Mr. Wesson announced his intentions of practicing in Klemme, as this community is without a veterinarian since Dr. Thomas has enlisted. Mr. Wesson was raised in this county and is well known around here, having lived near Garner for a number of years. He is a graduate of Kansas City and is well posted on his work. He will answer all calls from Klemme and vicinity. If you have a sick horse, or other animal, just call Mr. Wesson at Garner and he will attend your case. Look for his ad in the Times.

Herald Gruetzmacher and Mr. Douggan of Iowa Falls came down to Klemme last Saturday to play with our band for Red Cross Day. Herald plays a slide trombone and Mr. Douggan a cornet. They are both excellent musicians and were a valuable addition to the band on that date. Herald is becoming quite a musician now and is leading a couple of orchestras at Iowa Falls.

KLEMME, IOWA

Boosters of intensive gardening among boys in Massachusetts cleverly finished the year's fine record by presenting to every boy a certificate of service rendered on farm or gardens. It is an ornate document from "the commonwealth of Massachusetts, committee of public safety, department of mobilization of school boys for farm service," and bears the state seal and the autograph of the governor. No prouder treasure for enterprising boys could be fashioned.

The doctrine of the "unwritten law" applied to confiscated coal did not impress the federal grand jury at Cleveland and that body handed down a batch of indictments against the officials of the town of Willoughby, Ohio, who swiped carloads of coal without permission of the company. Town Prosecutor Von Beselar, one of the indicted men, is said to have advised taking the coal, saying "the law of humanity is greater than that of the government."

In the Danish sailing fleet are no fewer than 16 vessels, each more than 100 years old. The oldest is the Constance, registered at Nalskov, and built at Aerce in 1723. This vessel has seen 10 generations of Danish kings and was already 100 years old when the first steamer was built. The average size of Danish sailing vessels is 414 registered tons. In March, 1916, there were four of more than 1,000 tons, but purchases abroad have now increased that number to 25.

"Now that new locomotives cannot be obtained within any reasonable time," writes the Railway Review, in discussing the country's need for additional transportation, "it is the part of wisdom to make the most of those whose serviceability can be increased 10, 25 or 50 per cent. Money spent in this way begins to earn money and to smooth out the situation quickly."

Brazil, which moves annually the greatest coffee crop in the world, has developed an important industry in the weaving of jute bagging. The entire coffee export of Brazil and many other products leave the country in bags of domestic manufacture. Brazile imports domestic manufacture. Brazil imports its jute from the Ganges region of British India through Calcutta or Scotch markets.

Captain Luis Llanso, of Spain, arrived in San Francisco recently with his wife and nine children. The children were born in seven different countries. Montserrat in Spain, Estela, in Portugal, Joaquin, in United States, Lu in China, Francisco in Japan, Josefa and Mar in Manila and Nuria and Jaime, twins, on the Pacific.

Secret service agents already have a score of nearly $100,000,000 of merchandise and food tagged in the warehouses of three cities. New York city's total tops up $75,000,000. Buffalo $10,000,000 in sugar alone and Boston $5,000,000. The record of only 30 days warehouse sleuthing is regarded as a mere starter.

The total value of the mineral production of the country in 1916 was more than $[illegible],000,000, increasing $1,070,000,000 or 45 per cent over the $2,393,800,000 recorded for 1915, and exceeding the former record year (1913) by more than $1,000,000,000, according to the geological survey, department of the [illegible].

The United States government is reported as having placed additional orders for 4,500 narrow gauge cars for the use of the forces overseas as follows: American Car and Foundry company 1,500, Pressed Steel Car company 1,000, Standard Steel Car company 1,000 and Ralston Steel Car company 1,000.

The longest novel in the world belongs to Japan. Its author is Kiong Te Bakin. It was commenced in 1852 and published volume by volume as it came out, over a period of 50 years. There are 106 volumes, 106,000 pages, 3,150,000 lines and about 38,000,000 words. A complete copy weighs 130 pounds.

The first telescope has been attributed to various scientists and inventors of the early part of the Seventeenth century, including Galileo, Jansen, Jacob Adriunz and Zacarias Tausz, but documentary evidence points to a Dutch spectacle maker, Hans Lippershey, as the man who discovered the germ of the idea.

One practical means of safeguarding soldiers' interests at home is taking shape at Washington in an organization of lawyers pledged to render gratuitous legal service for members of the army and navy. The plan contemplates the appointment of branch committees in every community.

Experiments are being made to determine the value of pulverized coal for fuel on the railroad of Brazil. An American pulverizing plant has been built, and with American coal the tests were successful. Brazilian coal will be tested in the near future.

Columbia university, New York city, now maintains an "extension school" at 290 Broadway, in the heart of the business district, where courses are given in railway traffic and rates. There is also a course on theory and practice of ocean transportation.

The mangrove of the south from Florida to the mouth of the Mississippi is a curious plant not closely related to any other genus, but somewhat approaching the myrtle family and is a plant of unusual interest.

When they ran out of yarn several North Dakota women did not stop knitting, but sheared the wool from their own sheep, which they carded and spun, and kept on with their knitting for the soldiers.

Ale Alumnae association of Smith college has devised a plan by which members may avoid dues for all time by paying $30 now far a life membership. The money was invested in the second Liberty loan.

Over 70,000 cities and towns in the United States use 9,151,211 telephones. It is estimated that an average of 8,600,000,000 messages are sent over these lines annually.

"The price of preaching must go up along with other labor costs," declared Rev. G. H. Lobdell, pastor of the Christian church at Eureka, Cal., in announcing his resignation because of the small salary.

About $13,000,000 of the total estimated cost of $56,000,000 has been spent to date on the Welland ship canal. The work has been suspended on account of the war.

By mere waste, caused by coins rubbing one against another, the civilized world loses one ton and a quarter of gold and 85 tons of silver annually.

MOTHER AND CHILD FINALLY REUNITED

Were Separated During Mother's Illness When Child Was Babe 17 Years Ago.

Marshalltown, Ia., Dec. 8.—Although for years she had lived within a few miles of her daughter, whom she had not seen since she was a baby, and had given up hope of ever seeing again, Mrs. H. N. Rucker, of Toledo, Ia., came to this city yesterday to see her baby of 17 years ago, now Miss Edith Hillman, aged 18, of this city.

The reunion of mother and daughter after all these years came about in a very unexpected and unusual manner. Mrs. Rucker, as Mrs. Hillman, formerly lived in Tama, Ia. She had two daughters one, Edith, a babe of a year, and one a few years older. The mother became desperately ill of typhoid fever and for months was unable to care for her children. The father turned them over to his sister who gave them into the care of the authorities at the county farm of Tama county. Strangers took the babies from the county farm, placed them in an orphanage at Davenport and there they were separated, and adopted into different homes.

Last Monday these entered as members of the Iowa Soldiers' home, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nash, of Montour, Ia., the latter a sister of Mrs. Rucker. Presiding over the dining room in the old people's building where the Nashes were assigned, was a young woman who when Mrs. Nash first saw her, looked strangely familiar and was finally identified as the younger of the missing girls.

GOVERNOR HARDING IS GUEST OF GEN. ALLEN

Camp Cody, N. M., Dec. 8.—Gov. W. L. Harding, of Iowa, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Everest of Council Bluffs, and Senator Frederick Larrabee, of Iowa will be guests of Gen. H. A. Allen commanding the Iowa-Nebraska infantry brigade, and other officers at a banquet Friday night in a Deming hotel. The gubernatorial party is being shown around the Cody reservation by home state men. Senator Larrabee is a son of ex-Governor Larrabee, of Iowa, and a brother of Mrs. C. B. Robbins, wife of adjutant of the brigade, who is from Cedar Rapids.

COUNCIL BLUFFS GIRL A CORPORAL IN GREECE

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 8.—Miss Ruth Harl of Council Bluffs who has for more than two years been in ambulance driver in France and has been commissioned a corporal has recently been transferred to Salonika to become the personal chauffeur of the Countess de Shemach who next to the commander in chief, is considered one of the most powerful personages in Salonika. During a recent Paris leave the Countess noted that Miss Harl became excited at personal chauffeur was in France and then sent to Salonika as a member of her personal staff.

Corporal Harl has put two years in war service in the department of the corporal in charge of an ambulance company in the French army and from the day she sailed from New York has been under fire as she ever knew before.

UNUSUAL WRECK ON BURLINGTON RAILROAD

Villisca, Ia., Dec. 8.—One of the most unusual railroad wrecks occurring on the Burlington road in Iowa in years resulted in the yard limits of Villisca late yesterday afternoon when three freight trains were wrecked and 23 cars were destroyed. Miraculously only one person was injured. Fireman H. L. McGrath who jumped and sustained a broken hip.

SOLVES MYSTERY OF A DEAD INFANT

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec. 7.—Coroner King has solved the mystery surrounding the finding of the still warm body of a murdered infant in the road six miles from Cedar Rapids. The child was born in a taxicab and the mother, who has been located, threw it into the road where it was found by a farmer.

DES MOINES—Iowa has gone up and over the top again in her wonderful Y. M. C. A. war fund campaign, according to the official figures as announced by State Secretary W. M. Parsons. The quota which Iowa had to raise as filed by the national leaders was $800,000. The total subscribed to date is more than $1,510,000.

FORT DODGE—Rev. William Shumann, pastor of the German Evangelical church of Pomeroy, was forced to salute the American flag by 150 pupils in the public schools who gathered in front of his residence. Later a flag was raised over the parsonage and the minister warned not to take it down.

AMERICAN BRAVERY IN BATTLE PRAISED

New Episode, Details of Which Are Concealed, Occurs on Famous Battlefield.

By the Associated Press.

With the American Army in France (Thursday), Dec. 6.—The first American unit to receive the coveted, "Fourragere" (a French military decoration worn on the left shoulder) in the colors of the ribbon of the Cross of War, is American sanitary section No. 5. Notification of the award was announced at headquarters today. The section previously had received two official citations. A general order from General Petain stated they were for "splendid conduct before the enemy." In forwarding the communications the chief of the French military mission attached to the American army added:

"This glorious distinction is a merited reward for the brave men composing the section, who on a famous battlefield, have given evidence of the fraternity and solidarity of the soldiers of the France and America united in the common cause."

Information as to the exact nature of the sections' services was unavailable at headquarters tonight.

AN 8-MONTHS'-OLD BABE BURNS TO DEATH

Mother Left Cab Standing Too Close to Stove When She Left Room.

Webster City, Ia., Dec. 8.—The 8-months'-old baby girl of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Rocker burned to death here this morning. The mother left the child in its cab near the heating stove while she went to a neighbor's home to borrow a wash tub. When she returned home the house was all ablaze inside. She rushed in and grasped the baby, but the child was dead. The fire damaged the home badly, burning practically all the furniture in the house.

POLICEMAN ARRESTED ON GRAVE CHARGE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Dec. 8.—Charged with accepting a check for $200 from Mal Murphy, a hotel man of Carroll, in consideration of Murphy's release from custody, F. A. Robinson, a former special city policeman, who did duty in what is know as East Omaha, a part of Council Bluffs, was today arrested and held under heavy bonds.

Murphy tells that while he was en route from Omaha to Carroll last July Robinson arrested him for carrying beer in a suitcase, that on the way to the police station Robinson talked settlement and that he gave him his check for $200 to avoid going to jail. The check was cashed.

HAWARDEN BOY GOES INTO AJT. GENERAL'S OFFICE

TEST LAW FORBIDDING HIGH SCHOOL FRATERNITIES

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 6.—A suit to test the Iowa anti-high school fraternity law was started in the courts here by a number of boys who have fallen under the school board's ban against secret societies. The refusal of the school bard to allow fraternity or sorority members to remain in school pending the court hearing may result in an immediate fight in court.

LADIES' AID SOCIETY HELPS THE RED CROSS

Early, Ia., Dec. 8.—The Ladies' Aid society of the Methodist Episcopal church on Tuesday evening gave a supper in the opera house for the benefit of the local chapter of the Red Cross. A total of $103.75 was realized. The women in charge of the affair were costumed appropriate to the occasion, while the decorations were original and partook of the Red Cross idea.

CORRECTIONVILLE—Ten cars of fat cattle and six of hogs were shipped from here from the McNear brothers farm. The hogs averaged over 300 pounds each and brought the shippers something more than $20 each.

AMERICAN ARTILLERY GUIDED BY PHOTOGRAPHS

By Associated Press.

With the American Army in France, Dec. 6.—American army aviators are now working with the artillery and the results so far have been most satisfactory to both branches of the service. Yesterday American airmen flew over a certain section of the American zone and took photographs.

The artillery today started firing at five separate targets located from the photographs. The aviators took to the air and the observers watched the results of the firing, which was at a considerable range.

The first shells fell wide of the mark, but within four minutes the observers were able to correct this with wireless messages to the batteries so that the shells began to hit the location. Later the observers had practice in locating the other "enemy" with more or less success.

CHARLES HASTENS TO REASSURE HIS MASTER

Amsterdam, Dec. 6.—A dispatch received here from Vienna quotes Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary as saying in an address to an Austro-German delegation that the dual monarchy is ready at any time to conclude peace that would guarantee the integrity of the monarchy. He added, however, that his country would not cease fighting until its enemies renounced their intentions of dismembering it.

"The sorely tried Russian people may be sure that we sincely desire to restore our former friendly relations with them," he said.

"We will remain the masters in our own house. Our alliance with the German empire has been gloriously strengthened by victorious march southwest. The most cordial and fraternal relations bind us to the progressive Bulgarian people. I confidently hope a period of fresh prosperity and secure development awaits the closely allied Ottoman empire."

CLEMENCEAU CALLS FOCH BACK TO ARMY

Paris, Dec. 6.—General Foch is no longer a member of the interallied supreme war council. Confirmation of this was given by Premier Clemenceau in the course of an interview with Marcel Hutin, editor of the Echo de Paris. Asked for the reason for this, the premier replied:

"Because I want General Foch near me and as, however diligent he may be, he cannot be at Versailles and Paris at the same time. I am going to keep him and have agreed with him to replace him at Versailles by General Weygand, who was recently promoted to general of divisions."

Questioned as to what was being accomplished at the Versailles council, M. Clemenceau said:

"What is being realized at Versailles? Why, united military action of the allies."

BRYAN FIRST WITNESS AGAINST "LITTLE BOB"

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—Further postponement until late next week of the Senate committee investigation of Senator La Follette's St. Paul speech was ordered today after Senator La Follette had advised the committee that his attorney could not be present next Tuesday, when it was planned to begin testimony with former Secretary Bryan as the first witness.

LEMARS CASE BEFORE U. S. SUPREME COURT

Collateral Inheritance Tax on Peterson Estate Is Being Contested.

LeMars, Ia., Dec. 7.—Attorney Nelson Miller has returned from Washington, where he recently appeared before the United States supreme court in the matter of collateral inheritance tax on the estate of John Peterson, who died intestate here a few years ago.

Some of the heirs to the estate live in Sweden. It was claimed by the attorneys for the estate that their part of the estate could not, because of a treaty with Sweden, be assessed for more than the parts going to American citizens. The matter has been through the district and supreme courts of Iowa and is now in the hands of the United States supreme court.

RETURNED SOLDIER IS GIVEN BIG RECEPTION

Logan, Ia., Dec. 7.—Public spirited citizens of Cincinnati township joined in paying respect to George Wilson, the United States navy boy home on furlough after recovery in the Greek hospital from injuries received when the German submarine blew up the ship in the Mediterranean sea. The reception was held at California Junction last evening, the Rev. Harvey Hostetler was chairman and was assisted by the Rev. David Miller, of Missouri Valley. The veterans of the civil war occupied a place of honor on the platform, and the pupils of the public schools sang patriotic songs, and then Mr. Wilson, with an escort of 10 young men and ladies, was introduced as the speaker of the evening. He told of life in the trenches and on the seas, and for what the nations are fighting. After the speaking a banquet was served and then Mr. Wilson was presented a purse of $50 and a handsome watch by his friends at California Junction.

SUTHERLAND, IA., BOY CABLES HE IS SAFE

Sutherland, Ia., Dec. 7.—Frank Klema has just received a cablegram from his son, William, stating that they had arrived safely over there. These boys are of the 168th United States infantry. This is the same bunch of boys who started across the water for "somewhere over there" about four weeks ago and, while they had traveled for four and one-half days on the water and were near the danger zone, they were compelled to turn back, making a trip of about 10 days on the water. The engine or boiler went bad and they couldn't make time to keep up with the balance of the fleet, and the commander didn't feel like taking chances in going through the war zone. It was reported by some of the boys who wrote home that another boat had the trouble and that it was sunk, but they did not know or learn what became of him.

CORNER STONE LAID FOR CONSOLIDATED SCHOOL

Madelon, Ia., Dec. 7.—The corner stone of the new $100,000 Madelon consolidated school building was laid yesterday afternoon. The Masonic order had charge of the ceremonies. The grand lodge of Iowa was represented by Deputy Grand Master Thomas J. Reeves, of Hawarden and Newton R. Parvin, grand secretary, of Cedar Rapids.

After the ceremony of the laying of the corner stone the exercises were concluded in the opera house, where Professor Keeler of Denison made the address of the occasion. A large number of representative Masons from surrounding towns were present.

ESCAPED ROBBER IS CAUGHT IN CALIFORNIA

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 7.—Harvey Lee, one of Iowa's notorious bank robbers, who escaped late last summer from Fort Madison penitentiary, is under arrest at Sacramento, Cal., according to information received here. He will be brought back to Iowa to serve out his unexpired sentence.

Details of the capture are lacking. Lee escaped twice from Fort Madison, the first time by "sawing" his way to freedom, and last August he made his getaway by a ladder which was left in the penitentiary yard.

YOUNG MOTHER DIED QUITE SUDDENLY

Correctionville, Ia., Dec. 7.—The funeral of the late Mrs. Anton Mallum, of Lawton, was held here yesterday afternoon from the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miller. Mrs. Mallum went to bed Sunday night feeling a little indisposed and at midnight was found by her husband, dead, having died from heart failure. She is survived by her husband and a babe 8 months old.

D. A. R.'S OF IOWA SEND FLAGS TO TROOPS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 7.—When Governor Harding, accompanied by Adjutant General Logan, Senator Francis Larrabee, of Fort Dodge; F. F. Everist, of Council Bluffs, and Charles A. Rawson left today for Deming, N. M. to inspect the Iowa troops at Camp Cody they took with them seven silk American flags gifts of the Iowa Daughters of the American Revolution to be presented to the Iowa boys at Camp Cody.

ANOTHER CAMP DODGE MAN HELD AS A SPY

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 7.—Kirk Jacobs, an expert draftsman, who has been working as a barber at Camp Dodge, was arrested as a spy and will probably be interned. War maps of French battle fronts were in his possession. He is the second spy suspect taken at the cantonment.

CAMP CENSORSHIP SOMEWHAT RELAXED

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 7.—Censorship was loosened up at Camp Dodge today insofar as newspaper men are permitted to get information from more than one officer, although certain ones are designated to give out information. One newspaper man was expelled because he has sent out improper reports.

IOWA CITY—The program for the fourth annual conference on school supervision for educational workers, has been announced. The meeting will be held at the state university here, opening December 13 and continuing three days.

ITALY SLOWLY YIELDS GROUND

Austro-German Forces Take Mountain Peaks, But Italians Hope to Hold Passes.

KAISER TAKES OFFENSIVE

With Hundreds of Thousands of Men From East Front He Prepares Mightiest Onslaught in West.

Petrograd, Dec. 8.—Germany apparently is to be permitted, under the Russo-German armistice plan, to transfer all the troops she desires from the Russian front for use against the allies. The full text of the armistice agreement, signed by the Sixty-seventh Russian and the Thirty-first German infantry division commanders, as published here today in the newspaper Pravda, shows no stipulation that German troops must not be used against the allies on the other fronts. Such a stipulation was specifically pledged by Foreign Minister Trotzky in a recent speech.

By Associated Press.

While the tremendous effort the Austro-Hungarian army in the eastern Trentino is making to gain the passes into the Italian plains resulted yesterday in the pushing back of the Italian line at one point, the vital front remains unbroken.

The advance was scored just to the east of Asiago, where, according to today's official statement from Berlin, the eminence of Monte Sisemol was stormed. The capture may have been one result of the recession in the Italian line just to the east the day previous after heavy fighting for Monte Fior and Monte Castelgomberto. Dispatches from Italian headquarters have reflected confidence there that the new line in this sector was capable of holding the route to the passes.

German wedges driven into the salient before Cambrai have compelled the British to evacuate exposed points and they have given up to the Germans several villages west of Cambrai as well as the Bourlon wood.

The British line has been shortened and made more capable of strong defense.

Berlin in its latest report claims the occupation of Marcoing about four miles southwest of Cambrai. Minor German attacks south of Bourlon wood and near La Vacquerie have been repulsed by the British.

Berlin (via London), Dec. 8.—Four thousand more Italians have been captured in the new Austro-German offensive on the northern front, bringing up the total to 15,000, according to today's official communication.

Monte Sisemol was captured by storm, the statement says.

German troops stormed La Justice farm and cleared Marcoing of the enemy, today's official statement from the Cambrai sector said. North of La Vacquerie German troops maintained their positions. The enemy penetrated them for a time but was thrown back by counter attacks.

Vienna, Thursday, Dec. 6.—(via London, Dec. 7.)—The Austro-Hungarian general headquarters today issued the following official communication.

"The enemy has suffered a heavy defeat. Early Tuesday, after powerful artillery preparation, in which German batteries cooperated with the troops under Field Marshal Conrad, we launched an attack against the mountain positions in the Meletta region. The deep snow and severe cold rendered progress difficult, but the careful preparation for the attack and the bravery of the attackers—natives from all parts of Austria-Hungary—were able to overcome every counter measure.

"Early Wednesday Monte Badenecche and Monte Tondarecar fell and at midday kaiserjaeger regiment No. 3 stood on Monte Gifla. Toward evening the Italian resistance on the Meletta ridge broke down before our encircling and storming attacks. Enemy reinforcements coming up from Valstagna were taken on the flank by the fire of our batteries.

"During the morning hours yesterday the enemy, after a bitter struggle, lost Monte Bello and the rear positions near Foza. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the brave Italian defenders, who had been completely cut off for 24 hours on Monte Castelgomberto, laid down their arms. All the terrain north of Frenzela ravine is in our hands."

Rome, Dec. 8.—"On the Asiago plateau the battle is continuing without interruption," says today's official report.

By Associated Press.

Italian Headquarters In Northern Italy, Thursday, Dec. 6.—The big operation which the enemy is attempting in the north is virtually a repetition of the turning movement he executed six weeks ago in the great offensive above Gorizia. At that time he broke through the upper end of the line and thus endangered the lower end. This is exactly the situation which is being repeated today.

It has been established that while Field Marshal Conrad Von Hoetzendorff is directing the movement, General Von Krobatin's forces also are cooperating. In addition to the superiority in numbers, the Austro-Germans are taking advantage of the backward season and are striking before the mountain snows impede operations. This weather this year happens to be favorable to the enemy. The snow is only a few inches deep, whereas in December the snow usually reaches a depth of from four to 10 feet. One such snowfall now would be worth divisions. Gray skies today indicated snow, but the fall was light.

The importance of the fighting around Asiago is not underestimated, but it is believed the line of resistance on which the Italians have retired is capable of holding the Frainzella and Gadena passes leading into the Brenta valley and the open plain some miles below. The fighting has been of the most desperate character and while the enemy has paid dearly for his success, the Italian losses also have been very heavy.

An eye witness from the scene of operations gave the correspondent details of the extent and bloody nature of the fighting. Enemy reserves were poured in until the Italians were far outnumbered. They continued to struggle desperately, however, and in one case a small detachment of Bersaglieri met the shock of an entire Austrian regiment. Austrian kaiserjaegers displayed unprecedented ferocity, using stilettoes

Men Wonder If Training Will Not Be Cut Short So They May Aid in Crisis.

By United Press.

American Headquarters in [illegible], Dec. 8.—The American soldiers are beginning to wonder whether their period of training will not be shortened so that they may be sent into the line to strengthen their allies, the British and French, now battling with the Germans around Cambrai. News came to their home today that the American congress is about to declare war on Austria. This heartened them greatly. Officers and men seem to realize that the doings of the next week or two probably mean much to them and to the allies. The success or failure of the Germans at Cambrai and in Italy, they believe, will determine in large measure the length of the war. They are anxious to get into it, believing they have had enough training and that now is the psychological time to make the step.

Germany's Exploits Reviewed.

"Germany's success by skill, by industry, by knowledge, by enterprise, we did not grudge or oppose, but admired rather. She had built up for herself a real empire of trade and influence, secured by the peace of the world. We were content to abide the rivalries of manufacture, science, and commerce that were involved for us in her success and stand or fall as we had or did not have the brains and the initiative to surpass her. But at the moment when she had conspicuously won her triumphs of peace she threw them away to establish in their stead what the world will no longer permit to be established, military and political domination by arms, by which to oust where should could not excel the rivals she most feared and hated. The peace we make must remedy that wrong It must deliver the once fair lands and happy peoples of Belgium and northern France from the Prussian conquest and the Prussian menace but it must also deliver the peoples of Austria-Hungary, the peoples of the Balkans and the people of Turkey, alike in Europe and in Asia, from the impudent and alien domination of the Prussian military and commercial autocracy

"We owe it, however, to ourselves to say that we do not wish in any way to impair or to rearrange the Austro-Hungarian empire. It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either industrially or politically. We do not purpose or desire to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands, in all matters, great or small. We shall hope to secure for the peoples of the Balkan peninsula and for the people of Turkish empire the right and opportunity to make their own lives safe, their own fortunes secure against oppression or injustice and from the dictation of foreign courts or parties. And our attitude and purpose with regard to Germany herself are of a like kind. We intend no wrong against the German empire, no interference with her internal affairs. We should deem either the one or the other absolutely unjustifiable, absolutely contrary to the principles we have professed to live by and to hold most sacred throughout our life as a nation.

No Threat Against Germany.

"The people of Germany are being told by the men whom they now permit to deceive them and to act as their masters, that they are fighting for the very life and existence of their empire a war of desperate self defense against deliberate aggression Nothing could be more grossly or wantonly false and we must seek by the utmost openness and candor as to our real aims to convince them of its falseness. We are, in fact, fighting for their emancipation from fear, along with our own, from the fear as well as from the fact of unjust attack by neighbors or rivals or schemers after world empire. No one is threatening the existence or the independence of the peaceful enterprise of th German empire.

"The worst that can happen to the detriment of the German people is this that if they should still, after the war is over, continue to be obliged to live under ambitious and intriguing masters interested to disturb the peace of the world, men or classes of men whom the other peoples of the world could not trust, it might be impossible to admit them to the partnership of nations which must henceforth guarantee the world's peace That partnership must be a partnership of peoples not a mere partnership of governments It might be impossible also in such untoward circumstances to admit Germany to the free economic intercourse which must inevitably spring up of the other partnerships of a real peace But there would be no aggression in that and such a situation inevitable because of distrust, would in the very nature of things sooner or later cure itself by processes which would assuredly set in Germany Is Protected.

"The wrongs the very deep wrongs committed in this war will have to be righted that, of course But they cannot and must not be righted by the commission of similar wrongs against Germany and her allies The world will not permit the commission of similar wrongs as a means of reparation and settlement. Statesmen must by this time have learned that the opinion of the world is everywhere wide awake and fully comprehends the issues involved No representative of any self governed nation will dare disregard it by attempting any such covenants of selfishness and compromise as were entered into at the congress of Vienna. The thought of the plain people here and everywhere throughout the world, the people who enjoy no privilege and have very simple and very unsophisticated standards of right and wrong, that is the air all governments must henceforth breathe if they would live. It is in the full disclosing light of that thought that all policies must be conceived and executed in this midday hour of the world's life. German rulers have been able to upset the peace of the world only because the German people were not suffered, under their tutelage, to share the comradeship of the other peoples of the world, either in thought or in purpose. They were allowed to have no opinion of their own which might be set up as a rule of conduct for those who exercised authority over them But the congress that concludes this war will feel the full strength of the tides that run now in the hearts and consciences of free men everywhere Its conclusions will run with those tides

All these things have been true from the very beginning of this stupendous war; and I cannot help thinking that if they had been made plain at the very outset, the sympathy and enthusiasm of the Russian people might have been once for all enlisted on the side of the allies, suspicion and distrust swept away and a real and lasting union of purpose affected. Had they believed these things at the very moment of their revolution had they been confirmed in that belief since, the sad reverses which have recently marked the progress of their affairs towards a stable government of free men have been avoided. The Russian people have been poisoned by the very same falsehoods that have kept the German people in the dark and the poison has been administered by the very same hands. The only possible antidote is the truth. It cannot be uttered too plainly or too often.

Insures Germany Freedom.

"From every point of view, therefore, it has seemed to be my duty to speak these declarations of purpose, to add these specific interpretations to what I took the liberty of saying to the Senate in January. Our entrance into the war has not altered our attitude towards the settlement that must come when it is over. When I said in January that the nations of the world were entitled not only to free pathways upon the sea, but also to assured and unvexed access to those pathways I was thinking, and I am thinking now, not of the smaller and weaker nations alone, which need our countenance and support, but also of the great and powerful nations, and of our present enemies as well as our present associates in the war. I was thinking, and am thinking now, of Austria herself, among the rest, as well as of Serbia and of Poland. Justice and equality of rights can be had only at a great price. We are seeking permanent, not temporary foundations for the peace of the world and must seek them candidly and fearlessly, as always the right will prove to be the expedient.

"What shall we do, then, to push this great war of freedom and justice to its righteous conclusion? We must clear away with a thorough hand all impediments to success and we must make every adjustment of law that will facilitate the full and free use of our whole capacity and force as a fighting unit

Recommends War on Austria.

"One very embarrassing obstacle that stands in our way is that we are at war with Germany but not with her allies. I therefore very earnestly recommend that the congress immediately declare the United States in a state of war with Austria-Hungary Does it seem strange to you that this should be the conclusion of the argument I have just addressed to you? It is not It is, in fact the inevitable logic of what I have said. Austria-Hungary is for the time being not her own mistress but simply the vassal of the German government We must face the facts as they are and act upon them without sentiment in this stern duty The government of Austria-Hungary is not acting upon its own initiative or in response to the wishes and feelings of its own peoples but as the instrument of another nation. We must meet its force with our own and regard the central powers as but one. The war can be successfully conducted in no other way The same logic would lead also to a declaration of war against Turkey and Bulgaria. They also are the tools of Germany But they are mere tools and do not yet stand in the direct path of our necessary action We shall go wherever the necessities of this war carry us, but it seems to me that we should go only where immediate and practical considerations lead us and not heed any others.

Urges Check on Aliens.

"The financial and military measures which must be adopted will suggest themselves as the war and its undertakings develop but I will take the liberty of proposing to you certain other acts of legislation which seem to me to be needed for the support of the war and for the release of our whole force and energy

"It will be necessary to extend in certain particulars the legislation of the last session with regard to alien enemies, and also necessary I believe, to create a very definite and particular control over the entrance and departure of all persons into and from the United States.

"Legislation should be enacted defining as a criminal offense every wilful violation of the presidential proclamations relating to alien enemies promulgated under section 4067 of the revised statutes and providing appropriate punishments and women as well as men should be included under the terms of the acts placing restraints upon alien enemies It is likely that as time goes on many alien enemies will be willing to be fed and housed at the expense of the government in the detention camps and it would be the purpose of the legislation I have suggested to confine offenders among them in penitentiaries and other similar institutions, where they could be made to work as other criminals do.

Wants More Price Limits.

"Recent experience has convinced me that the congress must go further in authorizing the government to set limits to prices The law of supply and demand I am sorry to say has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry it still runs impudently rampant in others. The farmers for example, complain with a great deal of justice that while the regulation of food prices restricts their incomes no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase and similar inequities obtain on all sides.

"It is imperatively necessary that consideration of the full use of the war power of the country and also the consideration of the systematic and yet economical development of such of the natural resources of the country as are still under the control of the federal government should be immediately resumed and affirmatively and constructively dealt with at the earliest possible moment The pressing need of such legislation is daily becoming more obvious

Warns Against Waste.

"The legislation proposed at the last session with regard to regulated combinations among our exporters, in order to provide for our foreign trade a more effective organization and method of cooperation, ought by all means to be completed at this session.

"And I beg that the members of the House of Representatives will permit me to express the opinion that it will be impossible to deal in any way but a very wasteful and extravagant fashion with the enormous appropriations of the public moneys which must continue to be made if the war is to be properly sustained, unless the House will consent to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee in order that responsibility may be centered expenditures standardized and made uniform and waste by duplication be avoided as much as possible.

"Additional legislation may also become necessary before the present congress adjourns in order to affect the most efficient co-ordination and operation of the railway and other transportation systems of the country. But to that I shall, if circumstances demand call the attention of congress upon another occasion.

Devote Session to War.

"If I have overlooked anything that ought to be done for the more effective conduct of the war, your own counsels will supply the omission. What I am perfectly clear about is that in the present session of the congress our whole attention and energy should be concentrated on the vigorous and rapid and successful prosecution of the great task of winning the war.

"We can do this with all the greater zeal and enthusiasm because we know that for us this is a war of high principle, debased by no selfish ambition of conquest or spoliation; because we know, and all the world knows, that we have been forced into it to save the very institutions we live under from corruption and destruction. The purposes of the central powers strike straight at the very heart of everything we believe in; their methods of warfare outrage every principle of humanity and of knightly honor; their intrigue has corrupted the very thought and spirit of many of our people; their sinister and secret diplomacy has sought to take our very territory away from us and disrupt the union of the states. Our safety would be at an end, our honor forever sullied and brought into contempt were we to permit their triumph. They are striking at the very existence of democracy and liberty.

Declares Purposes Holy.

"It is because it is for us a war of high, disinterested purpose, in which all the free peoples of the world are banded together for the vindication of right, a war for the preservation of our nation and of all that it has held dear of principle and of purpose, that we feel ourselves doubly constrained to propose for its outcome only that which is righteous and of irreproachable intention, for our foes as well as for our friends The cause being just and holy, the settlement must be of like motive and quality. For this we can fight, but for nothing less noble or less worthy of our traditions. For this cause we entered the war and for this cause will we battle until the last gun is fired

"I have spoken plainly because this seems to me the time when it is most necessary to speak plainly, in order that all the world may know that even in the ardor of the struggle and when our whole thought is of carrying the war through to its end we have not forgotten any ideal or principle for which the name of America has been held in honor among the nations and for which it has been our glory to contend in the great generations that went before us. A supreme moment of history has come. The eyes of the people have been opened and they see. The hand of God is laid upon the nations. He will show them favor, I devoutly believe, only if they rise to the clear heights of His own justice and mercy."

Mobilization of Banks.

From the Bache Review

The mobilization of the banking forces of the country into the federal reserve system is going on From October 1 the number of state banks and trust companies which have joined the federal reserve system is approximately 40, representing combined capital and deposits of about $1,843,000,000. On November 1 there were 50 applications for membership by state banks and trust companies in the hands of the federal reserve agents in the several districts, and the boards of directors of 33 state banks and trust companies passed resolutions authorizing application

It is fair to assume that this increase will continue as a war measure, if for no other reason, until practically the whole banking force of the United States is included in the federal system—a consummation which would make it the most impregnable fortress for national financial defense ever erected since the beginning of civilization.

Crusoe's Relics.

A biography written in the early part of the last century by Dr. A. W. Davis, of Tenbury, Eng., tells of the good doctor's visit to Largo in Fifeshire where he saw a chest that once belonged to Alexander Selkirk. This Selkirk was none other than Robinson Crusoe, and the chest was that which had been with the redoubtable adventurer on the island of Juan Fernandez It was an heirloom that had been handed down in the family and was then in the possession of a poor woman, also named Selkirk She had a drinking cup that had belonged to her distinguished ancestor, made of cocoanut shell and tipped with silver

Dr. Davis was convinced that both relics were genuine. The chest was of a kind commonly used by seamen and had "A S." cut into the lid at several places. This same woman also had owned a musket of Selkirk's, but she gave it to the laird of the parish. Dr Davis notes that visitors were permitted to see the weapon upon request

Valuable Stuffing Evidently.

From Answers, London

A certain millionaire presented to his native city a fine collection of stuffed birds and animals.

The attendant, escorting a visitor through the silent halls, noticed that he was yawning, and ventured to say

"Perhaps you're not aware sir that this is one of the richest taxidermist exhibits on earth Yes, sir, this collection of stuffed animals and birds is worth £100,000"

"Is that so?" said the visitor "What the dickens are they stuffed with?"

High prices for fuel have led to the appointment of two committees in Peru to report on the coal fields of the central and northern sections of that country If the investigations prove that coal exists in considerable quantities railroads will be extended to reach the new fields

NAMED ASSISTANT TO WAR SECRETARY

Maj. Benedict Crowell.

Maj. Benedict Crowell of Cleveland has been appointed assistant secretary of war to succeed William M. Ingraham. He was associated with the general munitions board of the council of national defense shortly after that body was organized. Recently, however, he has been in charge of the Washington office of the Panama canal.

ALLIES SPEND FIVE TIMES HUN WAR COST

Expenditures Made at Rate of $40,000,000,000 Year, Germany's at $8,000,000,000

Washington, D. C., Dec. 7.—Forty billion dollars a year, five times Germany's war expense, is what it is costing the allies to elimnate the Hohenzellern menace, according to figures furnished by reliable sources today. Where Germany is spending $500,000,000 monthly, according to her own admission, Great Britain and America will spend together $29,000,000,000 during the first year of this country's participation in the war France, Italy and the other powers engaged in the war against the central powers will bring the total to $40,000,000,000, this authority stated.

That the central powers' yearly war debt is nearer $8,000,000,000 than the $6,000,000,000 they admit, is the belief of British and American officials prior to June 30, 1917 Germany had expended more than $25,000,000,000 The Teutons insist on this covering up, according to officials of Great Britain, believing it will not have such a bad effect on their people at home

VARYING IDEAS ON MESSAGE

All Factions in London Find Cause for Approval and Questioning—Jingoes See a Warning.

By Arthur S. Draper.

London, Dec 7.—President Wilson's message to congress has accomplished one thing. It has put imperialism on the defensive, not alone German imperialism, but Italian, French and British. It has put his stamp of disapproval on boasts about seizing the west banks of the Rhine, the dismemperment of Austria, the occupation of Trieste and a lot of other material issues. Everyone finds something good in President Wilson's message to congress; no one is entirely pleased and satisfied.

The British jingoes fail, as they did eight months back, to accept his distinction between the German people and their rulers. The British moderates wish he had been more specific. The British reactionaries consider his war aims too idealistic The British radicals rejoice in his suggestions to use other weapons besides military force to win a victory. The British 'bitter-enders" interpret the address as "no peace with the Hohenzollerns" The British pacifists consider him as a sympathetic friend.

Varied Interpretation.

Perhaps none of his public utterances has been subjected to such varied interpretations. Certainly none has been studied with closer effort to get the exact status of the president.

To many his declaration for war against Austria comes as a sensation, but probably the idea which makes the deepest impression on Europe is his elevation of the war to a world problem his raising it from a family quarrel over territory to a general struggle between the forces of reaction and progress

He has told Europe America's resources are to be used in the attainment of none of these, but in support of the ideal. And Europe will give due heed, because those American resources will influence the whole course of the war.

In Britain, in France and in Italy there is a powerful group who have little faith in his idealism, but fortunately they are greatly in the minority, though their influence is far from negligible. They are perfectly honest and frank in their opinion that the only way to beat force is to match it with greater force. But as the war necessarily cannot last beyond the time when America is satisfied and her demands accepted, they knew they must shape their policy accordingly. That means a modification of British policy, French policy and Italian policy, a coordination of war aims, the abandonment of the policy of punishment, the acceptance of the president's ideals in practice if not in heart.

Northcliffe Skeptical.

For instance, his declarations against Austria prompts Northcliffe's Times to say "We must confess skepticism as to the truth of this picture of the German nation, as we have done when Wilson painted it on former occasions. We shall be glad enough to discover solid grounds for supposing that it is thue or it is likely to be true within a measurable time. But we can discover no such evidence now and for the present we must continue to regard the German people as the willing accomplices of their rulers. They are indeed the vassals of their government, just as its allies are its vassals, and we can no more distinguish between them than the president can any longer distinguish between Germany and Austria."

Even the liberal Westminster Gazette, one of the supporters of Lord Lansdowne's policy, finds difficulty in accepting the president's distinction, but nevertheless, it gives its cordial endorsement. When it comes to the indictment of allied diplomacy most liberals and labor representatives are agreed he touched the weakest point of the entente armor. They emphatically endorse his statements that if the western allies had made it clear they were fighting for ideals such as he outlined, "the sympathy and enthusiasm of the Russian people might once for all have been enlisted on the side of the allies and suspicion and distrust swept away."

But those who fail to share his faith in the ideal, who looked upon Russia merely as a military partner, cannot follow him on this point. Before many days pass European statesmen will accept the opportunity to express their views probably. Among those who are expected thus to comment on the message are Premier Lloyd-George and former Premier Asquith.

MEETS HUSSANE TONIGHT.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 7.—Earl Caddock, of Anita, Ia., claimant to the world's heavyweight championship, will meet Yussif Hussane, the Bulgarian wrestler, at the Coliseum here this evening. The match originally was scheduled for November 21, but was postponed when Caddock went to Rochester, Minn., for a medical examination

NIEUW AMSTERDAM SAFE.

New York, Dec. 7.—Word that the passengers and crew of the Holland-American line steamer Nieuw Amsterdam are safe in Halifax was received at the local offices of the line today.

WILSON TAKES RAILROADS SOON?

President Given Power in Military Appropriations Acts and Is Expected to Use It.

AVOIDS BITTER STRUGGLE

Government Loan Under Private Management Believed Impossible Following Congressional Canvass.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 8.—It is reported today on excellent authority that President Wilson in a few days will issue a proclamation whereby the government will take control of the railroads and operate them. The president has specific authority to do this under previous legislation in one of the military appropriation acts.

In high administration circles it was said today that the president might not have to go to congress to deal with the railroad situation However, if he takes over the roads appropriations will be asked of congress to add to railroad equipment and facilities.

Should the government take over the roads there is no doubt that stockholders' interests will not suffer. The president, it was said today at the White House, has made a decision as to what to do about the roads.

Unless the president acts under the authority given him already a prolonged controversy will break out in congress. Canvasses of sentiment indicate that a government loan under private ownership and control can be put through only with great difficulty if at all.

SENATE ADOPTS WAR RESOLUTION

LaFollette Absent When Stone Asks Immediate Consideration—Woman Member Absent in House.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 8.—The declaration of war on Austria was passed by both houses of congress today with brief debate. President Wilson's signature is now the only thing required. The House accepted the Senate resolution.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 8.—The Senate this afternoon unanimously adopted the resolution declaring war an Austria. Senator LaFollette was not present when the vote was taken.

Doubt that the Senate would take up the resolution today was removed when Senator Stone, chairman of the foreign relations committee, obtained consent for immediate consideration. Senator LaFollette was absent at the time.

The House, under previous agreement, took up the resolution immediately after convening. So confident were House members that the resolution would pass that there was not a quorum when convening time came and some members had to be sent out for. Miss Jeanette Rankin of Montana, whose vote against the resolution declaring war on Germany caused so much criticism, today was absent from the House.

No time for a vote on the resolution was set by the House, but it was thought it might be expected before 6 o'clock this evening.

The resolution was adopted by the Senate unanimously, 74 to 0. Senators Gronna, of North Dakota, Norris, of Nebraska, and Vardaman, of Mississippi, who voted against the German war declaration supported the resolution.

U. S. RUSHES HELP FOR STRICKEN CITY

Red Cross and Others Send Supplies to Halifax by Special Train.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Arrangements for dispatching a third relief train at 11 a. m. today from New York to carry supplies and assistance to Halifax were made by the Red Cross. Railway officials are assisting and will push the train through as fast as possible.

John F. Moors will be in charge of the Red Cross relief work in Halifax. All supplies will be directed to him. Surgeons and nurses are being rushed to the scene in three trains.

From Boston a medical base hospital, consisting of 15 physicians and 30 nurses, has been ordered to Halifax, with a full corps of surgeons and nurses whose work will be supplemented by that of an organized body of social workers. The train from New York will not arrive there before midday tomorrow.

Portland, Me., Dec. 8.—Five carloads of supplies, including additional telegraph material, groceries and drygoods have left here by special train for Halifax.

Boston, Dec. 8.—A train carrying relief workers and medical supplies quickly assembled by Governor McCall, has left Boston for Halifax. On board were 11 physicians, 10 nurses and two quartermasters, all members of the state guard, five Red Cross workers and a party of newspaper men. The baggage car was filled with medical supplies and hospital cots.

YAQUI INDIANS BURN AMERICAN PROPERTY

Nogales, Ariz., Dec. 8.—Yaqui Indians yesterday attacked Esperanza, 70 miles south of Guaymas, Sonora, according to a message received here today and burned the office and store house of the Richardson Construction company, an American firm. Nothing has been heard of about 30 Americans living in that vicinity.

Red Cross Reports

The following is a list of all money donated since November. If you have donated money and it is not in this list it has been overlooked and the Red Cross Society will be glad to find it and report it. Phone Mrs. A. R. White We have given this cash report to show that all money donated has been received by the Red Cross. We would like to make a list of produce received at Auction, but on account of large amount received it would be quite a task so we just give total footing of the auction German and Ell townships and part of Avery can well be proud of the produce on exhibition at this auction, the quantity and quality could not be excelled, and if any one doubted the loyalty of these townships they would not after the auction And we are sure every housewife did her bit such a bountiful supply of good things to eat as was sent for lunch

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

During a discussion in parliament recently the first lord of the admiralty was asked what arrangements, if any, are made to supply pilots of airplanes and all airmen bound on long distance oversea flights with emergency rations and with facilities for obtaining drinking water when flying in machines with air cooled motors or for tapping the radiator for drinking water in machined with water cooled motors. In answering the question Dr. MacNamara stated that emergency rations, consisting of malted milk, Bovril and chocolate, are supplied to royal navy air stations for the use of pilots of seaplanes and airmen engaged in oversea flights. Drinking facilities are provided for by the issue of thermos flasks. No facilities have been provided for tapping the radiators of water cooled motors, the contents of which are more likely to act medicinally than otherwise.

Silencers are needed on airplane engines to eliminate the noise of approach, which is the only thing that warns the enemy of the approaching warplanes at night. The silencers must do their work thoroughly, eliminating the exhaust sounds entirely, because the anti-aircraft units have very powerful microphones that magnify the slightest sound. Lacking silencers for no other reason than the added weight and slight loss of power raiding airplanes are forced to fly at high altitudes in an attempt to escape detection. The weight of the fuel needed and the horse power and time spent in evading detection this way represent really a greater loss of efficiency than the loss caused by the silencers

The French government has undertaken to supply the depleted ranks of the farmers and to give assistance to the amateur farmer by means of a correspondence course, which has been eagerly received. The pupil receives instructions as to a course of reading, the management of a small experimental plot, the carrying out of simple experiments, visits to neighboring farms, etc. The Union of Agricultural Syndicates, which has assumed charge of this work for the government, has appointed a number of "monitors" to supervise the work of pupils The pupils prepare monthly examination papers and render monthly reports

The smelter production, or the output of refined coper, in midyear during 1918 was 269 794 581 pounds, which represents an increase of 3,838,121 pounds over the smelter production for 1915 In 1916 the amount of rock' milled was 12,364 114 short tons which yielded 420 551,291 pounds of mineral' and 68 279,876 pounds of copper In 1915 the amount milled was 12 334 700 short tons which yielded 400 1,8 1 2 pounds of mineral and 67 88 378 pounds of copper The average recovery of refined copper a ton of rock milled in 1916 was 21 7 pounds

Milk producers around the Twin Cities turned the tables on the price fixers of the Minnesota public safety commission The latter decreed that 6 cents a quart or $2 48 a hundred weight was the right wholesale price for the producers Armours buyers hopped into the game and made a contract with the producers for 40 000 pounds nominally at $2 80 a hundred The contract will take about 40 per cent of the local supply which spells shortage for consumers in the two cities The state commission says the contract is invalid as it endangers public safety

In spite the growth in population and increased areas under cultivation the horse population of Los Angeles county is now less than one half as much as in 1900 The automobile and motor trucks have increased from 6 to 79,146. The 47,000 horses in the county in 1900 were valued at $5 000 000 In 1910 the drop in number was to 31,000, and in the ensuing six years to 20,000 The present automobile valuation is nearly $100,000,000. Excellent road conditions are considered largely responsible for the above figures.

The final official forecast of the area sown to wheat for the 1916-17 season, based on revised returns of acreage and out turn received from districts comprising 98 per cent of the total wheat area in India, places the acreage under this grain at 32,940,000, as against 30, 320,000 acres a year ago, an increase of nearly 9 per cent The total yield is estimated at 10,158 000 tons (47,404,000 quarters of 480 pounds each.) as against 8,652,000 tons (40,376,000 quarters.) in 1915-16, an increase of 17 per cent.

It is estimated that there are 30,000 acres of mangrove swamps on the island of Mindoro in the Philippines As tannin made from mangrove bark is greatly in demand, there is an opportunity for profitable investments in this wood The timber is controlled by the bureau of forestry, and a license agreement would be needed

After a heart-to-heart talk with federal officials at Chicago last week, Rev Adolph Voight, a pro German preacher of Elgin, Ill., shifted his keynote and delivered a hot pro-American sermon last Sunday The tune sounded strange in Voight's pulpit but it suspended some worry in that quarter

War conditions are revising upward Tom Johnson's celebrated 3-cent fares at Cleveland The price doesn't paw for the service and high price materials bills and a boost to 4 cents is on the way Johnson's reform overcame all obstacles hitherto, but a street railway deficit gave it a deadly clout

A marked boom in local traffic is on between Washington and Baltimore More and more are the cities drawn closer together. Washington sees in Baltimore a freer hospitality and hops to it gleefully, and Baltimore cheerfully responds. Wherefore? Washington dry Baltimore wet.

Louisville coal consumers are experiencing the novelty of a refund of excess prices from the dealers. Seven cents a ton is the average rebate. It does not inspire a millionaire feeling, but gives a faint indication of what is meant by "Just like finding money."

Danish manufacturers are using nettle fiber extensively in the making of yarns, cloth and binder twine. The nettle used grows wild in Denmark, and after the fiber has been removed, the leaves and tops are utilized as cattle fodder.

A company has been formed in Norway for making fuel from peat by the Rosendahl method. The raw material for the new industry will be chiefly peat from the extensive Norwegian moors, but any other material may be used which is sufficiently abundant in the neighborhood of the factory, particularly wood waste. The product is said greatly to resemble English coal.

An irrigation project which will produce daily 50,000,000 gallons of water for use on the Pioneer plantation near Lahaina, Hawaiian Islands, will be completed within a year It is called the Hanokowai tunnel.

NATIVE OF IOWA IS SIGNAL CORPS HEAD

Brigadier General Charles Saltzman Grew to Manhood at Town of Panona.

Grinnell, Ia., Dec. 15.—Brigadier General Charles Saltzman, ranking head of the signal corps of the United States army, is an Iowa product and ex-Grinnell student of the year 1894. During his stay at Grinnell General Saltzman distinguished himself as a leading member of the college baseball team

Since that time he has devoted his time to bringing the signal corps to its present efficient standard. At first he specialized in radio and submarine cable work, but during recent years he has given his special attention to aviation with particular reference to the possibilities of the wireless in this branch of the service.

He was born and grew to manhood at Panora Ia where he early evinced an unusual interest in telegraphy and at the age of 14 the Panora station master felt safe in leaving the station in his charge.

When 20 years old he entered Grinnell and one year later successfully took the examinations for West Point.

After his graduation from West Point in 1896 Saltzman saw active service in Cuba and the Philippines as a lieutenant in a cavalry regiment

NO FURLOUGHS FOR CAMP DODGE SOLDIERS

Camp Dodge Ia. Dec 15 The order revoking all passes and furloughs already issued and announcing that none would be issued during the Christmas holidays, was posted here today The only person in the division here that may go home during the holidays are those whose travel does not involve the use of steam railroads The order applies to officers also With the posting of the order today it was indicated many persons from North Dakota, Minnesota and Illinois would come to Des Moines to be with their relatives during the holidays. Many of the Iowa boys are going home on interurban electric lines or by automobile

Indications today were that the last increment of the first draft will begin assembling here during the holidays Just what the indications are cannot be published

COLLEGE CLOSED BY A COAL SHORTAGE

Tabor, Ia., Dec 15. Because of the extreme cold weather and coal shortage Tabor college has been closed until after the Christmas holidays. There is talk of closing public schools at the end of next week until the February term to conserve the fuel. Tabor is dependent upon the Tabor & Northern railroad and its train schedules have been so badly disarranged by bad weather that much of the mail has been brough over land from Malvern.

PUBLIC LIBRARY AT SIBLEY IS DEDICATED

Sibley, Ia., Dec 15 Sibley's public library was dedicated on Monday evening. It is a Carnegie library. The grounds were donated by H. S. Emmert, a local banker, whose residence is in Winnipeg. Addresses were given by Professor McClade, of Cedar Falls, and Miss Julia Robinson, of Des Moines A community orchestra and a chorus furnished the music A reception was held in the library rooms after the dedicatory exercises.

PARENTS PERISH IN RESCUING CHILDREN

Fort Madison Ia., Dec 15—Mr and Mrs. Henry Poggs were burned to death while trying to rescue their children from their burning home at West Point near here.

The parents escaped from the flames but returned to save their children. The children were saved, but their rescuers were overcome with smoke and flames

Their charred bodies were rescued from the debris.

HAVNER IS TO HAVE A LAW PARTNER

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 15.—Attorney General H. M. Havner has formed a partnership in Marengo, Ia., with Frank Messer, an attorney of Iowa City. The law firm will be known as Havner, Messer, Hatter & Roller.

CITY EMPLOYE IS HELD FOR DISLOYALTY

Dubuque, Ia., Dec. 15.—Joseph Schlueter, of draft age, a clerk in the city engineer's office here, was arrested by United States Marshal Moore on a charge of uttering statements of a disloyal nature. He was indicted by the federal grand jury which reported Friday, last, but the fact was not made known until yesterday Bonds in the sum of $2,500 were asked and furnished.

CURTAIL PASSENGER TRAFFIC IN IOWA

Washington, D. C., Dec. 15 —An order from the railroad war board, instructing railroads west of the Mississippi to loan 100 locomotives to eastern lines, means the beginning of curtailment of passenger trains in Iowa and other western states. This is admitted by officials here. So far passenger business in that territory has been little affected. Moving of locomotives to the east is the first step toward cutting off some of the western passenger trains.

CIVIL WAR VETERAN MADE DISLOYAL TALK

Inmate of Soldiers' Home Is Discharged—Entered From Wisconsin.

Marshalltown, Ia., Dec 14—The second discharge within 16 years for disloyal utterances has been made at the Iowa Soldiers' home, where Joshua C Richey, aged 71, of Cedar Falls, Ia., has been given a dishonorable discharge for having damned the United States government and its president. In 1901 the late Commandant Horton discharged a veteran for expressing satisfaction over the shooting of President McKinley.

Richey entered the home only a month ago from the national home at Milwaukee. It has been whispered about among the membership that Richey was indulging in pro-German talk, but nothing conclusive came of it until Saturday, when four witnesses testified under oath that Richey had damned his country and its president Although not admitting the statements attributed to him, Richey did not enter a denial and Commandant Whitehill issued the discharge with the remark that only Richey's age prevented his being handed over to the federal authorities

Richey is a veteran of Company G Seventh Wisconsin infantry and a native of Grant county, Wisconsin.

TOLD EXPERIENCES ON TORPEDOED BOATS

Logan Ia Dec 14.—Something of the spirit of the American soldiery was exemplified here when George Wilson, of California Junction, just recovered of his injuries, told of his experiences in the North sea, where the ship on which he was sailing was blown up by a German submarine and he and others narrowly escaped with their lives after a day and a half in the open sea, told of his experience in the Mediterranean sea when the merchant ship on which he was sailing was torpedoed and he was forced to plunge through burning oil and swim under and far out to escape being cremated told of his experience in the Greek hospital and his observations in the trenches and then stated that he would leave for sea service Wednesday morning

FARMERS OF PLYMOUTH COUNTY TO HAVE AID

LeMars Ia Dec 14 It is probable that within a short time Plymouth county will be listed among the Iowa counties that have county agents devoting their entire time to looking after the general and individual welfare of the farmers Secretary Edw G Fairchild of the LeMars Commercial club is pushing the work of forming an organization to secure a county agent into Plymouth county

In order that the sentiment of the farmers on the proposition may be sounded a meeting has been called for next Saturday afternoon at 1 30 in the rooms of the Commercial club to consider the securing of a county agent and other matters of interest to the farmers of the county All farmers of the county are invited and urged to attend this meeting

NEW ELECTRIC PLANT IS NEARLY COMPLETED

LeMars Ia Dec 14 The new power house of the Iowa Light, Heat and Power company in LeMars will be in operation about January 1st The buildings are complete and the dynamos, engines and boilers installed and the machinery is now being connected up. The transmission line to Remsen is all ready for the wires and the wire is on hand so that it will require less than a week to connect up the system when the work at the plant is completed Alton Orange City Remsen and Kingsley will get electric current from this station as soon as it begins operations and several other towns will be added later It is probable additional units will be added next spring

SMALLPOX INFESTED HOME IS BURNED

Dow City Ia, Dec 14.—With several members of the family, including Mrs Sams dangerously ill from smallpox the home of Bert Sams, located south of town caught fire and despite the desperate efforts of neighbors was burned to the ground The stricken people were carried out regardless of the danger of infection and are being cared for at the home of a neighbor

During her delirium resulting from the disease Mrs Sams one night recently left her bed clad in a nightgown and with the temperature 13 degrees below zero wandered away from home She was found by searchers several hours later lying in the snow unconscious Her condition now is critical

BRENNAN'S PAL IS SENT TO FORT MADISON PEN

LeMars, Ia., Dec 14 James Ryan, who pleaded guilty in the district court to a charge of assault with intent to commit murder, was taken to Fort Madison to begin serving a 10-year sentence in the penitentiary. Ryan was caught with John Brennan robbing a store here on October 7 and the men were captured after a gun fight with the police Brennan was taken to Anamosa two weeks ago to serve a 10-year term

KELLY FAILS AS A STAGE ATTRACTION

Red Oak, Ia., Dec. 14.—Word reaches here that the first attempt of Rev Lyn G J. Kelly, recently acquitted of the Moore ax murders, to capitalize the publicity given him because of the accusation was a failure. He was advertised to lecture at York, Saturday night but did not do so because no one came, it is said.

NEWSPAPER PLANT IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Ames, Ia., Dec 14.—Fire early today destroyed the plant of the State Center Enterprise. The plant was owned by F. W. Beckman, a member of the faculty of the state college at this place. The loss is estimated at $3,000, and is partially covered by insurance.

EPIDEMIC OF MEASLES STILL GRIPS U. S. CAMPS

Washington, D. C., Dec. 14.—The measles epidemic in the camps of the Thirtieth and Thirty-first, Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth divisions of the national guard troops no longer constitutes a menace, according to a report for the week ending December 7, made public today by Surgeon General Gorgas.

The epidemic has spread somewhat, however, in the Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth divisions and to a greater extent in the Thirty-sixth. Pneumonia, following measles, is particularly increased in the Thirty-sixth division and slightly in the Thirty-fourth, Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth.

All other national guard camps show a decrease in measles, although there have been a number of cases of pneumonia independent of measles in all national army and national guard camps.

The reports shows 190 deaths during the week in the national guard of which 171 were from pneumonia; 94 deaths in the national army of which 47 were from pneumonia.

ANOTHER STORM MOVES FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

Washington, D. C., Dec. 14.—Most of the country was in the grip of storms and cold weather today and under cover of snow throughout its northern parts almost from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Rail and wire traffic were much impeded The unseasonable cold extends to the gulf states.

Snow was heaviest in the east from the Great Lakes to the coast, with a fall of a foot or more in interior New York Gales of heavy forces prevailed along the New England coast this morning and storm warnings were up from Delaware breakwater to Eastport, Me

The second pronounced storm is moving southeastward from British Columbia causing rains in Washington and snow over the north Rocky mountain and plateau regions

In the south temperatures are very low for that region.

AUSTRIAN WAR DIRECTOR TALKS DISARMAMENT

Amsterdam, Dec. 14.—The Austro-Hungarian war minister, General Stoeger-Steiner, is quoted by the Neue Freie Presse, of Vienna, to the effect that the relief resulting from an armistice with Russia would depend upon the details of the agreement, but that in any case it would relax considerably the strain on the transportation system

Discussing the question of disarmament the general said he agreed with the recent statement of Count Czernin, the foreign minister, that army and navy expenditures had reached a level it was almost impossible to maintain permanently

Austria and her allies, he said, dared not place themselves in such a position as to permit the rest of the world to dictate to them, less than ever today, when the ranks of military states have been increased by two great powers, the United States and Great Britain

AUSTRO-GERMAN TROOPS SENT TO BARRACKS DUTY

Washington, D. C., Dec 14.—First steps to place soldiers of German or Austro-Hungarian birth or extraction at duty apart from the actual fighting forces appear in today's army orders.

Orders show the transfer of nearly 100 enlisted men of the regular or national army to duty with the disciplinary barracks guard at Fort Leavenworth, Kan The list contains hardly a name that does not appear to be of German, Austrian or Hungarian origin. There are several non-commissioned officers, including Sergeant Martin A. Stolz of the quartermaster's corps at Fort Nebraska. All will be privates in the barracks guard.

Three men come from the American expeditionary forces in France and in other cases it is evident that men were withdrawn from recruits about to sail to join General Pershing's command.

PORTUGUESE REVOLTERS ENCOURAGES SOLDIERS

Lisbon, (Thursday), Dec. 13.—The government established in consequence of the recent revolution, has telegraphed greetings and messages of encouragement to the Portuguese troops which are fighting the Germans in France and Africa. The Portuguese legations have been informed of the establishment of the revolutionary government.

Bernardino Machiado, the deposed president, has been asked whether he desires to leave Portugal by land or sea, it having been determined that he must live abroad until the expiration of the term for which he was elected. The cabinet has not decided what disposition to make of former Premier Costa and former Foreign Minister Soares who are being held aboard a warship

FIREMEN CALLED OUT, NEW BLAZE STARTED

Wilmington, Del., Dec. 14.—One man is dead and five injured as a result of a fire which followed an explosion today at an acid plant of the Dupont Powder company, 18 miles from here. After the firemen had been summoned from this city fire broke out in the Wilmington power house, cutting off all light and electric service.

GERMANS RUSH SUPPLIES FOR VAST OFFENSIVE

Geneva, Switzerland, Dec. 14.—Swiss travelers crossing the frontier from Germany tell of immense preparations going on there for an offensive on the western front. Ammunition, provisions and materials of every kind are being concentrated in upper Rhine towns through which military trains pass frequently bound west. THE GIFT OF THE WISE MEN.

THE GIFT OF THE MAGI.

dollar and eighty-seven cents. That was all And sixty it was in pennies. Pennies saved one and two at a time by ing the grocer and the vegetable man and the butcher until eeks burned with the silent imputation of parsimony that such aling implied. Three times Della counted it. One dollar and ven cents. And the next day would be Christmas re was clearly nothing to do but flop down on the shabby uch and howl. So Della did it. Which instigates the moral n that life is made up of sobs, sniffles, and smiles, with sniffles inating.

ile the mistress of the home is gradully subsiding from the ge to the second, take a look at the home. A furnished flat at eek. It did not exactly beggar description, but it certainly word on the lookout for the mendicancy squad he vestibule below was a letter box into which no letter would an electric button from which no mortal finger could coax a Also appertaining thereunto was a card bearing the name mes Dillingham Young."

"Dillingham" had been flung to the breeze during a former of prosperity when its possessor was being paid $30 per week. hen the income was shrunk to $20, the letters of "Dillingham" blurred, as though they were thinking seriously of contracting dest and unassuming D. But whenever Mr. James Dillingham came home and reached his flat above he was called "Jim" atly hugged by Mrs. James Dillingham Young, already intro o you as Della. Which is all very good.

lla finished her cry and attended her cheeks with the powder he stood by the window and looked out dully at a grey cat a grey fence in a grey backyard. Tomorrow would be as day, and she had only $1.87 with which to buy Jim a She had been saving every penny she could for months, is result. Twenty dollars a week doesn't go far Expenses n greater than she had calculated. They always are Only buy a present for Jim. Her Jim. Many a happy hour she nt planning for something nice for him. Something fine and l sterling—something just a little bit near to being worthy of or of being owned by Jim.

ere was a pier glass between the windows of the room. Perhaps ve seen a pier glass in an $8 flat. A very thin and very agile may, by observing his reflection in a rapid sequence of longi strips, obtain a fairly accurate conception of his looks. Della, lender, had mastered the art.

ddenly she whirled from the window and stood before the Her eyes were shining brilliantly, but her face had lost its ithin twenty seconds. Rapidly she pulled down her hair and ll to its full length.

w, there were two possessions of the James Dillingham Youngs h they both took a mighty pride. One was Jim's gold watch d been his father's and his grandfather's. The other was hair. Had the Queen of Sheba lived in the flat across the t, Della would have let her hair hang out the window some dry just to depreciate her majesty's jewels and gifts Had olomon been the janitor, with all his treasures piled up in the nt, Jim would have pulled out his watch every time he passed, see him pluck at his beard from envy.

now Della's beautiful hair fell about her, rippling and shining caseade of brown waters. It reached below her knee and made lmost a garment for her. And then she did it up again nervnd quickly. Once she faltered for a minute and stood still tear or two splashed on the worn red carpet.

went her old brown jacket; on went her old brown hat With of skirts and with the brilliant sparkle still in her eyes, she ed out the door and down the stairs to the street.

here she stopped the sign read: "Mme Sofronie Hair Goods Kinds." One flight up Della ran, and collected herself, panting e, large, too white, chilly, hardly looked the Sofronie own rippled the brown cascade.

Twenty dollars," said Madame, lifting the mass with a prac and.

Give it to me quick," said Della.

, and the next two hours tripped by on rosy wings Forget the metaphor. She was ransacking the stores for Jim's present e found it at last. It surely had been made for Jim and no e. There was no other like it in any of the stores and she had all of them inside out. It was a platinum fob chain, simple and in design, properly proclaiming its value by substance alone t by meretricous ornamentation- as all good things should do even worthy of The Watch. As soon as she saw it she knew must be Jim's. It was like him. Quietness and value the tion applied to both. Twenty-one dollars they took from her and she hurried home with the 87 cents. With that chain on ch Jim might be properly anxious about the time in any com Grand as the watch was, he sometimes looked at it on the account of the old leather strap he used in place of a chain hen Della reached home her intoxication gave way a little to ce and reason. She got out her curling irons and lighted the d went to work repairing the ravages made by generosity to love. Which is always a tremendous task, dear friends a th task.

ithin forty minutes her head was covered with tiny, close lying hat made her look wonderfully like a truant schoolboy. She at her reflection in the mirror, long, carefully, and critically Jim doesn't kill me," she said to herself, "before he takes d look at me, he'll say I look like a Coney Island chorus girl. at could I do—oh! what could I do with a dollar and eighty ents!"

7 o'clock the coffee was made and the frying pan was on the the stove hot and ready to cook the chops.

m was never late. Della doubled the fob chain in her hand t on the corner of the table near the door that he always d. Then she heard his step on the stair away down on the first and she turned white for just a moment. She had a habit of little silent prayers about the simplest everyday things, and e whispered: "Please, God, make him think I am still pretty." e door opened and Jim stepped in and closed it. He looked d very serious. Poor fellow, he was only twenty-two—and to dened with a family! He needed a new overcoat and he was t gloves.

stepped inside the door, as immovable as a setter at the scent His eyes were fixed upon Della, and there was an expression that she could not read, and it terrified her. It was not anger, prise, nor disapproval, nor horror, nor any of the sentiments e had been prepared for. He simply stared at her fixedly with culiar expression on his face.

lla wriggled off the table and went for him.

Jim, darling," she cried, "don't look at me that way. I had my t off and sold it because I couldn't live through Christmas giving you a present. It'll grow out again—you won't mind, u? I just had to do it. My hair grows awfully fast. Say Christmas, Jim, and let's be happy. You don't know what what a beautiful, nice gift I've got for you."

You've cut off your hair?" asked Jim, laboriously, as if he had ived at that patent fact yet even after the hardest mental Cut it off and sold it," said Della. "Don't you like me just anyhow? I'm me without my hair, ain't I?"

m looked about the room curiously.

"You say your hair is gone?" he said, with an air almost of idiocy.

"You needn't look for it," said Della. "It's sold, I tell you—sold and gone, too. It's Christmas eve, boy. Be good to me, for it went for you. Maybe the hairs " my head were numbered," she went on with a sudden serious sweetness, "but nobody could ever count my love for you. Shall I put the chops on, Jim?"

Out of his trance Jim seemed quickly to wake. He enfolded his Della. For ten seconds let us regard with discreet scrutiny some inconsequential object in the other direction. Eight dollars a week or a million a year—what is the difference? A mathematician or a wit would give you the wrong answer. The magi brought valuable gifts, but that was not among them. This dark assertion will be illuminated later on.

Jim drew a package from his overcoat pocket and threw it upon the table.

"Don't make any mistake, Dell," he said, "about me. I don't think there's anything in the way of a haircut or a shave or a shampoo that could make me like my girl any less. But if you'll unwrap that package you may see why you had me going a while at first."

White fingers and nimble tore at the string and paper. And then an ecstatic scream of joy; and then alas! a quick feminine change to hysterical tears and wails, necessitating the immediate employment of all the comforting powers of the lord of the flat.

For there lay The Combs—the set of combs, side and back, that Della had worshipped for long in a Broadway window. Beautiful combs, pure tortoise shell, with jewelled rims—just the shade to wear in the beautiful vanished hair. They were expensive combs, she knew, and her heart had simply craved and yearned over them without the least hope of possession. And now, they were hers, but the tresses that should have adorned the coveted adornments were gone.

But she hugged them to her bosom, and at length she was able to look up with dim eyes and a smile and say. "My hair grows so fast, Jim!"

And then Della leaped up like a little singed cat and cried, "Oh, oh!"

Jim had not yet seen his beautiful present. She held it out to him eagerly upon her open palm. The dull precious metal seemed to flash with a reflection of her bright and ardent spirit.

"Isn't it a dandy, Jim? I hunted all over town to find it. You'll have to look at the time a hundred times a day now. Give me your watch I want to see how it looks on it."

Instead of obeying, Jim tumbled down on the couch and put his hands under the back of his head and smiled.

"Dell," said he, "let's put our Christmas presents away and keep 'em a while. They're too nice to us just at present. I sold the watch to get the money to buy your combs. And now suppose you put the chops on."

The magi, as you know, were wise men—wonderfully wise men who brought gifts to the Babe in the manger. They invented the art of giving Christmas presents. Being wise, their gifts were no doubt wise ones, possibly bearing the privilege of exchange in case of duplication. And here I have lamely related to you the uneventful chronicle of two foolish children in a flat who most unwisely sacrificed for each other the greatest treasures of their house. But in a last word to the wise of these days let it be said that of all who give gifts these two were the wisest Of all who give and receive gifts, such as they are wisest Everywhere they are the wisest. They are the magi.

USELESS CHRISTMAS GIFTS

From the Youth's Companion.

By this time it seems that our Christmas must inevitably be the same hurried, tumultuous, weary and costly thing that it has always been. We must rush hither and thither, dazed by a strange medley of undesirable objects, and daunted by the prices asked for them. We must storm postoffices, and stand in line before the dingy desks of express companies We must waste money and strength and time and temper, turning the great feast of the Christian year into a mad scramble for gifts We must walk down the streets and ask ourselves fearfully what inutilities are coming our way in return for the inutilities we send forth. We must do what we have always done, and wonder, as usual, why we do it

Here at least is room for practical reform. The call for nation wide economy is not a meaningless word. It represents a real and bitter need. Waste of money, waste of raw material, waste of man power and woman power all help to bring disaster. We might and we should resolve that this Christmas we will buy—for adults—nothing absolutely useless The fact that useless things have been made for sale (like Peter Pindar's razors) is no real reason why they should be sold, and certainly no reason why we should purchase them. Useful gifts are more difficult to find and to fit; they are more homely than the glittering trumpery spread on the Christmas counters, but their purpose is known, their dignity apparent, their welcome well assured

Kathleen Mavourneen

Kathleen Mavourneen' the grey dawn is breaking
The horn of the hunter is heard on the hill
See, dark from her light wing the bright dew is shaking Kathleen Mavourneen' what slumbering still?
Oh, hast thou forgotten how soon we must sever?
Oh, hast thou forgotten this day we must part?
It may be for years and it may be forever
Oh, why art thou silent, thou voice of my heart?
Oh' why art thou silent, Kathleen Mavourneen?

Kathleen Mavourneen awake from thy slumbers!
The blue mountains glow in the sun's golden light
Ah, where is the spell that once hung on my numbers?
Arise in thy beauty thou star of my night!
Mavourneen Mavourneen, my sad tears are falling
To think that from Erin and thee I must part!
It may be for years, and it may be forever!
Then why art thou silent, thou voice of heart?
Then why art thou silent Kathleen Mavourneen?

University 900 Years Old.

From the People's Home Journal

The University of Cairo was installed in one of the magnificent mosques of that city in the year 988 or more than 900 years ago. The mosque has been the seat of this Arabian university ever since.

The room for prayer of the mosque is also the university lecture room. Its floor is covered with mats and the students enter this holy room only on their bare feet. In the great court in the halls of the sanctuary the students sit on the floor in oriental fashion, assembled in groups about their teachers. With shoulders swaying they repeat their lessons in a loud voice to memorize them, or murmur their prayers. Whenever the word Allah occurs in the reading of the Koran the student must incline his head gravely and with proper reverence.

The university numbers 8,000 students from every part of the Mohammedan world. It is maintained by endowments. Every day more than 5,000 loaves of bread are distributed among the scholars, and besides they are invited to free tables in restaurants and boarding houses, and there are also lodging houses in which free accommodations are placed at their disposal. The lecturers are poorly paid, but the rector, as head, enjoys a large income.

Beside a Bright Fire.

When winter winds
Set the yellow woods sighing,
Sighing, oh sighing'
When such a time cometh,
I do retire
Into an old room
Beside a bright fire,
Oh, pile a bright fire'
And there I sit,
Reading old things,
Of knights and lorn damsels,
While the wind sings—
Oh, drearily sings' * * *
Thus, then, live I,
Till 'mid the gloom,
By heaven' the bold sun
Is with me in the room,
Shining, shining'
Then the clouds part
Swallows soaring between,
The spring is alive,
And the meadows are green.
I jump up, * * *
And away to the meadows,
The meadows again!

Have You Ever Seen a "Dingonek?"

J J Jordan in Wide World.

The dingonek, is a huge, unclassified aquatic monster. It resembles in many of its characteristics the extinct dinosaur, a huge reptile of the Mesozoic period, fossils of which have been discovered by paleontologists in the sandstone strata both of the African and American continents.

It lives in Lake Victoria Nyanza and its numerous tributaries, and there is no record of the monster having been seen in any other part of the world. Whether it is a descendant of one of the huge pre-historic saurians that has by a process of adaptation—living as it does in impenetrable regions far away from the encroachments of civilized man—continued with but slight modifications through prodigious ages to the present time, or whether it is an unclassified reptile or amphibian, it is equally impossible to say, as no specimen exists either of its bones or of its skin. That this monster does exist, however, there can be no particle of doubt, as the testimony of authoritative eyewitnesses cannot be reasonably discredited.

Tomorrow Never Arrives.

Always lookin' forward to an easy-goin' time,
When the world seems movin' careless like a bit of idle rime;
A day when there is nothin' that kin make you sigh or fret;
Always lookin' forward—but I haven't seen it yet.

BOLSHEVIKIS AND COSSACKS CLASH

Bitter Fighting at Rostov, Near Don Cossac kCapital, Raging Since Sunday, Report Says.

GERMAN PLUNGES HELD

British Storm Hun Post at North End of Cambrai Sector—New Drives in Italy Stopped.

Petrograd Dec 15 The Petrograd official agency this afternoon announced General Korniloff forces have been defeated by Red Guards and regulars and that the general himself has fled

Former Premier Kerensky has accepted the post of minister of justice in the first Siberian cabinet.

By Associated Press.

Official announcement is made by the bolsheviki government at Petrograd that the Russian delegates to the armistice conference now in progress at Brest Litovsk are empowered to begin peace negotiations with the central powers if an armistice is signed

Meanwhile, the struggle for power in interior Russia is growing more bitter Advantages in the civil warfare are claimed by both sides The bolsheviki assert success in the fighting with General Kaledines' Cossacks in the vicinity of Bielgorod, some 350 miles south of Moscow, while the Cossacks are reported victorious at Rostov-On-The-Don, capturing the city and forcing the bolsheviki troops to retreat across the Don.

Attention is attracted by the fact that the German press is being permitted to predict a German offensive on the western front, a rather unusual prelude to any new aggressive move by the Germans, especially immediately preceding one

Bolsheviki forces apparently have been successful in the first clashes with the counter revolutionists and it is reported they have captured the towns of Tamanovka and Kaluga General Kaledines is besieging Rostov-On-The-Don, the largest city in the Don province and heavy fighting has been in progress there since Sunday Tamanovka is near Bielgorod, 350 miles south of Moscow, and near where the forces of General Korniloff, also a counter-revolutionist, are reported to have been engaged in a heavy battle with the bolsheviki One report said Korniloff had been defeated and wounded, while another says he has been victorious. There is a railroad town named Kaluga, 100 miles southwest of Moscow and if this is the town referred to in the unofficial report from Petrograd, it appeared that the counter revolutionists had approached nearer to the old Russian capital than previous reports had indicated

Battle Rages Since Sunday.

Severe fighting has been going on in and around Rostov, which is only 25 miles southwest of Novo Tcherkask, the Don Cossack capital. Kaledines' troops besieged the city, while Cossack's forces within Rostov attacked the bolsheviki. The losses are reported to have been heavy on both sides. The bolsheviki, reported to be commanded by Ensign Krylenko, the bolsheviki commander in chief, were aided by the transport Kolchida. Wire communication with Rostov has been broken and one railroad line reaching the city was cut

Artillery and local infantry fighting has been in progress on the western front, to which the Germans are still rushing troops and supplies. The enemy has attempted no further massed attacks since Wednesday and there is still no outward sign of where his expected blow is to come.

Of actual infantry fighting on this front there has been little in the last 24 hours. London announces that the British were successful in improving their position as the result of their local operation in the Cambrai area east of Bullecourt. Berlin declares the British were beaten back in an attack at this point.

Fight in Cambrai Sector.

In the Cambrai area yesterday the British stormed a German post on the southern end of the sector, while on the northern end there was bomb fighting in which German prisoners were captured German artillery has been especially active south of the Scarpe, in the Arras area and northeast of Ypres, in Flanders. Intermittent artillery activity continues along the French front. The only infantry action has been near Juvincourt, north of Reims, where a German attack was repulsed.

East of the Bretna river on the northern Italian front, there has been further bitter fighting. Austro-German troops, reinforced by fresh reserves, attacked the Italian positions in valleys descending toward the river from the Col Della Berett region. Italian resistance held the attackers and forced them to give up the effort after having suffered heavy losses. Other violent attacks in the same region brought no gains for the enemy.

Send Bolsheviki Cossacks.

In connection with the order to destroy all the liquor in Petrograd a general proclamation has been issued to the soldiers urging them to refrain from drinking, as sobriety is necessary for the salvation of the revolution.

One hundred bolsheviki Cossacks have been sent to southern Russia by the bolsheviki. It is intended to have them enter the ranks of General Kaledines' forces and to urge the Cossacks to desert Kaledines.

Court Holds Secret Session.

The employes of the food supply department called today at the Smolny institute, the bolsheviki headquarters, and urged that they be declared a neutral department. Otherwise they would decline to work under the people's commissaries. Their demands were refused. The senate, the highest Russian court, which has been abolished by the bolsheviki, today held a secret meeting at which it was determined that the members would continue in their offices.

Striking employes of the government departments announce that they are ready to go to Kiev if the constituent assembly is dissolved and the railway union decides also to go to Kiev. The socialist newspapers appeared this morning without advertisements, but they carry a long protest against the bolsheviki advertising monopoly.

EARLY SUFF VOTE BLOCKED.

Washinton, D. C., Dec. 14.—Majority Leader Kitchin sought consent of the House today to vote January 7 on the constitutional suffrage amendment, but Representative Walsh, of Massachusetts, objected and that ended it for the time being.

BLAMES HOOVER FOR SUGAR WOES

Spreckels Declares to Senate Committee There Is No Shortage Lack of Product in U. S.

SUPPLY SOLD CANADIANS

Badly Needed Food Now Passing Through N. Y. to Dominion's Higher Priced Market, He Says.

Washington, D. C. Dec 15 -Declaring that there is no shortage of sugar in the United States and that the famine is local to the Atlantic seaboard, President Spreckels, of the Federal Sugar Refining company, testifying today at the Senate committee's investigation, placed the responsibility on the food administration Sugar, he declared, was now passing through New York for Canada because of higher prices

Wanted to Pay More.

On October 19, 1917, Spreckels said he telegraphed Food Administrator Hoover urging he be allowed to pay a higher price and agreed not to raise the price to the wholesaler if allowed to do so. The food administrator answered that the $6.90 per hundred pound price for imported raw sugar was high and that he believed other refiners also would be glad to pay more. He attributed some of the inability to get raw sugar to speculators holding the supply in Cuba.

Spreckels said he was not aware of such a situation. Mr. Hoover also wrote hat the supply then available in Cuba at a higher price would not keep American refiners running more than two or three days.

"The world supply is approximately the same as former years," said Mr. Spreckels. "The available supply of the United States is the same. There is no shortage of sugar in this country except in spots."

Sugar Plentiful, He Says.

Mr. Spreckels said there still were 900,000 tons of last year's crop unused and estimated the 1917-1918 crop, exclusive of that produced by Germany, her allies and Russia, as 1,230,000 tons in excess of the amount produced in the same territory last year.

"While the 900,000 tons of old sugar exists it is a question of tonnage in distributing it," he said.

Canada Pays High Price.

"By eliminating Java, there would be 180,000 tons less than the available in sight last year," Mr. Spreckels said. He estimated the Cuban crop this year at about 600,000 tons more than ever before.

The sugar going through New York, Spreckels said, was raw, and the Canadian refiners paid a higher price. "We entered into an agreement with the food administrator to pay a certain price for raw sugars," said Spreckels. "We adhered to that agreement and the product normally imported into this country went abroad because better prices could be obtained. We were forced to close our refineries for lack of supplies."

Sees No Early Relief.

"If you could pay a higher price now could you open your refinery?" Senator Reed asked.

"Not at once. Much of the supply has gone abroad and it would take time to get the raw product here."

Food Administrator Hoover, who had been under attack from Chairman Reed of the committee, yesterday agreed to cooperate in the sugar investigation and proposed that Judge Lindley, counsel for the food administration, be allowed to cross examine witnesses. Senator Reed declared that the food officials would be shown "every courtesy." But said the matter of questioning witnesses would have to be decided by the committee.

ASKS HEAVY CUT IN SUGAR CONSUMPTION

Hoover Asks Wives to Use 3 Instead of 7 Pounds a Month —More "Less" Days.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 15 -A sugar ration of three pounds for each person a month, a porkless day and one wheatless and meatless meal a day will be recommended to householders in a new kitchen card soon to be put out by the food administration Observance of wheatless and meatless meals will be asked in addition to the wheatless and meatless days called for now

The normal consumption of sugar in the United States has been more than seven pounds a month for each person.

The cards will caution against hoarding foodstuffs in homes.

ATTORNEY FOR SLACKER REBUKED BY JUSTICE

Washington, D. C., Dec. 15.—A scathing rebuke administered by Chief Justice White to one of the lawyers attacking the law, enlivened arguments before the supreme court in cases testing the constitutionality of the army draft act.

J. Gordon Jones, representing Albert Jones, convicted in Georgia of failing to register, declared the law was unconstitutional because it required men to take part in a war which had never received the people's approval.

"I don't think your statement has anything to do with the legal arguments," said the chief justice sharply, 'and should not have been said to this court. It is a very unpatriotic statement to make."

The attorney apologized and continued his argument.

POSTAL APPROPRIATION BILL PASSES THE HOUSE

Washington, D. C., Dec. 15.—The postoffice appropriation bills aggregating $333,000,000, including $1,200,000 for censorship of foreign mails, and without any appropriation for pneumatic tube service in New York, Boston or elsewhere, was passed today by the House. It now goes to the Senate.

TO FATHERS

When You Join the Red Cross and Give Your Mite, You Help Our Soldiers in Europe and Feed Starving Babies.

Fathers: Suppose that three years ago a powerful and savage enemy had invaded our nation suddenly and you had been called into the army to defend the country. Suppose that our country had been captured by the invaders; your home burned, your wife and half-grown daughter carried away to slavery worse than death and your self mutilated and put to work behind the enemy lines.

Can't think such things couldn't happen to you and your family? Well, those horrors were visited upon thousands of fathers in France and Belgium by the kaiser's savages. It has been revealed to us during the last few months by the secret service that the Huns were plotting an invasion of the United States through Mexico. But for a fair destiny those horrors would have been ours, because the kaiser aims to dominate the world and spread over the earth his brand of love and fellowship called "kultur."

The American Red Cross has been called upon to relieve suffering "over there" and to restore as far as possible the devastated sections of allied territory. It is now on the job. The Red Cross is conducting thousands of hospitals in France for American and allied soldiers, and running ambulance lines and comfort stations innumerable.

Even the organization cannot do enough because it hasn't half enough members back home here to support the vast work there. So now it is conducting a campaign to get fifteen million members by Christmas eve. It is an honor to belong to the Red Cross. If you aren't already wearing the little pin, enroll at once. The membership costs just $1.00 a year. Another dollar brings you the Red Cross Magazine for twelve months.

Suffering Europe, especially the women and children, needs your help.

TO MOTHERS

The Red Cross Needs Your Help to Save Women and Babes In Europe and to Care for Our Soldiers.

Dear Mothers: Surely you will do all you can to relieve the sufferings of the homeless, wretched mothers and children of war-torn Europe—ragged, starving, freezing, tuberculous women and babies who for three years have endured the horrors of hell. They are your sisters and your sisters' children. The end is not yet for them. Think what they must go through this winter. Think of yourself and your little ones here in America, safe and comfortable.

In the trenches "over there" are millions of men undergoing indescribable hardship and suffering and death to save the liberty-loving world from the kaiser and his savage hordes. Think of them. Remember they are standing between you and the fate that Godless, "kultur"-mad Germany poured upon the women and children of northern France, northern Italy, Belgium, Poland and Roumania.

Of course you cannot go to Europe and nurse and feed and clothe and shelter those sufferers. But the American Red Cross is over there doing it—the noblest labor in the world's history. Our Red Cross is nursing and feeding and clothing and sheltering them. And it is conducting thousands of hospitals and ambulance lines and comfort stations for American soldiers and the soldiers of our allies.

Yet the Red Cross cannot do enough because it hasn't half enough members. Therefore a campaign is being made to get fifteen million members by Christmas eve. It is an honor to belong to the organization.

You will join, won't you? You will see that your husband enrolls, and that each of the children is enrolled—surely. Annual membership costs $1.00. An additional dollar brings the Red Cross Magazine for a year.

"Draw" Shots in Golf.

The flights of golf balls and base balls in the air are similar to the trajectories of billiard balls on felt cloth and governed by the same laws. A blow with a brassie on the under side of a golf ball is precisely the same as a draw shot in billiards. The polished ivory needs the rough surface of the felt to produce resistance, and the tenuous air needs the corrugated surface of the golf ball for the same purpose.

Casting Iron Pipes.

Casting iron pipe in a permanent mold without cores is effected by a Brazilian iron worker by means of a centrifugal machine. The molten metal is run into the revolving mold from a horizontal trough, and water cooling quickly sets it so that it can be removed. The claims made are rapidity, economy, and a product superior to that ordinarily cast in sand molds.

His Object.

"So you want to reduce your weight?" said the physical culture expert. "No," replied the caller, "I merely want to go into some sort of athletic activity that will permit me to wear clothes that are really light and cool in warm weather."

HELP SAVE THIS LAD'S LIFE

American soldiers by the hundred thousand are now in Europe preparing to fight America's battle for liberty against the kaiser's barbarians. Some of our lads have already made the great sacrifice for you and me. We must support our army by joining the Red Cross at once.

COME ACROSS—IT'S YOUR DUTY

Remember Horrors of War-Torn Europe and Think of Safety and Comfort Here—Then Join the Red Cross.

The good people of this community once more commemorate the nativity of the Christ Child with merry-making and gifts.

Ours is a prosperous community. None of us is likely to suffer this winter for want of food, clothing or shelter, though high prices and certain forced economies will make us realize the United States is at war thousands of miles away. A few of us who have given our boys to the nation may lose them. But generally speaking, we shall feel perfectly secure, and when we stop to think about it, we shall thank God more or less heartily for his blessings.

Over in France, which has a total population of about 35,000,000, probably 3,000,000 are in the army fighting off the invader. About 3,000,000 more—mostly women and children—are absolutely down and out. They are a part of the inhabitants of the great industrial district devastated by the German savages. Now these people are homeless, hungry, naked and sick. At least half of them have tuberculosis, with scarcely a fighting chance for life. The whole of France is making unheard of sacrifices to save the nation.

Poor little Belgium is a wreck—a dying wreck. Her small army has been practically exterminated. Her boys and old men have been shot down in cold blood by the kaiser's heroes. Her daughters have been dragged into slavery worse than death. Her babies have been impaled on bayonets and nailed to barn doors by playful Teutonic soldiers. About all that is left of Belgium is her deathless spirit.

And Serbia. Serbia is now but a name in history. A nation become a slaughter pen and charnel house. A people wiped clean off the earth.

What has been said of France applies equally to Italy, Roumania and Russian Poland.

Europe has been a hell of suffering and grief for three years. What have the last three years meant to the United States? Prosperity and peace.

Today all stricken Europe is uttering that age-old lamentation, "Out of the depths, Oh Lord, have I cried unto Thee; Lord hear my voice." And the American Red Cross is the instrument through which Providence is answering the prayer.

The Red Cross is "over there" now, performing a labor of mercy and paying a debt of fellowship on a scale never before known. But it must have your help and mine in order to carry on its vast enterprise in the name of humanity. So the organization is campaigning the nation for 15,000,000 members.

Every man, woman and child in this community ought to belong to the Red Cross. The membership fee is $1.00. Another dollar brings the member the Red Cross Magazine for a year.

Every $1.00 or $2.00 membership helps just so much to back up our American boys in khaki—helps just so much to take the frightful curse from the lives of millions of homeless, starving, freezing, diseased mothers and babies in devastated France, Serbia, Belgium, Poland and Roumania.

The finest Christmas gift you can make is a Red Cross membership. Don't fail to come across by Christmas eve!

COAL FOR KLEMME

Our local coal dealers, M. O. Hocum and W. F. Lau are to be complimented on the excellent service they are rendering the people of Klemme and vicinity. They have had a continual supply of coal in here for the past month when many other towns have been destitute of the coal supply.

Be Good to Her.

When we see a woman trying to buy a newspaper on a cold day, with all the apparently necessary maneuvers involved in getting a penny out of the small pocketbook in the deep recesses of her handbag, we feel that she ought to have the vote or a mother's pension or whatever else she wants at the moment, so as to make up to her in some measure for the accident of sex. —Ohio State Journal.

March and Macaroons.

It may not be generally known that the month of March has a cake dedicated to its honor. Macaroons used to be called March-panes, from the medieval Latin, Martispanes, "bread of March." Some say the cakes were named after Marcus Apicius, the famous epicure; by another authority the cakes were made by the priests of Rome and sacred to the god Mars. The receipt for the making of macaroons is very old.

Matches of Hemp.

In the use of early firearms a match consisted of a cord of hemp or similar material treated with niter so that it continued to smolder after it had been ignited. The match was attached to the cock of the musket and brought down by the action of the trigger on the powder priming.

Picnic in a Tree.

In a public park of Tacoma, Wash., the stump of a huge cedar tree has been hollowed out to form a shelter for picnickers; the top of the stump is capped by a platform which is now used as a bandstand.

Modernized Education.

Fond Papa—"Well, son, what did you learn in school today?" Son—"Aw, not much, dad. We hadda couple of two-reelers in history, a three-reel travelogue in geography, and a split-reel nature study. They useta give a Wild West pitcher once in a while, but they don't do it no more."—Widow.

What We Eat.

The people of the United States consume fully twice as much meat per capita as do the people of Europe. Dried beans, peas, and lentils may replace meat in the diet to a large extent, to the advantage of outdoor workers especially.

Without Aid.

Dobbins had been very sick and the doctor was called once more to hurry to his bedside. He hurried as fast as he could and arrived out of breath. "Am I in time to be of any assistance?" he panted. "Nope, you're too late, doc," answered one of the lodge watchers. "He has made it by himself."

An Anomaly.

Be more like the scissors sharpening man. He's often happy though his life is a grind and he always finds things dull.

WILL WE HELP THE RED CROSS?

Organization Right Now Keeping Millions of Destitute Men, Women and Children Alive in Europe.

All Americans at Home Must Back Up This Great Work Effectually—Join the Red Cross Today.

The American Red Cross has on its hands one of the world's greatest and grimmest jobs. In order to do the work, the organization must have at once fifeen million members. It now has five million on the rolls and is campaigning to secure the ten million additional members by Christmas eve.

Every man, woman and child in this community ought to belong to the Red Cross. Being a member doesn't mean that one is expected to go to Europe, carry wounded soldiers off the battlefields and nurse them in the hospitals. It doesn't mean that one need go to the devastated areas of France, or Belgium, or Poland, or Serbia, and give personal care to the starving, freezing, naked, homeless women and children there.

But it does mean that those of us who stay comfortably at home will do as much as we can in every way to back up the organization already at work "over there."

It does mean that the men among us will contribute our bit to help our brothers fighting the cause of liberty in Europe.

It does mean that the mothers among us will knit and sew for the wretched mothers of Europe and their pitiful babies.

It does mean that our young women will show practical sympathy for the young women along the "western front" and in Serbia who have suffered unspeakable cruelties at the hands of bestial enemy soldiers.

It does mean that our children be made to understand the curse upon the children of Europe, and be taught to make some sort of sacrifice for the cause of humanity.

It does mean that each of us will do what he can individually to supply plenty of comforts for our soldiers fighting the enemy and necessities for the wounded in hospitals.

Stricken Europe is crying to heaven for relief, and Providence is answering that prayer through the instrumentality of the American Red Cross.

Now if it had unlimited funds but only a comparatively few members, the Red Cross would be unable to do the work before it. The first great need is for millions of members—the support of the folks "back home."

Do you know why our lads in the army and navy are acquitting themselves so creditably—why they are amazing the allies by their bravery, intelligence and enthusiasm? It is because those lads are thinking always of their mothers and dads and sisters and sweethearts and kid brothers.

The same thing goes for the Red Cross. When all the dads and mothers and sisters and sweethearts and kid brothers in America show their interest and sympathy for Red Cross work, as members of the Red Cross and as working members, why the Red Cross will cover itself with glory forever more.

A year's membership in the Red Cross costs just one dollar. If one wishes to read the Red Cross Magazine for a year he pays another dollar. Join now. You will never spend a dollar in a better cause.

The Red Cross button is a badge of honor. Wear one!

STRICKEN EUROPE NEEDS OUR HELP

American Red Cross Answering Appeal on Wonderful Scale —Finest Peace Work in History.

Now Red Cross Asks You and Me to Do Our Part for Those "Over There"— So We Must Join.

In war-torn Europe today there are millions of mothers and babies at the point of death from actual starvation. Winter is at hand. Yet they are ragged and homeless. They are diseased —tuberculosis, dysentery, skin affections, fevers are ravaging them. They are widowed and orphaned and broken with grief.

In order to protect America and save the liberties for which the allies have been battling three years, our own lads are over there now, fighting and dying so that you and I and our wives and our daughters and babies may not suffer unspeakable cruelties at the hands of enemy savages.

Now then: The people of America, through their Red Cross, have undertaken to right the hideous wrongs the Teutons have done to noncombatants in Europe, so far as it is possible to do so. It means building thousands of homes, providing food, clothing and care for millions, conducting hundreds of hospitals on a large scale and thousands of medical dispensaries. It is the biggest peace job the world has ever seen.

But that isn't all—not by a long shot. The American Red Cross has a colossal war labor to perform. It must establish and operate hundreds of large military hospitals of various kinds for our own armies and those of our allies. It must provide necessities and comforts for the fighting men and for the noble women who are nursing the wounded. In short, it must do everything possible to take some of the curse out of war.

This work is already well under way. Our Red Cross is helping all the stricken people on a great scale.

Our Red Cross must not fall down on the job. You and I are responsible for the success of the enterprise. Of course we can't go over there, and actually build houses and feed the hungry and clothe the naked and nurse the sick. But we can back up the great machine already in the field and at work.

What can we do—you and I?

Well, first of all we must be members of the Red Cross. At this writing the organization needs millions more of us on its muster rolls. We compose the army at home supporting the army in the field—both peaceful armies. At home here we form chapters and circles that furnish clothing and hospital supplies for soldiers and civilians in Europe. We must provide funds. We must show direct, intimate, personal interest in what the Red Cross field organization is doing. We must knit and sew and save and give.

Right now the Red Cross is campaigning for 15,000,000 members. Fifteen million members by Christmas Eve is the slogan. One year's membership costs one dollar. By paying an additional dollar the member gets the Red Cross Magazine for a year.

Every man, woman and child in this community ought to be wearing a Red Cross pin on Christmas Day. Every father should make each of his children a Christmas gift of a Red Cross membership—and explain to the youngsters the meaning of the present.

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS IS MAKING FRIENDS FOR ALL ETERNITY

Bleeding, ragged, starving, freezing, homeless, sick Europe gave utterance to a cry of misery and sorrow and despair, and the American Red Cross has answered it in a magnificent way. In binding the wounds, clothing the naked, feeding the hungry, housing the homeless, nursing the sick, it is binding Europe to America by ties of friendship that will last through the ages.

The Red Cross is shipping into Paris daily 300 tons of food, clothing, hospital supplies, etc. Much of this is used immediately. The surplus goes into a 100,000-ton warehouse for emergency and against the day American soldiers will start fighting on a large scale.

When emergency comes, the Red Cross is ready. During the recent enemy drive into Italy the Italians appealed for help. Within two days our Red Cross had sent 45 carloads of food and supplies from Paris.

The Red Cross has established in France a factory for the construction of artificial limbs. Within the last few months it has supplied hundreds of French soldiers with wooden legs.

Whatever the Red Cross uses must come from America—must come from generous American hearts and willing American hands. During November the central division of the Red Cross, comprising the states of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska, sent to France 600,000 surgical dressings, 285,000 knitted articles and 335,000 pieces of hospital linen. Yet it can't do enough because it hasn't half enough members.

You Ought to Belong to the Red Cross. Your Help Is Much Needed—Membership Costs a Dollar or Two Dollars for a Year—No More. Be a Patriot—Join Before Christmas Eve

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XXVI (Continued). 28

Kasia, with white face, passed into the inner room. Her father had been placed on a bed, and lay on his back, his eyes rolled up, breathing heavily. His hands were tightly clenched, but already the spasm was passing and the muscles relaxing. Almost at once, Pachmann appeared at the door, handed her a basin of water and then withdrew.

Under her ministrations, the breathing of the unconscious man grew softer and softer, the hands unclosed, the eyelids drooped and finally his head fell over on one side and he slept. Kasia, watching him for a few moments, assured herself that all was well, then turned out the light, returned to the outer room and closed the door.

Pachmann was sitting at the window, staring idly out at the deepening shadows. He arose at once at the sound of her entrance.

"Miss Vard," he said, "there is something I wish to say to you. Will you not sit down?" and he placed a chair for her. "What I have to say is most serious, and whatever your feelings of ill usage may be, I hope you will try to look at the matter also a little from my side. The situation is this: Your father, as you doubtless know, is the inventor of a mechanism which will make the nation possessing it mistress of the world. That nation must be Germany. Apart from my ambition for my country and my love of her, I believe that she is the nation best fitted to possess it. At any cost it must be hers. no cost can be too great. 100 lives, 1,000 lives, millions of treasure—all these would be sacrificed gladly, without hesitation. You understand?

"Yes," said Kasia. "I think I understand."

"It is your father's dream, as I suppose you also know," Pachmann continued, "to bring about a world wide peace by causing all nations to strike hands together in a sort of universal brotherhood. He demands that, to enter this brotherhood, Germany relinquish her share of Poland and restore Elsass, and Lorrain to France. He requires, too, the virtual abdication of our ruling house. To such conditions Germany cannot consent. Rather than that, we should prefer a hundred times the present status. For Germany has nothing to fear fro the futrue.

"Now, Miss Vard, let me say at once that I regard your father's dream as a dream and nothing more. It cannot be realized. There is only one way in which world peace can be secured—let your father consent to place this power in our hands and there will be no more war or, at most, only one very short and decisive war. If your father is in earnest, if he is not mad, he will consent to this proposal. I need hardly add that, if he does consent, he has only to name his own reward—Germany will pay it gladly. Wealth, position, the suzeralnty of a nation—all this Germany is prepared to grant."

"You have placed this before him?" Kasia asked.

"Yes, it was placed before him at much greater length at our second conference."

"And he refused?"

"He refused; but we cannot take that refusal.'

"Why do you tell me all this?"

"I tell you this, Miss Vard," answered Pachmann earnestly, "because I wish you to understand that in what may seem to you treachery and persecution, I am but fighting for my country. For her, I hesitate at nothing. Then, too, I wish you to know what our position is. If you will think of it, I believe you will find it an honorable position, and one which will bring peace to the world, and quickly. I hope that, after full consideration, you will decide to speak to your father. Perhaps to you he might listen."

"No, he would not listen," said Kasia, calmly; "and I shall not speak; or, if I do, it will be to urge him to continue to defy you. Do you imagine that any threat, any torture, could compel him to place the world at the mercy of your kaiser? You do not know him, Mr. Pachmann."

"That is your final answer?" Pachmann asked.

"Yes."

He rose.

"Then I shall have to request you to return to the room below."

"One moment, Mr. Pachmann," said Kasia. "I wonder if you realize how dangerous is this game you are playing? You are not in Germany; you cannot kidnap two people here in New York, even by the emperor's order, without some inquiry being made."

"Who will make it? No one knows that you were on the Ottilie; your room was empty, your names were not among the list of passengers; to all inquiries the reply will be made that you did not cross with the boat. No one knows that you are in New York."

"You are mistaken," retorted Kasia, her cheeks flushed. "One man knows. I am to meet him this evening."

"Ah! but when he finds you not at home, when he inquires of our company, he will conclude that you missed the boat."

"He will know better, because he crossed with us."

Pachmann stared at her, his brows contracted; then a slow smile broke across his lips.

"I remember now," he said. "I did, on one occasion, observe you talking to a young man. No doubt it is to him you refer."

"Yes—and he has a power at his disposal which even you may fear."

Pachmann chuckled.

"The power of the press, is it not?" he asked. "Be at rest, Miss Vard. He will not use it against us. He will walk into our net at 7 o'clock this evening! You may be sure that now he will not be permitted to escape!"

In spite of herself, Kasia turned pale. Herself and her father she was prepared to sacrifice—they had played for a great stake and had been outwitted. But Dan! That he, too, should be drawn into the whirlpool and sucked down and destroyed! She turned faint at the thought. Then she pulled herself up sharply, for Pachmann's gimlet eyes were upon her, glittering with comprehension, reading her face, while on his own there was an expression of infernal triumph. She shivered as she looked at him.

"Have you anything else to say, Miss Vard?" he asked, with a leer.

"No," said Kasia, and turned to the door, anxious to hide her face, to escape from him, to be alone with her thoughts."

"Then please come with me."

She stepped first to the inner door and glanced at her father. He was sleeping peacefully. Then she followed Pachmann down the stair. At the door of her room he paused.

"By the way, Miss Vard," he said, still leering, "it is useless for you to fatigue yourself by endeavoring to break this door. It is strengthened on the outside by a sheet of steel—behold." He swung the door for her to see, then held it open for her. "I will have your dinner sent in to you," he added, and Kasia heard the bolts shot into place again.

Half an hour later, a bearded giant in livery brought in a tray containing a very appetizing meal, set it on the table, and retired. Kasia realized suddenly that she was very hungry, for she had had nothing to eat since breakfast. There was certainly nothing to be gained by starving herself—that, she told herself with a shiver, might come later!—so she washed hands and face at the basin in the bathroom, straightened her hair, and at last sat down to the meal with a calmness which surprised even herself. She ate deliberately and well, and when, at last, she pushed her cup away, it was with a sense of renewed strength and courage.

Once more she examined the room minutely, but there was no exit save by the steel lined door. The windows remained, but they opened into that well like court, with wall, surmounted by bristling iron. Yet she was strong and agile; perhaps * * * perhaps * * *

She snapped out the light, went to the open window and peered out. It was very dark in the shadow of those walls, but she remembered precisely how it looked; she remembered the door opening into the basement, just beneath the window. If it should, by any chance, be unlocked. But that was foolish to expect. Perhaps it would be possible to twist a rope from the bed clothes and throw it up over the chev-aux-de-frise; but even then there would be a long hand-over-hand climb to accomplish; and the barbed and pointed spikes had looked very formidable. In any event, she had the whole night before her; she must not act hastily; she must wait and watch; perhaps some other means would present itself; perhaps Dan * * *

And then the pain of recollection stabbed through her. Dan could do nothing; Dan was to be himself entrapped; and yet, how could that be? Perhaps Pachmann was lying—and yet he had not seemed to be lying. He had spoken confidently, triumphantly, gloatingly.

She sat erect, listening, then stole to the door and placed one ear against it. There were steps in the hall outside, steps which passed, which mounted the stair * * *

Perhaps that was Dan; yes, it must be after 7 o'clock * * *

She forced herself to sit again at the window, but her hands were trembling. She stared out into the shadows of the little court and tried to think. But thinking was so difficult; there was a dull ache at the back of her eyes, and her throat felt dry and swollen. One thought ran through her mind, over and over: Dan must not be sacrificed, Dan must not suffer, even if Germany must triumph * * *

Then, suddenly, from overhead, came the sound of a sharp scuffle and a heavy fall. She fancied she could hear voices raised in anger. The slam of a door echoed through the house. A moment later came a series of savage blows, of rending crashes, as though the house itself was being torn to pieces;—and then silence.

Kasia stood as though turned to stone, listining, listening. Was it Dan? Was it her father? What was happening in that room upstairs? What did that sudden silence mean? Her imagination pictured frightful things * * *

And then, from overhead, she heard the pacing of swift feet, up and down, up and down; back and forth 100 times, as though driven by some raging spiriting, scourging, scourging. And then again silence.

Horrible as the sounds had been, the silence frightened her still more; it was filled with menace, it was charged with terror. Movement, sound—those meant life, at least; silence might mean anything—might mean death!

She could endure it no longer. She ran wildly into the other room and flung herself face downward on the bed, covering her ears burying her eyes in the pillow * * *

But the terror passed; and at last she rolled over and stared up into the darkness and tried again to think. She must, must, must escape! Once free, once in the street, she could summon aid, could raise the town, could storm the house! But to escape! She pressed her hands to her aching temples.

And then a sound from the outer room brought her upright. she listened with bated breath, pressing her hands against her breast to still the beating of her heart. There it was again, stealthy, scraping * * *

Slowly, cautiously, she stole to the door of the bedroom; the noise again; and the sound of heavy breathing. And then her heart leaped suffocatingly, for there against the grey light of the window was silhouetted the figure of a man. In frantic terror, she sprang for the switch, found it after an instant's frenzied groping, and turned on the lights. The sudden flare blinded her; then her straining eyes saw who stood there.

"Dan!" she cried. "Dan!"

He was standing on the window sill, steadying himself by a knotted sheet secured somewhere overhead; and at the sound of her voiced, he reeled and nearly fell. Then, with a face like ivory, he stooped and peered in under the raised sash, rubbed his eyes, looked a second time, and with a low cry, sprang into the room.

"Kasia!"

She was in his arms, close, oh! close to his heart.

"Oh, Dan, Dan!" she sobbed. "I'm so glad—so glad!"

And she kissed him with trembling lips.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE VOICE AT THE DOOR.

It was nearly 9 o'clock when Pachmann sat down to dinner that evening, but he did so in an exceedingly pleasant frame of mind. He felt that he had done a good day's work. In the first place, he had eluded the spies; in the second place, he had enticed all the flies into the web, where they were now securely entingled. There was just one way in which they could regain their freedom; and that they would, in the end, accept that way, the admiral did not doubt.

Protests were natural, at first; inevitable, indeed, until their indignation at the trick played upon them had subsided somewhat; it was also inevitable that there should be some heroics, some talk of honor, self sacrifice, and such tom foolery. But these vaporings would soon come to an end; a few hours of sober reflection would work wonders in dissipating them. And if there was need, why, it would always be possible to apply the screw—the screw of hunger, the screw of solitary confinement, the screw of sleeplessness, of fear, of anxiety—and to turn it gently, gently. Oh, victory was certain now!

So Pachmann rubbed his hands together, mentally, at least, and enjoyed his dinner immensely. It was a good dinner, but it did not seem to appeal to Pachmann's table companion. That was the prince, summoned from his room where he had sulkily immured himself, and obeying from force of habit; but, strangely enough, his appetite, which was of a magnitude and realiability characteristic of the Hohenzollerns, had evidently failed him now. He trifled gloomily with the food, and drank more wine than was good for him without any perceptible resultant lightening of spirit.

Plainly something was seriously wrong, but if the prince expected the admiral to make any anxious inquiries about his health, or to express regret for the scene of an hour before, he was disappointed. Beyond cocking an amused eye at him, now and again, the admiral took no notice of him. So it was the prince who had to open the conversation, which he did as soon as the servants had withdrawn.

"Admiral Pachmann," he began, with heavy dignity, "I did not like the way in which this evening you spoke of me. It appeared to me almost insulting."

"Insulting, your highness!" protested the admiral. "You astonish me. I imagined myself speaking most respectfully."

"It was insulting," repeated the prince doggedly.

"Surely you misunderstood me! said the admiral, with deep concern. "Let me see—what was it I said? I do not remember the exact words, but it was to the effect, was it not, that your health was threatened by over study and that the emperor had instructed you to take a vacation?"

"There was more than that."

"I emphatically demed that there was any truth in that absurd rumor about the bar maid."

"She was not a bar maid."

The admiral laughed.

"Was she not? Then I was misinformed. But that is a detail."

"In addition to which," pursued the prince, rather red in the face with the knowledge that he was getting the worst of it, "I do not consider that you are behaving honorably in this matter."

"In what way?"

"You brought Miss Vard and her father here, promising to give them an answer."

"And I gave them an answer, did I not?"

"Yes—and then proceeded to imprison them."

"I have no recollection of having promised not to do so."

"But they trusted you."

"The more fools they!"

"They must be released," said the prince, firmly. "I command it!"

Pachmann selected a cigar from the tray on the table with great care. Then he lighted it, took a slow puff or two, and looked at the prince.

"Ah, you command it!" he said, thoughtfully.

"Yes," repeated the prince, "I command it!"

"How I wish," sighed the admiral, "that my heart was as young as yours, my prince! I would give much to bring that about! But, alas, it has long since grown indifferent to red lips and bright eyes; this old heart of mine has been hardened by 40 years of service; it is capable, now, of only one passion—but that is a fierce one."

"And what is that?" the prince inquired.

"The passion for my country and for my king!" said the admiral, and saluted. "My house is not a great one, as you have had occasion to remind me; but it is loyal! Its motto is, 'I love and I obey.' We are proud of that motto, and we have never been false to it. As for myself, I love my country as I have loved no woman; for her I would give my life, my honor, and rejoice to do it! For my king, as you have seen, I hesite at nothing! Prince, sooner or later you must learn your lesson—and the longer you defer it the more bitter it will be."

BAKER'S YEAST.

Yeast as a remedy has always appealed to the imagination of physicians and many have been the diseases for which it was used, ranging from plague, for the cure of which it was given by the monks 1,000 years ago, to pimples and boils, its newest field. It is scarcely proper to speak of the use of yeast for boils as being new, since it is an old woman's remedy for this affliction.

In a recent number of the Journal of the American Medical association Dr. Hawk and three of his associates tells of their experiences in the use of ordinary baker's yeast in boils, pimples and other skin disease, and in constipation. They gave from one-half cake to one cake three times a day before meals. Sometimes the yeast was given alive, sometimes after being killed with boiling water. It was given suspended in water, beef tea or orange juice.

Of the 10 cases of constipation treated with it nine were improved or cured. In some of the 76 persons treated with yeast three cakes a day, of live cells caused diarrhoea. In some of these cases killing the yeast with boiling water prevented it from producing diarrhoea. In some cases the symptom was overcome by giving a smaller dose. Even dead yeast in considerable doses was efective against constipation. The yeast treatment was kept up for a month or more in most cases.

Yeast cells were not all killed in passing through the stomach and intestines. Of 17 cases of boils, 16 were cured or improved by baker's yeast. Case No. 16 had boils for over two months; five were lanced in one week. One-half cake of yeast was given three times a day after meals. Cure in two weeks.

Case No. 25. Five boils in two months. Three cakes of yeast a day. Boils soon subsided.

Case No. 21. Boils a week apart for about two months. When treatment started one on neck and one on wrist. Three cakes of yeast a day before meals for three weeks. Both healed. No return in four weeks.

Of 17 cases of acne (pimples) 17 were cured or improved by the use of yeast. The authors suggest that this may have been due to improving the bowel habits.

Case No. 33. Acne lasting two years. Papules and pustules covering practically entire face. One cake of yeast three times a day. At the end of two weeks face nearly clear. Wholly clear in four weeks. Eight cases of acne rosacea were greatly improved by the yeast treatment.

Case No. 51. Marked case of 10 years' duration, numerous bright red, deep seated papules; scarlet nose, cheeks and forehead. One cake of yeast three times a day for four weeks. Lesions leaned; redness disappeared in three weeks.

In five cases of eczema yeast treatment was useless. There was no improvement in three cases of psoriasis. One case was markedly improved. The yeast used was the ordinary variety sold in grocery stores. The treatment is safe enough and should it do no good there is no likelihood of its doing harm.

The "Homer" Returns.

From the Christian Science Monitor

The war department of the United States government has instituted a national search for carrier pigeons of the best quality, to be used in connection with the operation of the oversea expeditionary force. Something like 5,000 of these birds are, it is said, wanted immediately, and people in all sections have become interested in the work of collecting suitable pigeons and selecting from those offered the most desirable "homers."

One hundred pigeon fanciers gathered from different parts of New England in the Revere house, Boston, a short time ago, to listen to some remarks by Maj Frank J. Griffin, of the signal corps, about pigeons. This officer explained that the most important duty of the carrier pigeon will be that of conveying messages from the front line trenches to field headquarters while the hostile armies are engaged. Under severe fire it is sometimes impossible to use the telegraph or telephone, and owing to the presence of smoke and gases the use of signals is practically out of the question. In modern warfare the airplane observer is the eye of the army, but his difficulties are immensely increased by anything in the nature of a 'drive' beneath him.

Carrier pigeons fit into this emergency nicely if there are only enough of them available. As Major Griffin explained, when the first line trenches enter battle a large number of the pigeons are supplied for the use of the proper officers in sending reports of progress and in calling for re-enforcements, supplies, and so on. Six copies of each message are made and each is attached to one of a half dozen birds liberated. They strike out instanter for the home loft or for field headquarters, and if one of them succeeds in reaching its destination the headquarters staff is satisfied.

The present war, with all its boasted modernity, has brought about a return to many old, and long discarded, usages. The trench itself is a revival of an almost abandoned system of defense. For years the name "grenadiers," as applied to certain regiments or guards, was used entirely in a traditional sense, grenade throwing having fallen into complete desuetude. That supposedly very new device for concealing the enemy, known as camouflage, was practiced centuries ago by African and American savages. And now the carrier pigeon, which was in use at the time of the first crusade, when the Saracens were found to be employing the bird regularly for purposes of communication, and which was in use by practically all armies until the telegraph was invented, has come back to assume a more important place than ever on the battlefield.

Fashion the Best Doctor.

From Answers, London.

Fashion is one of the best doctors women have, and she has stolen many a patient from the legitimate M. D. That fact alone is enough to fix her firmly on her throne.

There's nothing like a new frock or hat for giving a woman a new lease of life, raising her spirits and curing her of nerves. Clothes bear a closer relationship to health than many people imagine—at least, where the ordinary woman is concerned. And you've got to remember that there are more ordinary women than extraordinary ones in the world.

Even if hubby has to pay out much money for that creation at Mme. So-and-So's, he may safely tell himself that he is the gainer, for he gets good spirits instead of depression and grumbling to keep him company, and probably saves his little woman from a nervous breakdown in the bargain.

Some women of strong character are denying themselves new frocks altogether just now. But you usually find that they've lots of good old ones to wear out, and that they belong to the set where clothes and being well dressed do not matter as far as their chances in life go.

If you've thousands a year you may go about in rags if you like and only be called eccentric, but be badly dressed, if you're a worker and want a new post, and you'll be offered as low a salary as dare be suggested. No worker can afford to be shabby.

THANKFUL TO CURIO HUNTER NEAR VE

BY ED L. KEEN,
(General European Manager, Press.)

With the French Armies In the Nov. 14 (by mail)—If one of the hadn't stopped to dig up a Boche net from the roadside, this would not have been written.

The French officer-chaperon charges had tarried on the way Verdun from one of the outlying to chat with a bunch of Red Cross and incidentally to watch the a flock of German airplanes dodged in and out among the puffs of French shrapnel. The daily artillery strife had been some hours. Hundreds of tons had been bowling above our from both sides far up and down line. At times there was a every second. But so far the targets had been located a distance away. Our officer had the word, to resume the journey the chauffeurs were cranking up the opportunity of gathering in battle field so recent intervened still there.

Nature Given No Chance.

Careful figuring, conducted shortly thereafter in one of the Cross dugouts nearby, convinced whole party that if it hadn't been the bayonet epaulets our cars have collided with the big Boche just at the moment of its emerg about a block down the road. Fo an hour the German artillerymen the neighborhood and then dug full we beat it back to the underg shelters of the safest citadel in rope.

The experience had merely supp vivid final touch to impressions a acquired—of what the soldiers of dun have been undergoing in the 18 months. In this region Nature been given no opportunity, as she for example on the battle field of Somme to repair as best she can ravages of war. From the top of the battered forts that now form unbreakable ring about Verdun captured from the Germans with valor and a sacrifice of life that make its name immortal in his stretches out, as far as 10-ply In-Germany binoculars can reach vista of utter devastation.

Once thickly forested hills and cultivated valleys speckled with villages, now a sodden, grayish, onous panorama of churned-up criss-crossed here and there trenches, and only an occasional or pile of crumbled stones to its former beauty. It's like Notre de Lorette, Vimy, Wytschaete, Mes and Passchendaele Ridge all scra together.

No Trespassers Allowed.

All the forces of Nature—fire, hurricane, and earthquake—could have wrought such havoc. Only could do it. Even looking back the only discernable color is the of the distant fields the shattered tiled roofs of the fortress are clusters of purple-wreathed where sleep the men who made motto of Verdun. "On ne passe (No trespassers allowed")—a re

The Germans now occupy very the same line as that from which crown prince launched his costly futile attack upon this stronghold. viously we had traversed the val the Marne whose almost scar-less scape bears ample testimony characteristic French traits of mobility, and resourcefulness; Verdun's pitifully harrowed will always be a monument hitherto less familiarly known qualities of tireless energy and stubbornness.

Then on through the forest, Vosges down to where France early days of the war plucked still tightly clutches a bit of what to be hers. It's only a few square —just about equal in area to the of ground that Belgium now fi her own ravished country—but ly sufficient to exemplify and another fine French trait, intense of accomplishment.

A good many G statesmen profess to believe the population of Alsace-Lorraine so thoroughly kultured in the generation and a half that a plebi now would show a preponderin in favor of Hohenzollernism. Bu mans on the ground are far less fident.

The French-Alsatian lieuten piloted us to the brow of a bluff where we could look out the French-German lines in the below to Mulhouse, told us a factory he owned there before war. "The Germans seized it," "but my title is still good. They to sell it the other day, after tensive advertising campaign, at low price. But nobody would even loyal German subjects."

From another eminence we co the Rhine and beyond "the land," as the lieutenant confide marked—while in the immedia ground rose the devastated Hi weilerkopf, once the scene of desperate fighting of the war section, now comparatively quie the German and French lines across the top, in places only apart.

UNCLE SAM WILL PLAY SANTA CLAUS TO EVERY SAMMY

All of our soldier boys away from home are thinking of Christmas these days and Uncle Sam is going to see to it that their longings are not in vain. Something useful will be given to every soldier in the service.

CAUSE FOR THANKFULNESS.

In the early stages of the war a large percentage of the wounded developed gas gangrene. Within the year an antitoxin for gas gangrene has been discovered. The reports from the front are that gas gangrene has ceased to be a source of terror. We can be thankful that this menace has been removed.

In 1914 and 1915 a great many wounded soldiers died from lockjaw. Now all soldiers with dirty wounds are given an injection of tetanus antitoxin when their wounds are dressed. Lockjaw no longer seriously menaces the soldiers. We can be thankful that our soldiers will not be in great danger from lockjaw.

We know now that out[illegible]ment of wounds [illegible] soldiers in battle did n[illegible] We have learned th[illegible] ings are appl[illegible] dressing should not remain on longer than 24 hours and [illegible] a better limit still For th[illegible] we should be thankful

The first Serbian army was paralyzed by typhus fever. Typhus fever is a menace now to [illegible] of the western fronts For [illegible] we can be thankful

In [illegible] cases of typhoid fever and 2 were fatal deaths. England's million of soldiers are said to have had less than 2 deaths from this disease in three years. We have had no typhoid worth speaking of in our army and we will have none. Another thing to be thankful for.

The war has taught us how to treat infected wounds and burns. Our knowledge of [illegible] has been increased greatly within recent years. It is known that there are several [illegible] of pneumococci. Most [illegible] pneumococci are rarely found in the human mouth. Pneumonia is to be regarded as mildly contagious. The secretions are to be destroyed promptly and completely. The serum treatment cuts the death rate almost in half. Vaccination against pneumonia has been found to be feasible. We can be thankful that some headway against this terrible disease has been made.

Methods of diagnosing and treating meningitis have been developed. The English military authorities say they have controlled meningitis.

Measles has been left uncontrolled because it was thought to be uncontrollable. As the result of experiences in the earlier part of 1917 authorities say that measles is a preventable disease and efforts to control it are being made.

Venereal disease has always been neglected. In consequence it has become the most widely spread of all diseases. Public attention has been attracted. In consequence control of venereal disease is becoming one of the functions of a well developed health department. For all this advancement in medical science we should be thankful.

Germany Sowed, We Reap.

Throughout the period of the war before the United States became a participant the German and Austrian governments acquired the habit of buying war munitions in the United States so that they would not be acquired by the entente powers. For the most part the central empire governments had no hope of getting the goods into their territories. They merely reached them and in the course of months they accumulated a large supply of material of one sort or another.

Now the American republic is in the war, and in the fullness of time its government has decided to take over these stocks which the Teutonic governments carefully laid away. It is estimated that the value of the goods cotton copper and steel which will be acquired, exceeds $150,000,000. This is a large amount of property and in all likelihood considerably more than 50 per cent of the total sum to be realized from the general confiscation of goods of enemy aliens.

There is an ironic turn to the situation. Germany and Austria find themselves in the position of combatants who have been overreached by their own cunning. The plan that was counted on to harass and annoy the entente has worked out to its advantage.

The Kaiser's Confidential Man.

From the New York Times.

Who is von Valentini?

When the first rumors of the resignation of Chancellor Michaelis were published a short time ago, a name new to the American public was mentioned in connection with German high politics.

In this country people read the dispatches and quotations from German papers and wondered what new star in the political firmament this might be. For of Rudolf von Valentini, it is safe to assume, the vast mass of the American public had never heard. As a matter of fact, it is altogether probable that a large percentage of the German public has never heard of him either. Yet it is in line with the tradition of the peculiar office he holds that his name should be prominently mentioned in connection with the fall of a chancellor. For when von Valentini, like his immediate predecessor, holds conferences with members of the reichstag, expresses the opinions of the emperor, and becomes prominent in the public press, it is practically a sure [illegible]ness that some one's political head is going to fall.

Rudolph von Valentini is chief of the privy cabinet of the German emperor. He is not a part of the government. He is attached personally, as are the other members of the privy cabinet, to the emperor. He seldom makes any official public appearance. His name is rarely mentioned in connection with governmental affairs. No one knows exactly what he does or how he does it.

When the kaiser has made a personal decision of moment one of the members of the privy council tells the people who ought to know what it is that his majesty has decided. It is usually the chief [illegible] and who becomes [illegible] the kaiser's personal [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Read! I cannot too strongly recommend good reading. Six hours each week of serious reading is not much, but it may mean the difference between a $20,000-a-year executive and a $25 clerk. Read! Learn to think with—and against the deep thinkers of the world.—William Maxwell in Collier's.

The Government is making a Hog Survey and are requesting every farmer to give them a report of what they are doing along the line of raising hogs. Blanks have been left at each of the banks for the farmer to fill out. It costs you nothing and you are not obligating yourself whatever, all the government wants is a report on what you are raising. Call at either bank and get a blank.

"Our Boys" Write From Camp Pike

Camp Pike, Arkansas
December 19th, 1917

Klemme Times

Dear Editor If you will be so kind as to publish this in your paper, we will take this means to thank the good friends we have in Klemme for what they did for us while we were there A little "Jack" as the boys call it here, is a fine thing to have in the army, but it isn't the money we appreciate so much, as the fact that we know that you people appreciate what we are doing here If we should ever cross the water it will be a great relief to know that you who stay behind will stay by us to the last dollar if necessary and from all indications we need not feel uneasy on that score.

Camp Pike is located about seven miles from Little Rock. Instead of tearing up corn fields for camp site as they did at Camp Dodge, they fell trees and blasted rock

Our officers here are all regular army men and even though we had good officers at Camp Dodge, we like these just as well.

We have been quarantined for over a week with the measles and we are sure to be kept in for some time yet as they find a new case most every morning

We didn't save the money you people gave us for Christmas until that time, and perhaps we were wise, for now we have no chance to spend it. We read about the cold wave that struck Iowa and were glad that we escaped

Firing has started on the range and we can hear the boom of the heavy artillery and ocassionally the bark of our own weapon, the machine gun You that have heard a gasoline launch running at high speed can imagine about how a machine gun sounds in action Six guns fired for 29 seconds at 40 dummies at one-half mile range and marked 400 shots. That would be about 10 holes per man so you can see the machine gun is no plaything

Again thanking you, we are,

Respectfully yours,
R. L. Jones

We wish to extend our thanks to our customers for their liberal patronage during the past year and wish you all a very Happy and Prosperous New Year.

Mrs John Josten

Why Do You Worry?

Why should anyone worry? To worry shortens life. Like anger, it reacts and poisons the system. The federal health service has taken worry so seriously that it has issued a bulletin warning the American people against the danger of worrying and the blessing that comes to those who are active members of the glad-hand society.

Stokesbarry-Yahnke Marriage

As the piano began to peal out the wedding march under the hands of Mrs Albert Yahnke Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, December 19th, Mr Elvin Stokesbary and Miss Cora Yahnke, preceeded by their pastor, made their way to the parlor of the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Yahnke, where the words were spoken which sealed them as husband and wife The ceremony was accompanied by a beautiful ring which was placed on the finger of the bride.

Cora and Elvin as we all know them best, are two of Klemme's most popular young people. Both are members of the English M. E. church and very worthy active members. They have a very large place in the circle of young people, and especially the "Win One Class," of which they were members. To know these two young people is to love them and hold them in high esteem. Their friends are not easily counted for they are legion.

They rather expected to surprise their many friends but during the last few hours previous to the wedding a goodly number went over the top and discovered the secret.

A bounteous supper consisting of well fatted goose, ice cream, and many other good things was served. The hostess proved herself equal to the demands of any kind of a wedding feast.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Stokesbary, parents of the groom, with their three small children Ralph, Margerite and Arvid; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Yahnke, and Hattie; the pastor and family.

The pleasant evening closed with a shaking up by their friends. The "Win One Class," together with a large number of the Sunday School pupils, marched from the church to the house where they assembled and sang "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," after which all partook in a general charivari, receiving a splendid treat.

Elvin and Cora will be at home to their friends at once at his fathers, 1¾ miles North of Klemme. All join in wishing them a long life of true bliss.

GERMAN M E. CHURCH NOTES

A Happy New Year to all.

Another year is drawing to a close and it behooves all of us to stop and look back and consider if we have made the progress in the spiritual life that we could and should have made. No doubt many of us will say we might have done better had we only tried a little harder. Now as we enter upon a new year may we not all say that with God's help we will be more faithful in the attendance of all church services, and try to win others for the church the coming year. The church bids welcome to every family in Klemme and community to all of the services.

Solar Surface Temperature.

The latest estimate of the absolute temperature of the solar surface is that of F. Biscoe of Warsaw, whose computation is based upon the intensity of radiation for individual wave-length in the solar spectrum as obtained with the spectro-bolometer at the Smithsonian astrophysical observatory. He gets an average of 7,300 degrees plus 100 degrees Centigrade.

Duration of Human Life.

The average duration of human life is about thirty-three years. One-quarter of the people of the earth die before the age of six; one-half before the age of sixteen, and only one of every 100 lives to the age of sixty-five. The average age, however, is slowly increasing, probably owing to better sanitary conditions, and greater medical skill.

Origin of Billiards.

Many men believe that billiards was a French invention, says the Providence Journal, but a growth, which others maintain, most likely because of the name, that it was a French invention, and they contend that it was played by the Germans, Dutch, Italians and French long before it appeared in England. But on this matter, says the New York Sun, there is room for doubt. A number of literary references to the game may be found in Elizabethan days.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

The bomb dropping mechanism of a Zeppelin captured by the British was described in a recent number of the London Sphere. There are 60 bomb droppers for conical bombs. The base is slung in straps and there is a strap around the neck. The latter has a releasing hook, and when the hook is operated the small end first drops down and the base slides out of its straps The bomb then rights itself and drops base downward. The bombs are slung in one or two lines along the underside of the mail hull. The releasing hook is operated by an electro-magnet, and there is a small switchboard in the cabin for controlling the release. Each bomb has a separate switch The bombs can be released by hand levers also in case the electric means fail. Each bomb has a safety device and is not "alive" until it has dropped several hundred feet.

A writer in a German chemical paper says that commercial asbestos, contaminated with iron compounds, may be purified by treatment with a 2 per cent akueous solution of oxalic acid for 48 hours, followed by washing with water; the strength of the asbestos is not affected. A band of asbestos, 20 millimeters wide, showe dat 14 different places an electrical resistance of 600,000 ohms, after treatment as described, the resistance increased to 150,000 ohms An alternative method consists in heating the asbestos for 24 hours in a current of hydrogen or carbon monoxide at 300 400 degrees centigrade and then washing with dilute hydrochloric or sulphuric acid and afterward with water

CHOSE IOWAN TO LEAD REPUBLICAN PARTY

Washington D C Dec 22 John T Adams, of Dubuque, now vice chairman of the republican national committee, will be selected to succeed Chairman William R Wilcox with the forthcoming meeting of the national committee in St Louis early in February, it was stated here last night on competent authority

Republican chieftains met last night and decided to issue a call soon for the St Louis meeting Representatives of the national committee are now en route to the Missouri city to arrange local details

It is stated on excellent authority that Wilcox will formally resign at the coming meeting because of the urgency of his non-political duties Adams is the logical choice for his successor because of the undoubted capacity of the Iowan, backed by the desire of middle western republicans to inject into the coming campaigns some of the vigor Iowans always have displayed politically.

AN IOWA GIRL WILL WED NEAR CAMP CODY

Camp Cody Deming, N M, Dec 22 -A holiday wedding at Silver City, N M, a short distance from this camp, will be that of Miss Claribel Fuhrman, formerly of Fort Dodge, Ia, and Capt. DES MOINES—W. A. White, supervisors of music in the public schools, has resigned to engage in the automobile business in Cleveland, Ohio. His resignation becomes effective January 28.

LOWER PRICES FOR COAL IN DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 22.—Upon word from Washington demanding immediate action on the price of coal in Des Moines, Fuel Administrator Webster today fixed retail price at $5.15 in Des Moines and reduced coal in wagon mines from $4.40 to $4. Immediately coal dealers wired an appeal to Dr. Garfield and some of them declared they will go out of business as the price is nonremunerative.

This is the price originally fixed by Des Moines city coal committee.

INCENDIARY BLAMED FOR FAIRPORT FIRE

Government Biological Station Destroyed—Firemen Have Close Calls.

Fairport, Ia., Dec. 22.—Fire of rumored incendiary origin early today completely destroyed the main building of the government biological station here.

The fire was discovered on the second floor about 2:30 o'clock this morning, and was not brought under control until 7.30 o'clock Several firemen had narrow escapes from death or serious injury under falling walls.

No estimate has been placed on the loss, thought the destroyed building is known to have cost something more than $27,000. The loss is total.

BURGLAR GETS SUPPLY OF SHOES AND CLOTHES

Mapleton, Ia, Dec. 22.—The Kraft-Bright company's clothing and shoe store was broken into and goods valued at about $200 taken. Entrance was gained through a rear cellar window. A negro who had been doing odd jobs about town and who disappeared on the night of the burglary is blamed for the work.

LYON COUNTY WARRANTS MAY BE TAKEN UP

Rock Rapids, Ia., Dec 22.—At the January meeting of the board of supervisors the board will decide whether or not to bond the county in the sum of $100,000, to take up outstanding bridge warrants at 5 per cent now held in the main by the banks of the county. The bonds can be sold at 5 per cent it is believed and may run a period of years designated by the board. The banks over the county favor this plan, as it will give them at least $100,000 more working capital

TO PROTECT HEALTH OF THE SOLDIERS

Camp Dodge, Ia, Dec 22.—Government inspection of Des Moines hotels, restaurants, ice cream parlors, barber shops and similar establishments patronized by soldiers from Camp Dodge, is to be invoked, according to an order received by Lieut. Col J. R. Shook, division surgeon from the surgeon general of the army at Washington.

The letter says, "It is desired that you make appropriate recommendations to the commanding general with a view to debarring soldiers from entering restaurants, booths for the sale of food hotels, barber shops, manicure parlors, ice cream parlors, soda fountains and places of similar character which have not been inspected and furnished a permit or certificate of inspection

A bulletin to be issued at division headquarters will direct the soldiers not to patronize such establishments unless they can exhibit a permit

The measure is to be taken, it is said to guard against the possibility of the soldiers being exposed to contagious or infectious diseases

IS CRUSHED TO DEATH BETWEEN FREIGHT CARS

Perry, Ia, Dec. 22.—John W Crouch, a switchman employed by the C, M & St. P railroad at this place, was instantly killed when he was caught between the bumpers of two boxcars He was discovered a few minutes later by other members of the crew. DAKOTA STATE NEWS

VIBORG—John P. Nelson and Walter N Nelson, brothers, who live here, have had an interesting experience trying to break into the United States army. Because they were born on the soil of the kaiser they were unsuccessful in their efforts to join the fighting forces of the United States. They first went to Sioux Falls and tried to enlist, but were rejected because they did not have their final citizenship papers. They then went before the clerk of the federal court, but there was nothing he could do. As a last resort they went to Aberdeen and made another attempt before the recruiting officer there, but again were unsuccessful.

DALLAS—The Dallas home guards have placed in custody a man aged about 40. He was found begging and acted strangely. He refuses to talk about himself or occupation, but gave the name of James Riley. He claims he is from St. Joseph, but the authorities there know nothing about him. From his actions and appearance it is thought he might be a firebug or anarchist. He was turned over to the county authorities and held for investigation.

BERESFORD—After a visit with the home folks, the two lieutenants in the army who will represent Beresford in the war with Germany have returned to their posts of duty. Lieutenant Marble Eidsmoe will report at Battle Creek, while Lieutenant Alva Steadman will report at Fort Sheridan, Ill. Beresford people feel confident that when it comes to the pinch neither will falter.

ARMOUR—The local board of education considered a petition asking that the teaching of the German language be eliminated from the course of study in the city schools, and after a thorough discussion of the matter it was decided to discontinue the course.

SUPPLY BUREAU WASN'T NAPPING

Quartermaster General Ordered Supplies for 1,000 Men Before War Was Declared.

SHORTAGE IS EXPLAINED

Troops Called Faster Than Factories Could Turn Out Clothing for Them, Congress Is Told.

Washington, D C Dec 21.—[illegible] but waiting for congressional appropriations the war department [illegible] ized orders for supplies for [illegible] troops before the United States [illegible] to war, it was brought out today [illegible] testimony of Quartermaster General Henry G Sharpe before the Military committee

The committee investigating the supplying of troops went particularly into the causes for the shortage of clothing

Secretary Baker General Sharpe said, authorized orders for clothing and other supplies for 1,000,000 men before the war declaration and had approved orders to equip an additional 500,000.

The only complaints of supply of any age received by the department have been in respect to clothing, General Sharpe said

In an introductory statement dealing with the Mexican border situation, General Sharpe said the only equipment ordered with Secretary Baker's approval was the regulation days' supply, including clothing, shoes, tentage and animals. To supply, he explained was expected in two or three months.

Ordered Clothing Ahead.

"In February" he said, "anticipating probable trouble, we ordered equipment, on war strength of the regular army of 160,000 men, and in March, when war seemed imminent, the secretary authorized orders for equipment for 500,000 men.

"Before war broke out I got orders for another 500,000 and in June an additional 500,000

These orders he explained were made without funds, and in anticipation of congressional appropriations.

Senator McKellar inquired whether the council of national defense [illegible] in effect took over virtually all [illegible] in connection with placing orders for clothing

General Sharpe replied that all contracts and prices were subject to the department's final approval and that the civilian board only had assisted in preliminary negotiations.

Much clothing was furnished [illegible] of time, General Sharpe said. [illegible] planned to supply 500,000 men [illegible] and enough supplies for 86,000 additional actually were delivered, he asserted.

After plans were made to equip 100,000 men a month, General Sharpe said the plans were changed [illegible] additional burden was imposed by the decision to send men abroad, who needed more clothing

Called Army Too Fast.

"I impressed on the chief of staff," he said, "that it would take until September 31 to gather enough equipment for 1,000,000 men

Senator Frelinghuysen took up the question of quality of the American army clothing

"Isn't it a fact that the standard of our uniforms is inferior to those of the European" he asked.

"Isn't it 14 per cent less in woolen content than the British""

General Sharpe replied that the British use heavier cloth.

"Isn't the American clothing more able to trench work"" asked Senator Frelinghuysen

"No," said General Sharpe. Senator [illegible] asked General Pershing if any changes are needed and he wants to have 1,000,000 uniforms of our quality on hand. He has suggested only that specifications be substituted—for trench use only; he wants a change in the [illegible] and has lengthened the [illegible] says the underwear and socks are all right. The overcoat has been changed slightly, to allow freer action of the arms, orders have been substituted for puttees.

"Have you ever been interfered with by the council of defense or other interested persons in making contracts?" asked Senator Frelinghuysen.

General Sharpe said no. He explained that the department's function in making and approving contracts was merely formal The council, he said, selects manufacturers and makes [illegible] ces, but a department head and not the council in negotiating contracts.

"Wasn't it necessary to call in civilian advisers to get production?" asked Chairman Chamberlain.

"In my opinion it was," answered Sharpe, adding that an organization similar to the council is necessary, but that it should be modified to meet the British system

"But our boys in camp are suffering because this system, taking effect, has failed," said Senator Kellar.

"We have not had enough troops because of the way troops were called," General Sharpe replied, stating that between 45 and 50 per cent of the American looms are engaged in war work. He said the department thought it could equip only 1,078,000 by December 1.

"And we had 1,350,000 men by that time," said Senator Kellar. "What is to become of the extra [illegible]

General Sharpe said that by stepping up production it was hoped that virtually all would be clothed [illegible] by December 31.

Late deliveries were blamed by General Sharpe for overcoat and [illegible] shortages. He insisted that there was no shoe shortage.

Senator Hitchcock, reading from the quartermaster general's annual report, said it appeared that 2,000,000 overcoats were on hand and only [illegible] were in service.

General Sharpe said that he had not showed orders, but that many had been delivered by factories.

General Sharpe said that [illegible] an overcoat had been furnished every man in camp, but that [illegible] sizes were too small.

The same trouble was found in supplying shoes.

Senator Wadsworth cited [illegible] regarding shortage of proper [illegible] es. At Camp Custer, on December [illegible] he said, only one-half of a division could march to target practice and [illegible] returned their shoes were taken [illegible] put on the other half, which [illegible] marched to the range.

Senator Weeks said that a manufacturer told him that 60 per cent of the men in one camp were [illegible] shoes one-half to three sizes [illegible]

PROVED THAT ARMOUR OWNS PART OF STOCK

Swift Company Refuses to Submit Books to Federal Commission.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 21.—Testimony to show that J. Ogden Armour is part owner of the Chicago Stock Yards company, was given today at the federal trade commission's inquiry into the packing industry and it was said the next thing to be developed was the extent of the interest of other packers in the same concern

Operation of the company has been made as complex as its formation by means of dummy directors A new treasurer was put in every two years or so, resulting in only incomplete knowledge of the company's activities on the part of any officer F S Prince of Boston, was said to receive the dividends and make distribution among the shareholders, believed to include all the large packers, whose identities have not been established

Swift & Co., of Chicago, have refused to deliver to the federal trade commission records desired by the commission in its investigation of the packing industry, and drastic action will be taken in court to force their production, Francis J. Heney announced today at the resumption of the commission's inquiry

It was said that when the commission's investigation went to Chicago they received only evasive replies from the officers of Swift & Co. and that direct demand for the records had been refused To obtain the papers which relate to the ownership of the Chicago stock yards and other details of the meat industry, the commission will go into a federal court and ask an order compelling the company to produce them.

AMERICAN GUNNERS LEARN FRENCH GUNS

Artillerymen Training With Big Field Pieces Now—Observers Plentiful.

With the American Army in France, Thursday, Dec 20 There is no scarcity of volunteers for the dangerous work of airplane observers among the younger officers of the army When a call was issued at the heavy artillery training grounds three times the number asked for responded Some of these were sent to train with American pilots and others with French

The American artillery today watched the French handling the gigantic 400 millimeter gun which hurls a projectile weighing more than a ton at such a great range that it was necessary to haul the weapon several miles outside the training grounds, which are probably the largest in the world so that the shell would fall on open ground at the targets. The firing continued all day, the terrific explosions shaking the houses in the territory and being heard at a distance of many miles.

After a certain period the American gunners will begin firing with the 400 millimeter pieces so that by the time they get into action they will be as familiar with the gun as their comrades now are with the 75s

During the firing a big shell burst prematurely near an observation post filled with young American officers Splinters and fragments rained down but no one was injured

Among the heavy guns with which the Americans have begun working are big howitzers of a certain caliber which are declared to be among the most powerful weapons the war has produced

M'ADOO DENIES RUMOR OF THIRD LIBERTY LOAN

Washington D C Dec 21 Published reports that the third Liberty loan would be for $8,000,000,000 at 1½ per cent interest, ½ per cent above the rates on the second loan, were denied today by Secretary McAdoo In a formal statement he said

"The report that the next issue of Liberty bonds will be $8,000,000,000 and at 4½ per cent and on March 15 1918, is wholly unfounded I wish I could make the patriotic newspaper men of America realize how mischievious and hurtful to the interests of the country such speculative statements are When a decision has been reached about the next Liberty loan, it will be announced officially Meanwhile all other statements and rumors may be diser trafey ments and rumors may be disregarded"

The difficulty of planning the third loan at this time, treasury officials pointed out today is increased by the impossibility of forecasting actual disbursements and receipts from sale of war savings stamps during the remaining six months of the fiscal year The interest rate must be dependent somewhat on the market price of bonds of past issue at the time of the third loan

TEUTONIC PLAN LAID LONG AGO

Kaiser in 1908 Gave William Bayard Hale Interview, Later Suppressed, Revealing Aims.

WAR LORDS STOPPED IT

Not Ready at That Time—Writer Said to Have Been Paid $50,000 for Remaining Silent.

New York, N Y, Dec. 22 The first person to whom Dr William Bayard Hale the American journalist gave an inkling of the sensational interview he obtained from the German emperor in the summer of 1908 was Frederick W Wile, then Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail and for many years representative of American newspapers abroad

In the statement below Mr Wile confirms the extraordinary story of the kaiser's suppressed interview in which he predicted the world war, and supplies additional details.

On July 28, 1908 Dr Hale burst into Mr Wile's office in Berlin worn travel and ejaculated excitedly

"Wile I have heard things from the kaiser which if I dared publish them would cause war between England and Germany inside of hours

BY FREDERICK W. WILE.

London Dec 22 Early in June, 1908, I received a call in the Berlin office of the Daily Mail from Dr William Bayard Hale who at that time was literary editor of the New York Times He had come to Germany as a special correspondent I had represented the Daily Mail in Berlin for two years and had been correspondent of several American newspapers for four or five years before

Hale on arriving in Berlin found that the emperor had just left on his annual yachting cruise to the Norwegian fiords He found however, that he could profitably employ his time in Berlin by invoking the good offices of two Prussian dignitaries whom he had met at the dedication of the Carnegie institute in Pittsburg General Von Lowenfield, commander of a Prussian guard corps, and Privy Councillor Von Ihne, court architect

Met Kaiser on Yacht.

Both these men were cronies of the kaiser Lowenfeld was not a factor in the war party being what was known in Berlin as a silo general

After a few days delay it was arranged through Lowenfeld and Ihne that Hale should proceed to Norway for an interview with the emperor The interview was granted on the evening of July 19

Six days later Hale returned from Norway and gave me the first inkling of the sensational utterances of the war lord To the best of my recollection he summarized his story thus

"The talk at dinner in the imperial yacht was more or less perfunctory The kaiser explained to me that we should have a real chat on deck after dinner So it was I walked up and down with him for the better part of two hours that is we were walking at the time except in those moments when the emperor would stop all of a sudden to hammer on some point by stamping at the rail and pounding it with his fist

"At times I could hardly believe my own ears The man now and then would rave When he talked about England he was simply ferocious He snapped out castigation after castigation on his perfidious cousins, gesticulating wildly and deriving fresh energy from his incessant outbursts and from the cigarets he smoked continuously lighting one from another

"I have not the slightest doubt that if I dared publish what the kaiser told me there would be war between Germany and England tomorrow morning

"The newly formed Anglo Japanese alliance seemed to be particularly on the kaiser's nerves He said England had sold the white race by joining hands with the yellow masters of the east He harped fiercely on the yellow peril and assured me that it was up to America and Germany between them to shield the white civilization

"The kaiser declared that Germany would not be found unready for a clash with Britain and that the latter would get many surprises. For one thing, he said Germany had very comprehensively organized sedition in India and there would be an uprising there which would wrest that priceless jewel from Brittannia's diadem"

Story Was Suppressed.

"If my recollection serves me correctly it was Hale's intentions to cable the interview to New York at once over the German-American cable (Emden-Azores) But for many reasons, with which I was never fully acquainted, Hale received instructions from William C Reick then foreign news manager and part proprietor of the New York Times, not to send the interview Hale received $50,000 for suppressing the article

Hale's interview was quashed behind the kaiser's back in much the same circumstances as his celebrated telegram to President Wilson on August 10, 1914, communicated through Ambassador Gerard was suppressed In both instances high diplomatic and military influences were set to work to keep from the public imperial indiscretions liable to interfere with or checkmate Germany's important diplomatic and military schemings.

The German war party was not yet ready in midsummer, 1908, when William II unburdened himself to the American journalist, to give effect to the emperor's expressed threats against the British empire.

It suited the war party's book far better that the kaiser should proceed to Highcliffe castle England, as he did a few weeks later, and there, in the famous interview subsequently published in the Daily Telegraph, dilate in persuasive accents on his favorite theme—his unquenchable fondness for Britain and the British.

William C. Reick, who received the Order of the Prussian crown soon afterward, has not been associated with the Times since December, 1911.

The state convicted him of Giving Mabel Scofield, of Macksburg, Ia., who had come to Des Moines to learn dressmaking, a dozen of knockout drops. Her body was then thrown into the river and found several hours later

May Call Legislature For Special Session In January

Des Moines, Ia., Dec 22. The members of the Thirty-seventh general assembly may be called into special session some time early in January, according to Governor W. L. Harding

The special session will be asked to make special appropriations for state institutions and to consider conditions growing out of the war, since the close of the last session in April

Governor Harding this afternoon was writing to every member of the assembly, asking if they are willing to meet in extra session to consider two subjects alone.

"No general legislation is to be taken up No general legislation is needed, is not demanded by the people, said the governor Unless the assembly men agree to confine their activity to the two subjects the call will not be made"

The governor considers the work contemplated could be done in 10 days or two weeks The session is to be handled on an economical basis Doorkeepers and stenographers will be suspended and the legislators limited to desk help The only committee needed would be the judicial, military and appropriations The old organization would hold for the session, it is planned.

It is said the special session will also be asked to give the state council of defense some legal standing and to make an appropriation to carry on its work.

Because of the high cost of food and fuel many of the state institutions have exhausted their appropriations and will be compelled to borrow if some provision is not made for their maintenance

One of the many questions which the governor hopes to have solved if the welfare of Iowa factories, factories manufacturing nonessentials. The government may require them to give up their present line of manufactured articles and begin the manufacture of war supplies It is to make sure that all of these factories, the small one particularly, get their share of the work so that thousands of people now employed in them will not be thrown out of employment

Two members of the general assembly have resigned since the end of the last session Senator Helmer, of Carroll county, went into the military service, and Representative Jackson, of Cedar county, has removed to another county. Governor Harding plans special elections to fill these vacancies.

Italians Attacking Desperately To Hold Seriously Weakened Line

Austro-German, by Capture of Monte Azelone, Are Within Cannon Range of Venetian Plains, Driving Forward Furiously Before Snow Falls.

Rome, Dec. 22 --A considerable portion of the ground gained by the enemy on Tuesday in the region of Monte Azolone on the northern fron east of the Brente river has been tagen by the Italians, the war office announces

The positions regained by the Italians were held despite the most violent fire from enemy artillery

By Associated Press.

Apparently undaunted by the heavy forces the enemy has been using in attempting to break the Brenta-Piave line, the Italians are making counter attacks in an attempt to regain Monte Azolone On other sectors on this front the Italians have repulsed with loss trong Austro-German counter attacks.

Italian Headquarters in Northern Italy, Dec 22 —The situation in the northern fighting zone has assumed a more serious aspect with the enemy's occupation of Monte Azolone whence there is a stretch of hills between him and the level plain Monte Azolone is the last of the heights in that section with an altitude of more than 4,000 feet and snow less except during a severe winter This remaining stretch of hills is about seven miles across, with Bassano four miles further on

The enemy's heavy guns already have the range beyond Bassano, which lies on the Venetian plain near the entrance to the Brenta valley and while the city itself has not been shelled, occasional shells have fallen in the outskirts and some have passed over the city to the suburbs beyond.

The reports show that the enemy is employing 17 divisions in his operations on the Brenta and Piave rivers. Of these six are certainly and nine probably German Deserters who come say the enemy troops declare they will be in the plain by the holidays as they are strong in their desire to get down from the mountain heights before the hardships of winter set in.

Five different attempts to cross the old Piave near its mouth indicate that they enemy is adopting the plan of striking the two extremities of the line with the purpose of bending one or the other back on the center

The drive to Mount Azolone takes the enemy line some distance south of the Italian and allied positions on the upper Piave The exact positions of British and French forces cannot be stated, but generally speaking, they are not at the extremities and it appears to be part of the enemy's cunning to strike the extremities where the Italians are holding single handed.

DIRECTOR PLAN IN HIGH FAVOR

White House Considers Naming Munitions Director—Congress Is Favorable to Project.

Washington D C., Dec. 22 -Talk of a director or secretary of munitions in order to straighten out the ordnance situation and insure ample munitions was more rife than ever today. The White House is said to be considering it

If the president recommends legislation for such an official, the temper of congress on the munition question is such it will quickly pass it

RUMANIANS TO JOIN REVOLTING RUSSIANS

Propose to Fight With Ukrainian Troops on Southwestern Front.

London, Dec 22.- The Rumanians on the southwestern Russian front have joined the Ukrainians and Lieut Gen D G Stcherbatcheff, commander of the Russian forces in Rumania, has been appointed commanderinchief on the whole Ukrainian front, according to a report received in Petrograd and transmitted by the Exchange Telegraph company The bolshevist and Ukrainian troops are reported to be advancing on each other, being three versts apart

WILSON ASKS DELAY ON RAILWAY INQUIRY

President to Send Message to Congress Soon After the Holidays.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 22 —President Wilson will send a message to congress recommending enactment of legislation to meet the transportation situation immediately after the holiday recess. Until it has been received, the president today requested that the Interstate Commerce commission withhold making any investigation as provided under the Cummins' resolution.

TOMMIES AND SAMMIES WILL CELEBRATE XMAS

With the British Armies In France, Dec. 21.—For the first time in history British Tommies and American Sammies are preparing to celebrate Christmas together. Arrangements are being made in the various camps today for "shindigs" and big "blowouts" wherever it is possible to get the men together. In some places they are so scattered that it is not possible to attempt anything out of the ordinary, but these boys will come in for their share of entertainment later.

PEACE EFFORTS DEEMED FUTILE

Washington Government Does Not Believed That Germany Will Submit Acceptable Terms.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 22.—Little to warrant the belief that the talked of German peace terms will get anywhere is seen here

They would leave the German scheme for a great sphere of influence in central Europe and Asia unchecked. They would give Germany a hold on Russian grain fields. They would exalt, not weaken, Prussianism

Besides, no faith is attached any longer to anything that emanates from Berlin It is deemed possible that Germany's evident purpose to strip Russia of territory and stab her under the fifth rib while talking peace will open the eyes of the bolshevist dupes of Berlin.

CZECHS WORK FOR PEACE.

Amsterdam, Dec. 22.—A dispatch received here from Vienna says the unterhaus has adopted by a small majority a resolution introduced by the Czechs and south Slavs in favor of a general peace on the basis of no annexations or indemnities and for using Russia's good offices to convey such a proposal to the entente governments.

CONSCRIPTION FAILS IN AUSTRALIA AGAIN

Believed Government Proposal Has Lost by About 150,000 Majority.

Sydney, Australia, Dec. 21.—Unless the soldier vote on the various fronts which has not yet been counted, offset the vote in Australia, the government's conscription scheme has been defeated in a referendum by a majority of about 150,000 This is believed to be hardly likely on account of the heavy vote against conscription in New South Wales which gave a majority of 115,000 against the proposal. Those favorable to conscription were surprised by the result in Victoria, which reversed last year's favorable vote giving a majority of 1,500 against conscription this year.

JAPANESE MILLIONAIRES STRIKE HARD SLEDDING

Tokio, (By mail). Nov. 10.—The day of the narikin, the mushroom millionaire born with the war boom, is past in Japan. With him have gone the 1,000 yen geisha sprees, the flowing sake bowl and the rest of the gay life which an embattled Europe brought to Nippon for the first time.

The government's ordinance for the control of shipping, America's embargo on the export of steel and gold and the impossibility of importing Indian cotton are among the principal causes for the depression which has set in here during the last few months.

UNITE AGAINST RUSS RADICALS

Bolshevist Faction Appears to Be Losing Grasp Upon Situation Throughout the Empire.

PEACE PLANS ENDANGERED

Huns Reported to Have Rejected Terms Offered—Spirit of Rebellion Spreads to Rumania

By United Press.

London Dec 22 A dispatch from Petrograd asserts it is unofficially reported the Germans have refused the Russian peace terms and that the bolshevist delegates have been recalled to Petrograd The dispatch states this does not mean the resumption of hostilities on the Russian front at once as complete stoppage of all fighting for a month has already been agreed to

As the Germans have refused to agree to the bolshevist terms, it is believed they did so with full knowledge of a stroke to secure greater concessions The bolshevists demanded that the Germans relinquish possession of the Riga territory and all other Russian territory they are now occupying

By Associated Press.

Opposition to the bolshevist apparently is increasing as reports of German support of the maximalist government become more pronounced and the situation in Russia grows more chaotic, while the bolshevists endeavor to arrange a separate peace with the central powers The Ukraine in its hostility to the bolshevists government, has been joined by the Russian staff on the southwestern front and General Stcherbatcheff, the commander in Rumania, has been appointed head of the Ukrainian forces reported to be marching against the bolsheviki

Another report reaching London says that the Rumanians have joined the Trainians, while other dispatches declare that Former Premier Kerensky is marching against Moscow and that Grand Duke Nicholas is raising a royalist army in the Caucasus.

TEUTON PRISONERS ARM.

London, Dec 22 —A bolshevist force commanded by released German and Austrian officer prisoners, has defeated the anti bolshevists at Tashkent, capital of Russian Turkestan, according to a Petrograd dispatch to the Morning Post. The dispatch also says that it is believed that a force of released enemy prisoners equivalent to two army corps, commanded by their own officers is now within striking distance of Petrograd Defy Bolshevist Forces.

Petrograd, Dec. 22.—The province of Ukrainia today formally rejected the ultimatum from the bolshevists and in return demanded full independence for Ukrainia.

Bolshevist representatives it was stated declared an agreement was possible, provided Ukrainia declare her intention not to give aid to Kaledine and his Cossack revolt.

Ukrainian leaders not only demand full recognition of Ukrainia by the bolshevists with full rights and non-interference from Petrograd, but also Ukrainian rights to management of all Ukrainian questions and matters pertaining to the southwestern and Roumanian fronts, participation in all peace negotations and certain food arrangements

PEASANTS OPPOSE POLICY

New York, Dec. 22.—A cablegram saying that the peasant congress in Russia has adopted a resolution protesting against the policy of the bolshevists in arresting members of the constituent assembly was received here today by the Jewish Daily Forward from its Petrograd correspondent

FIGHTING IN PETROGRAD.

Petrograd, Thursday, Dec. 20. -Incessant fighting has occurred in many parts of Petrograd in connection with the efforts to check drunkenness and prevent the raiding of wine cellars. A mob raided one distillery where 15 soldiers drank themselves to death. Fifteen persons were killed and wounded when an armored motor car attacked the distillery, which was set on fire.

The fire department was prevented from extinguishing the blaze by rowdies and many persons were burned before the situation was brought under control.

The streets are running with wine in many sections, where the soldiers are pumping wine out of the cellars to prevent disorder.

GRAND DUKE RAISES ARMY.

London, Wednesday, Dec 19 -- A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Haparanda reports that Kerensky with an army is now marching against Moscow, while Grand Duke Nicholas has gathered a great army of royalists in the Caucasus.

PEACE DELEGATES LEAVE.

London, Dec. 22.—Dr. Richard Von Kuehlmann, the German foreign secretary with other important officials left Berlin yesterday for Brest Litovsk amid scenes of enthusiasm, the crowd singing the national anthem and raising shouts of "bring us a strong peace."

It is said the peace negotiations will be under the presidency of Ibrahim Hakki Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador to Berlin and dean of the Berlin diplomatic corps. The Bulgarian delegates include Minister of Justice Popoff and M. Kosseff, chief of the foreign office

LAST ALAMO SURVIVOR DIES AT SAN ANTONIO

San Antonio, Tex., Dec 21.—Enrique Esparsa, the last survivor of the Alamo, is dead. When on March 6, 1836, Santa Anna stormed in the final and successful assault the chapel where a handful of Americans fought to their death, surrounded by piles of Mexican dead, the victors found a group of Mexican women in a barricaded section of the front of the building Among them was an 8-year-old lad Enrique Esparsa, who died at his home here last night aged 89.

MUST HAVE PERMITS.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 21.—Railroads desiring to withdraw from joint rate agreements must obtain specific approval of the Interstate Commerce commission if the withdrawal would mean an increase in rates, the commission ordered today

Derivation of "Spruce."

It is interesting to observe the derivation of the word "spruce." From a number of early quotations it is clear that "spruce," a variant of "pruce," simply stood for Prussian, the form "spruce" rather than "pruce" being established partly by the German "sprossen," meaning sprouts, or young shoots, and sprossen-bier, or spruce beer, is made of the sprouts of this fir.

Crossing a Ford

By ELIAS KILLIAN

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

When the National Guard was ordered down to the Mexican border I was keeping store about a hundred miles south of the border line. I had gone down from the States with a little money I had inherited from my father, thinking there was a better chance to use it in Mexico than in a more settled country. I was only twenty-one years old and without experience.

I located in a town in Chihuahua a few miles south of the Conchas river, a tributary to the Rio Grande, and since there was no other store carrying such a stock as I had in the place, I did very well, but I encountered the animosity of other dealers.

There was an American family named Talbot living near the Conchas north of me, and since I was not made welcome in the homes of the Mexican families, I used to ride out there for companionship. Perhaps it was the second daughter Emily who attracted me.

Several of the storekeepers whose business I had taken away from them put their heads together, and resolved to "do" me. They watched for an opportunity to make away with me when I was at some distance from the town. Such an opportunity occurred on a trip I made to collect an account from a man near the American border. I was obliged to cross the Conchas, which is fordable near the Talbots, and I found it convenient to stop there for a visit. Jose Zangas, one of my competitors, learned of my proposed trip, and followed me. It was about 20 miles from the river to where my debtor lived and Zangas kept a short distance behind me all the way. He saw me, unseen himself, go into my debtor's home and saw him pay me 300 pesos. Zangas had picked up a couple of men who made their living by robbery.

On my way back I stopped at noon for a rest and to eat a snack I had with me. After refreshing myself I filled my pipe, and, resting my head on the root of a tree, smoked while my horse grazed near me. It was not long before I fell asleep. I was awakened by a kick, and there, looking down on me, a cocked revolver in his hand, was Jose Zangas, while the other two men, mounted, were near at hand.

My revolver was under me at my hip, and I was at his mercy. He ordered me to turn over. I did so, and he relieved me of my weapon. Then he ordered me to give up the money I carried which I did. He divided it among his assistants, taking nothing for himself.

The place where I was captured was a few miles from the ford, and thither they directed our course. When we reached it one of the robbers started to cross, then the other, then I, and behind me Zangas, who was to cover me with his revolver to the other side. The ford was over a ledge of rock, which was not visible. The current was quite swift. Moving in running water one is liable to go down stream instead of straight across. We had got half way over when there was a sharp report and the leading robber fell from his horse and disappeared under the water. This disconcerted the second robber, and, being misdirected by the running water, he left the ledge and all that remained to be seen of horse and rider was the animal's feet above the surface.

Zangas might have shot me had he kept his wits; but he was so disconcerted by what had happened that he delayed. I turned to look at him, and the hand that held his weapon was trembling; but seeing me turn, he raised his revolver. Before he could fire he fell forward from his horse, and his body was carried away by the current.

It now occurred to me to look about for the person who had saved me. No one was to be seen. I crossed the ford, taking care not to be misled by the current. On reaching the opposite side behind some bushes I saw Emily Talbot lying in a faint.

I took her up in my arms and covered her face with kisses. This warmed her to consciousness, and seeing me looking down upon her, she smiled.

There was never a definite proposal and acceptance between me and Emily. Our courting, proposal, and acceptance were all included in the kisses that brought her back to life.

Weighing En Route.

A unique weighing scales at Proctor, Minn., enables cars of ore to be weighed without stopping a train, says the Outlook. As the train approaches the scale platform track it slows down to eight miles an hour and the weight of each car is automatically recorded as it passes. Thus an otherwise unavoidable congestion of cars is prevented in what is described as the biggest ore yard in the world.

A True Forecaster

By ETHEL HOLMES

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

I am a woman of thirty-five. Fifteen years ago when I had just finished my education my father said to me one day:

"Louise, I am going to bring home a guest to dinner today."

I was the housekeeper and this meant that the meal should be served for an extra person.

"Who is it?" I asked.

"Langford is his name; he is twenty-five years old, and—well, you can judge for yourself. He is either a fool or a genius, I am not certain which; you may give me your opinion after you have seen him."

When Mr. Langford came I saw nothing unusual in his appearance. Indeed he was rather plain. He was certainly not up to the ways of society for instead of appearing in evening dress he wore a business suit. He took very little notice of me, addressing his remarks to father. They were chatting when dinner was announced and when the guest was introduced to me he gave me a nod without pausing in what he was saying, evidently more interested in it than in me. The subject on his mind was engines, about which I was absolutely ignorant.

During the dinner he hopped about from one subject to another like a bird in a tree. At one moment it was "heavier than air," the next something that would go a hundred miles an hour, and the next—heaven knows what. I think it was about gas bags. I don't believe father understood half of what he said and I didn't take in a word of it. I was certainly very much bored and glad when the dinner was over. As father rose he said to me:

"Louise, I shall have to ask you to entertain Mr. Langford for awhile; I have some letters to write that can't be put off."

Great heavens! I entertain Mr. Langford, with his "gas bags" and "heavier then air" talk. I gave father an annihilating look, but it produced no effect. He went upstairs to his den and I led Mr. Langford into the drawing room. He came down from his gas bags and became for a few minutes a very different person.

"I must apologize," he said, "for talking about matters that you cannot be expected to understand."

"What in the world were you talking about anyway?" I asked.

"Navigating the air; I expect to see the day when a man will fly like a bird."

I made up my mind at once that if he was either a fool or a genius, he was a fool.

"I am looking forward," he continued, "to the day when a man will fly from New York to Chicago in much less time then would be required by a railroad train. He will soar over mountains. In war there will be no need for scouts to report on the position and strength of an enemy. Men will go up in flying machines and take photographs of a whole battlefield. Of course, there will be men on both sides, and they will fight to drive each other away."

There was a far-away look in his eye when he said this and I began to suspect that he was insane.

"I can see," he went on, "thousands of these flying machines pitted against thousands on the other side firing at one another, now and again one dropping to the earth, some of them making gradual descents either on a slant or in circles. These battles above the clouds—"

"Will you excuse me a moment, Mr. Langford" I interrupted, "I wish to speak with my father."

I fled from him upstairs to father.

"Papa," I said, out of breath, "I dare not stay one moment longer alone with that man. He is a lunatic."

"Why do you think that?" asked father.

I told papa what the man had said about men fighting up in the air.

"He is an enthusiast, my dear; I don't think his mind is affected."

"I am not going back without you, papa; when he was talking about those battles in the clouds he frightened me."

"Dell, go down again; when I finish this letter I'll join you."

I returned to the drawing room. I fancied Mr. Langford had surmised that he had gone too far with his nonsense about going up in the air. At any rate he talked to me delightfully on other subjects. I forgot his weak spot and enjoyed the rest of the time I spent with him immensely. That night I went to bed with my brain in a whirl and dreamed that I was flitting about up in the sky.

All this happened, as I have said, years ago. I was recently invited to an aeronautic exhibition and was introduced to a man who had been prominent in airplane inventions and had fought in the air on the Belgian battle front. I did not hear his name when he was presented to me, but there was something about him that was familiar to me. He was very enthusiastic about airplanes and had brought down many Germans.

"Before the navigation of the air had become an accomplished fact," he said looking at me quizzically, "I met a young lady to whom I imparted my expectations, and I am quite sure I convinced her that I was a lunatic."

"You are—"

"George Langford."

He doesn't bring down any more Germans. I don't let him. We are engaged.

Million Letters In the Mails Today Bearing Magic Words "With the Colors"

Keynote of the Splendid Work the Y. M. C. A. Does Among Our Men In Uniform Is Keeping Them In Touch With the Folks at Home.

STAMPED WITH STARS AND STRIPES AND RED TRIANGLE

Multifarious Ways in Which the Association Appeals to Your Boy, Your Neighbor's Boy, or Some Boy You Know and Love—Creates a Helpful Environment in Cantonment, on Way Overseas, in Front Line Trench and Beyond—First to Aid as He Comes Tottering Back—Give Your Share of the $35,000,000 Required to Accomplish This "Last Evidence That Somebody Cares."

IT was evening on the broad Hempstead Plain, Long Island, where the Rainbow division was spending its last night before embarking for France It had been raining hard in the afternoon—a cold, steady autumn downpour- and there was nothing to suggest the rainbow in the outward aspect of the camp Lines and lines of sodden canvas housed 27,000 men, gathered from 27 different states. The ground was dotted with pools and quagmires Under the wet canvas it was damp and cold with a penetrating chill Lit by flickering candles, the tents were far from cheerful shelter for a man's last night in his native land.

But there wore seven big tents where electric lights, numbers and friendliness made the night pleasant.

...ic, Games, Good Reading and Correspondence Facilities in Y. M. C. A Building.

In each of these a soldier was strumming on a piano, others were reading books and magazines, hundreds were writing letters home Behind the raised counter at one end three or four young men were busy passing out notepaper and envelopes, selling stamps and weighing parcels, which the men were sending home One of the soldiers said to me as I stood in the tent used chiefly by men from Iowa "We came all the way here from Des Moines, and we were mighty lonely Then we found this Y M C A on the job, and it's been a home and more than a home to us It gave us what we wanted when we needed it most We'll never forget it The boys' best friend is the Y M C A"

Fine, Clean-Cut, Upstanding Fellows.

How close those benches were packed with men, bending over the long tables absorbed in their writing! What an appeal to the sympathies those great groups of soldiers make! Fine, clean-cut, upstanding fellows, some of them mere boys, one thinks immediately of the sacrifice they have made for the rest of us and how precious they are to some one back home somewhere, in far off farm or village or city street, there are parents or brothers or wives who would give all they possess for one glimpse of those sunburned faces as you and I see them on their last night before going across. And it was with a throb of the heart that I watched them, bent over their letter paper, in one after another of those seven big tents.

These were the tents of the Y. M C. A. On that last night in America the association was serving the soldiers in the best of all ways—giving them an opportunity to write home On previous nights they had enjoyed boxing bouts, movies, concerts, dramatics and a score of healthy entertainments as well as religious meetings. But on this last night home ties were strongest. And perhaps that is the keynote of the splendid work the Y M C A. is doing among our men in uniform—keeping them in touch with home

Magic Words, "With the Colors."

In these times there are some letters that mean more to us than any we have ever read before. They are written on sheets of paper stamped with the Stars and Stripes and the red triangle of the Y. M. C. A., and they bear the magic words, "With the Colors." There are many more than a million such letters in the mails now while you read this. Perhaps one at least is on its way to you. Each one of our 16 cantonments, where the new national army is being trained, is using more than a million sheets of this paper every month In the draft army alone that means 16,000,000 filaments of love every month reaching out from the great encampment where the men are being trained into the greatest army this nation has ever dreamed and binding them to the hearts at home Multiply that by thinking of all the other places where Uncle Sam has men with the flag—in navy yards, on the high seas, in arsenals and officers' training camps and "Over There" in France. In all these places men are writing home Those unassuming little sheets of notepaper gladden millions of hearts a day. They transfer more love from one part of the world to another than statistics can express. Statistics are pretty poor anyway when it comes to reckoning in terms of love and human tenderness Let's put it this way: That the Y M. C. A. is the biggest express company the world has ever seen, and the parcels it is handling are the loves and devotions of human beings.

World's Best Loved Trademark.

This war has made us think hard and fast. Your boy or your neighbor's boy or some boy you know and love has been called to do his share in the big job of policing the world for democracy and human liberty. Is it any comfort to you to know that wherever his duty may call him your boy will have a friend that will serve him in body, mind and soul? Are you glad to know that this friend will place books and magazines at his disposal, organize classes to teach him whatever he wants to learn, give him a pocket testament and invite him to join religious meetings of the faith he was brought up in? Did you realize that the association provides athletic equipment for his favorite games, teaches him games if he knows none and holds concerts, lectures, movies, Bible classes, dramatic entertainments and every kind of wholesome amusement to keep him interested? Are you glad to know that this friend will go with him overseas, help to shield him from a score of difficult and dangerous temptations and follow him right up to the front line trench and beyond it? The last contact the soldier has with this life he loves so well is a cup of tea given him by the Y M C. A. free just before he goes "over the top" to a hand to hand struggle with the enemy. And as he comes tottering back from No Man's Land, wounded, but strong enough and plucky enough to keep on his feet, even before his wounds are dressed the Y. M. C. A. is waiting for him with tea and sweet chocolate, the great comforts of the man in the trenches. Do you wonder that the Red Triangle is called "the best loved trademark in the world?" One soldier in France has called it "the last evidence that anybody cares."

If every thinking citizen could see with his or her own eyes something of the actual work being done for our men by the association there would be no question of the Y. M. C. A. having to appeal to the public for money. Rather than let this essential work falter for an instant rich men would sell their motorcars, poor men would forego coveted possessions, everyone would make sacrifices That work must go on, because there is no one thing that contributes so much to the spirit and efficiency of the troops The Y. M C A. is working night and day to help the government win this war. And every penny that is given to aid the work is a direct assistance to the health, happiness and strength of your boy and mine.

Snapshots of Kaleidoscopic Work.

In all the big cities in France where our men pass through in large numbers, the Y M. C. A. is operating hostels, where they can get beds and meals at a minimum cost. In London the American Y M C A has erected a large building for our soldiers and a clubhouse for American officers

There are Y M. C. A. dugouts right behind the front line trenches, where the soldiers can get hot drinks, crackers and other comforts at all hours

Over 2,000 men who had been rejected on account of physical disability have been able to get into the British army by reason of the physical work of the British Y M C A

A fleet of motor cars leaves the big Y M C A. headquarters in London at midnight every night to pick up soldiers who are wandering about the streets without any wholesome lodging in which to spend the night These cars are operated by Englishwomen of position and refinement, who report that they never meet any discourtesy at the hands of the soldiers The importance of this service can be estimated by the fact that at least 5,000 soldiers are on leave in London every week. Over half of these sleep in Y. M. C. A. beds every night

Entertainment on Vast Scale.

The Y M. C. A. has erected a big auditorium, seating 3,000, in each of the big draft camps, and huge chautauqua tents, seating 2,500 in the other encampments The association is running a 22 week entertainment circuit among the camps and is paying 16 companies of entertainers, who are traveling to 30 camps performing before the men

In each of the draft camps the Y. M. C. A. has ten secretaries engaged in educational work. The association is seeing to it that every man who cannot speak English is taught to do so. In many of the camps the association has a singing director, who is teaching the men to sing the popular and martial airs that do so much to keep up their spirits

Of 64 Y M. C. A. men at Camp Dix only three are being paid full salaries. In all the camps the majority of the Y. M. C. A. men have left lucrative positions to do this work simply because its appeal is irresistible to any red blooded man. Harry Lauder, the famous Scotch singer and comedian, now on his farewell concert tour in the United States, is giving all his spare time to the service of the association and is singing to the soldiers at all the camps he can reach.

In one of the draft camps the Y M C. A. is supervising athletics on 120 playing fields, providing full athletic equipment. The winners of the interregimental games will play the champions of the other camps

One of the greatest services rendered by the association is the making out of money orders by which the men can send their pay home to their families. In some of the big camps the Y. M. C. A. is providing banking facilities for the men as well.

Do Your Bit With a Tenner.

This month (November) the Y M C. A. must raise $35,000,000 to carry on its work among our soldiers and their allies until next July Of this $35,000,000 about $24,000,000 will be spent on the work with our own troops or about $10 for every man in Uncle Sam's uniform. If everybody who has received letters from soldiers and sailors were to contribute $10 the task would be easy. Are your boy's health and happiness and clean soul worth $10 to you?

Your town mayor, your pastor, your school superintendent will know who is the treasurer of the campaign committee in your county or town. Otherwise send a check or money order to Cleveland H. Dodge, treasurer, 124 East Twenty-eighth street, New York city.

Only sacrificial giving by millions of givers will make possible the continuance of this vast work for American soldiers and for those of our allies.

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

(CHAPTER XXVII. Continued.)

"To what lesson do you refer?" asked the prince, impressed in spite of himself, as he gazed at the glowing face opposite him.

"The lesson that never, never must red lips or bright eyes make you false to your country or to your house, even in thought. You command that I release these people at the moment when I touch success. And why? Because you have been impressed with a girl's face."

"It is a lie!" shouted the prince, and started to his feet.

The admiral did not stir, only looked at him; but there was in his eyes a frigid anger which turned the prince cold.

"I beg your pardon, admiral," he stammered. "It may be, in part at least, the truth. But it is not the whole truth. Putting the girl aside, I still think you should release them. One should not behave dishonorably, even to one's enemies."

"They are not my enemies, they are my country's," retorted the admiral, quickly, "and I would point out to you that one can never behave dishonorably in serving one's country. In that service, there are no questions of right and wrong; there is only one question—our country's glory. Any good soldier could tell you that! But perhaps you consider it murder to kill a man in battle, or theft to take the enemy's supplies?"

"No," said the prince, flushing at the mordant irony, "but that is different—that is war. In time of peace—"

"There is no time of peace," broke in the admiral, impatiently. "Only fools believe so. Every thinking man knows that it is war, war, every day of every week. We maneuver for advantage, we build secret defenses, we perfect plans of attack, we prepare night and day for the onset—just as we are preparing at this moment. For what purpose do you imagine that Germany maintains this house, with its grated windows and steel lined doors and heavy bolts, as of a prison? For just such purposes as this! For the detention of her enemies. And it has been used many times—many, many times! And now," he added, in a voice as hard as steel, "as a reparation for your insult, I will ask you to return at once to the consulate, to go to your apartment there and to remain in it until I see you in the morning. If you are wise, you will employ the night in pondering carefully what I have said to you."

White with humiliation, the prince bowed, and stalked from the room. A moment later, the slam of the front door denoted that he had left the house. Pachmann sat for a moment longer, his lips curled in a sardonic smile. Then he touched a bell. A burly fellow in livery answered it.

"Arm yourself," said Pachmann, "and bring your comrade."

The man was back again in a moment, bringing another giant with him. Each had, strapped about his waist, an ammunition belt from which depended in its holster a heavy revolver. They saluted and stood at attention, while the admiral looked them over.

"You will stand guard in the lower hall tonight," he said, at last, "turn and turn about, one sleeping on the floor at the stair foot and with the hall fully lighted. Under no pretext, will you permit any one to enter the house or leave it. In case of any disturbance, of any suspicious circumstance however slight, you will summon me at once. You have revolvers—do not hesitate to use them in case of need—even against a woman. You understand? Good! Has there some baggage come?"

"Two pieces, sir."

"Clear the table and bring them up to me."

He leaned back and finished his cigar, while the men clumsily cleared the table and placed two battered suit cases upon it.

"The servants who prepared the dinner have departed?" the admiral asked.

"They departed some time ago, sir."

"You are sure that all doors and windows are secured?"

"We have just made the round, sir."

"And the young lady?"

"We have heard nothing from her, sir."

"The young man?"

"I glanced in at him, sir, some time ago. He was lying on his bed, with his eyes closed, but I do not think he slept?"

"Did he have dinner?"

"We had no orders to that effect, sir."

"Good; let him go hungry. You will serve him no food until I order it. That is all."

They saluted and withdrew.

Pachmann turned to a leisurely examination of the suit cases. They were unlocked, and he soon found the queer box with sides of glass lined with tin foil. He snatched it up eagerly, but after a glance at it, his face fell.

"So he was telling the truth!" he muttered. "Well, so much the worse for him!"

Nevertheless he examined the box attentively, with minute concentration, noting the arrangement of the interior plates, the scheme of wiring—each detail. Then, with it in his hand, he left the room, saw that his men were on guard, mounted to the upper story, unbolted a door there and entered. Closing the door carefully behind him, he switched on the lights, placed the box on the table, and entered the room beyond. Here, too, he turned on the lights, and stood for a moment contemplating the occupant of the bed, who returned his gaze steadily, with glittering eyes.

"You are awake, then, my dear Vard?" said the admiral, at last.

"As you see."

"You are feeling better, I trust?"

"I am quite well."

"You have had dinner?"

"I cared for none."

"I wish to talk with you for a few minutes."

"It would be a waste of time."

Pachmann paused to look again at the glittering eyes, and the thought flashed through his mind, as it had done more than once before, that he had to do with a madman. An inspired genius, perhaps, but mad, nevertheless. Pachmann knew that there was about madness a certain childishness, and he determined to humor it.

"For you, perhaps, it would be waste of time," he said, approaching the bed and sitting down; "but not for me. My life work has been the study of electrical energy as applied to war, and I fancied myself fairly well informed, when, suddenly, you come and prove to me that I know nothing. That morning, 10 days since, when I stood on the quay at Toulon and saw a great battleship reduced to a twisted wreck, I realized my ignorance, and my heart glowed with admiration for you, my master."

"Yes, I am your master," and Vard raised himself upon one elbow. "Even here, your prisoner, I am still your master."

"I admit it. And I have a proposal to make to you."

"I have no confidence in your proposals."

"Yet listen to this one. Place this power at the emperor's service, and he will name you ruler of any nation you choose — of this one, if it pleases you—and leave you to govern it as seems best to you, without interference of any kind. Think, my friend, what a destiny—free to embody your own ideas in the government of what is in some ways the greatest nation on earth; free to make a paradise here, if you can. And if you succeed, your dream comes true, for all the other nations of the world will follow."

Vard gazed at the speaker with wistful eyes.

"It could come true," he said. "It could come true; it could not fail. But you are too blind, too selfish, too narrow. You are only a German."

"And you?"

"I am a Pole—that is to say a citizen of no country and of every country."

"But you love that country, even though it does not exist?"

"Aye—more than you love yours."

Pachmann was silent a moment thinking deeply.

"Listen, my friend," he said, at last. "I desire to meet you; I will come along the road toward you as far as I am able."

"Yes?"

"I agree to reconstitute Poland. You shall have a country again, and shall be its ruler, if you choose."

The eyes of the inventor glowed for an instant, and then the glow faded and he shook his head.

"You have betrayed me once," he said; "you would betray me again. I will never place this power in the hands of your emperor. He has already shown how he would use it."

"You refer to La Liberte?"

"Yes."

"I alone am responsible for La Liberte. It was I who chose that test—not the emperor."

"You!" said Vard hoarsely, and a slow flush mounted to his cheeks. "You!"

"Yes, I!" and Pachmann cast at the other a mocking and triumphant look. "It was I who compelled your consent; it was I who arranged the details; it was I who assumed the whole burden. For I was determined that even the first test should be of benefit to Germany—and it was! However you may wish it, you cannot restore La Liberte!"

Vard was staring at the speaker with hollow eyes, his face convulsed.

"Did not the kaiser know?" he questioned.

"No one knew but Von Tirpitz, and he was panic stricken. He is old and timid—but I convinced him—I won him over—he could not resist me. Even then, his heart failed him at the last, and he tried to stop me. Luckily, his telegram was delayed — or I should have been compelled to disobey my superior officer. Oh, I admit that it was rash of me," Pachmann added, his face glowing; "I admit that I was risking everything—life, honor, everything; but success excuses rashness—and I succeeded!"

"Yes," said the inventor, slowly, "you succeeded!"

"After that," went on Pachmann, "it was too late to turn back, even had any one wished to do so. Now it is for me to finish this affair."

"How do you propose to finish it?"

Pachmann shrugged his shoulders.

"You are in my hands," he said, "you and your daughter. Heretofore I have been lenient with you, I have been good natured; I hoped that we might reach some agreement, and I have tried to meet you halfway. But my good nature is at an end; I withdraw all my offers. I demand that you place your secret at Germany's disposal."

"And if I refuse?"

"I shall turn the screw!" answered Pachmann, and there was cold menace in his eyes and in his voice.

Vard had raised himself to a sitting posture. Now he swung his feet off the bed.

"I too have a demand to make," he said, his voice a mere whisper. "My patience also is at an end. I demand my freedom and that of my daughter."

"What do you offer in exchange!"

"I offer nothing in exchange!" said Vard, and rose slowly to his feet. "I intend to offer my services to France!"

Pachmann looked at him—at his bent wasted figure, his shaking hands, his trembling knees—a mocking light in his eyes.

"My dear friend," he sneered, "you are mad—quite mad! I have suspected it from the first!"

"You are not mad, M. Vard," said a pleasant voice at the threshold. "And you have your freedom. France accepts your services!"

CHAPTER XXVIII.

CHOCHARD, THE INVINCIBLE.

Pachman jerked around with an oath. At the first glance, he thought it was the prince who stood there, though it had not been the prince's voice. A second glance undeceived him. There was, it is true, a certain puzzling resemblance to the prince, but this man was more strongly built, more graceful—and the prince could never smile like that! And then, with a little bow, the newcomer removed the broad brimmed hat which shadowed his face, and, with a sudden feeling of sickness, Pachmann recognized him.

But the admiral was a brave man, with a nerve not easily shaken; besides, the odds were all in his favor! Yet he realized the need for all his resource, all his self control. At the end of a moment, he rose slowly, almost carelessly.

"Who are you, sir?" he demanded.

"Do you not know me?" laughed the stranger. "Surely, yes! I saw your eyes penetrate this slight disguise. I crossed with you on the Ottilie, admiral, as Andre Chevrial. I believe you even did me the honor to convince yourself that that was really my name. I am, however, better known in Paris as Crochard, L'Invincible!"

"Ah," said Pachmann, with a tightening of the brows, "a spy, then?"

"No, admiral; a patriot like yourself."

"And your business here?"

"I have already stated it: to accept for France the services of this incomparable man."

Something flashed in Pachmann's hand, but even as he jerked up his arm, there was a soft impact, and a revolver clattered to the floor. Crochard sprang for it, seized it, and slipped it into his pocket.

"I was expecting that," he said, still smiling. "Now we can talk more at our ease," and he came into the bedroom, closed the door, placed a chair against it, and sat down. "Pray be seated, M. Vard," he added courteously to the inventor. "And you, admiral."

Pachmann, white with pain, was nursing a numbed and nerveless hand. He sat down slowly, his eyes on the face of his antagonist.

"You should admire this weapon, admiral," Crochard went on, extending for his inspection what looked like an ordinary revolver. "It is a most useful toy, of my own invention—or, perhaps, I would better say adapted by me from an invention of that ingenious Sieur Hyacinthe, who was pistol maker to the Great Louis. Should you ever visit Paris, I should be charmed to show you the original at the Carnavalet. This embodies some improvements of my own. It can, as you have seen, discharge, almost noiselessly, a disabling ball; it can also, not quite so noiselessly, discharge a bullet which will penetrate your body, and which no bone will stop or turn aside. Should you open your mouth to shout, I can, still with this little implement, fling into your face a liquid which will strike you senseless before your shout can come, or a poison a single breath of which means death. And I assure you, my dear admiral, that I shall hesitate no more than you to use any of these agencies which may be necessary."

Pachmann listened, glowering; but, he told himself, he was not yet defeated; and he sat rubbing his hand and measuring his adversary.

"What do you imagine to be the exact nature of the services of which you speak?" he asked, at last.

"Their nature? Why, their nature will be of the same sort as those already offered to your emperor."

"Yes?"

"The position of leader in the movement for world wide disarmament," said Crochard, and smiled as Pachmann's lips whitened. "Ah, my dear admiral, your emperor is too selfish, too ambitious—he has, as an English poet puts it, that ambition which overleaps itself. He should have accepted the arrangement which M. Vard proposed. That would have been glory enough. But no; he must dream of being a greater than Napoleon, of world empire: and in consequence he will lose that which he already has. But I foresaw it; I foresaw it from the moment M. Vard stipulated that Alsace-Lorraine must be returned to France. I knew that your emperor was not great enough—that he has too small a soul—to consent to that restitution!"

Pachmann raised his head slowly.

"So it was you who listened at the door, that night?" he said.

"Yes, it was I. And it was I who discovered that you and a companion whom I will not name waited for sunrise, one Monday morning, on the quay at Toulon. For that, France must have revenge."

Crochard's eyes were gleaming now, and there was no smile upon his lips. Instead there was in his face a deadly earnestness, a fierce hatred, before which Pachmann shrank a little.

"She shall have it!" cried a voice from the bed, where Vard had been bending forward, drinking in every word. "She shall have it!"

"You hear?" said Crochard, and then he smiled again. "Ah, my dear admiral, it was a mistake to insist upon that test! It could have been made, just as well, upon some old hulk of your own—and then France would have had nothing for which to exact vengeance! I pity you; for it is you and you alone, who have brought this retribution to your country. From first to last, you have behaved like a fool in this affair. It was you who betrayed her!"

"I?" stammered Pachmann. "I? In what way? By what means?"

A Colorado farmer has experimented with a straw house which cost him $270. The walls are bales of straw covered with cement. The house is topped with a shingle roof and is said to have the appearance of a concrete building.

Whose House Is Burning?

By Meredith Nicholson.

Civilization may be likened to a house where a family live in comfort and ease and the enjoyment of the privileges and security that represent thousands of years' of labor.

When a house is on fire it becomes the instant duty of the neighbors and of the government immediately responsible for the protection of the householder to render aid—not today or tomorrow but the moment the flames become visible and it is known that the home and its inmates are threatened.

House on fire; We hear cries in the street, the rattle and jar of the engines and hose carts as they hurry to the scene of conflagration. The fire is spreading; not one but a hundred homes are threatened!

When the kaiser began his war for world domination he applied a torch to that house of civilization I have visualized as a home, the repository of every good and perfect gift that has been won for humanity, the very freedom that is its foundation and the peace that is its corner stone.

The kaiser is a mad incendiary. He stole upon the house of civilization in the night and tossed a burning brand through an open window. Like a thief who applies a match to the rear of a house to stampede the inmates and distract their attention while he plunders, the kaiser expected to satisfy a long-pondered scheme of robbery and conquest. Civilization slept the sleep of peace to awake in terror.

The kaiser's army, perfected through years of stern training to aid the pyromaniac lord of the Hohenzollerns in his malign purposes, has resorted to every conceivable atrocity to terrorize civilization—not merely to destroy its house, but to murder the inmates or reserve them for a more hideous fate than death.

When we say that this is a war to make the world a safe place for democracy, we mean also that it is to preserve that house of civilization in which democracy is the altar and sanctuary.

House on fire! It is not for you and me to stand outside and say that it is only a neighbor's house that is menaced. The first German soldier who set foot on Belgium soil threatened your home and mine. He flourished his brand at the house of civilization in which you and I live. He attacked law, liberty, mercy, justice—everything that strengthens and adorns that proud house in which we of America have lived in contentment and peace.

There are things in the humblest home that the owner would not lose without a struggle. When the house gets afire the inmates spring to protect and save those things.

We of America are in this ware to protect and save the house of civilization and the proud trophies that represent not only our own struggles and sacrifices but those we inherited from sires who shed their blood for them.

Put out the fire! The more quickly we realize that it is our house that is burning, the more quickly we shall be free to cut away the blackened walls and make the house habitable and secure. We want to see the firemen disperse the police hustle the incendiary to the lockup, and the adjusters come in and settle the damages!

The way to hasten this consummation is by aiding our firemen—our army and navy—in every possible way. If we can't carry water or wield the ax on burning timbers, we can stand back of the men who are doing the work—our work, yours and mine. We can pour out our dollars to help them. We can see that the fire fighters are fed and clothed while they are on the job; we can take care of them when they fall injured in our cause.

House on fire! Civilization on fire!

The man who says this is not America's war is asleep in a burning house and does not deserve to be saved by the splendid valorous firemen who are fighting to rescue them.

Stamp Pact Broken.

From the Wall Street Journal

International contracts have been smashed right and left in the last three years, but the ruptures have generally been accompanied by full publicity. There has been one exception.

A cardinal pledge of the International Postal union is that the postage stamp representing the unit by which the domestic rate of letter postage is measured shall be in red.

In this country, where 2-cent postage prevailed, red was the color of the stamp of that price. Now that the rate has been raised to 3 cents, we are violating this international agreement by using a stamp which the ordinary individual with his hazy notion of gradations of color would probably guess was lavender.

Canada, where the 2-cent postage prevailing prior to the war, also has raised the rate to 3 cents and has violated this solemn pact of the nations by using a 3-cent stamp in brown—even going us one better by having two or three issues for variety. Thus early has disgrace come upon the countries of the American continent as breakers of international faith!

Suspicious.

From the Omaha World-Herald.

They hadn't been married very long when one evening Mr. Jones came home to find his bride in tears.

"My darling—my darling!" he exclaimed in dismay. "Whatever has happened? Oh, don't weep like that! Tell your husband what is wrong."

"O-o-o, John!" she gasped, as she choked back her sobs. "I—o-o-h, I've lost my diamond engagement ring!"

And again she buried her face in her handkerchief. Then the silence roused her curiosity and she looked up to see her husband smiling strangely at her.

"Do not cry," he said in level tones; "I found it this morning in my trousers pocket!"

To Those Who Feel Poor.

Henry Van Dyke.

I write as your brother.
We are a large family.
This world war, made in Germany against which we are fighting, has sent our incomes down and our expenses up.
The pinch hurts, but it is not going to kill us.
We still have enough and something to spare.
Though we feel poor, don't let us be impoverished by selfish fear!
Let us save in food, in service, in clothes, in luxuries and joy rides—but not in money!
Let us use that by giving it to save the wounded, the suffering, our friends, our country.
Let us keep Christmas this year by keeping up the Red Cross.
Then it will not be a poor Christmas but a rich Christmas to our hearts!

Less Sugar, Better Teeth.

From the Providence Journal.

Dr. Frederick A. Keyes told an audience in Boston that the sugar shortage has already begun to show results in better teeth and improved general health. In 1871, it appears, the annual sugar consumption in the United States was 36 pounds per capita. At the time of the reduction in the supply a few weeks ago it had risen to 82 pounds. It would be interesting to know what the rate is just now. There are 10,000,000 children in the United States who have defective teeth, and no doubt as many more adults. If the lessened eating of sugar makes for better teeth—and there is no reason to doubt it—the present situation is by no means wholly regrettable.

Constitutional Right to Make a Fo[illegible] One's Self.

From West's Docket

Mr. Justice McKenna in pronoun the opinion of the supreme court sus ing the constitutionality of the Ohio "Blue Sky" law (Hall vs. Geiger-Jones Co. supreme court reporter 217) declared self not disposed to give very serious tention to the argument that the act lated the right of freedom of contract did, however, explain the contention haps feeling counsel had pretty well ploded their theory by their own s ment of it, and were "hoist by their petard." The contention ran thus:

That, since the effect of the act necessarily be to prevent more or purchases, it thereby shields contempl purchasers from the loss of property the exercise of their own "defective ments," and puts them as well as the ers under guardianship. The Jus justice then continues "If we may pose that such purchasers could exe liberty to form a defective judgment, resent means of information, as a l tion of their freedom, we must wait they themselves appear to do so."

"Venice Preserved."

From the Springfield Republican.

It is but fair to recall that the trians in 1815 restored the lions of Mark which Napoleon had stolen kept Venice, to be sure, by the 1814, for which Byron denounced C reagh, but they did not harm its ures during the long occupation of they were finally driven out, and might be less anxiety for the art of Italy if Germans were not taking in the raid. It may seem strange nation which has devoted so much to art study should show so little for the beautiful works of antiquity, very likely the Schliamanns and Wi manns do not get commissions army. So every thing portable has and most of the population has fled city that once held the purple seat is drearier than when Byron saw it the Austrian heel:

In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more
And silent rows the songless gondolier
Her palaces are crumbling to the fall
And music meets not always now the ear

Before St. Mark's still glow his steeds of brass,
Their gilded collars glittering in the sun
But is not Doria's menace come to pass?
Are they not bridled?—Venice, lost and won.
Her thirteen hundred years of freedom done,
Sinks like a seaweed, unto whence it rose.

We may still hope for a new edition of the famous old play, "Venice Preserved."

From the New York Times.

Statistical tables prepared by the income tax division of the internal revenue bureau, which became available recently show that in the last income taxing year, 1916, the number of American millionaires increased 7,925 over the previous year.

The income tax returns for the year ending with December, 1916, showed a grand total of 14,771 millionaires. The returns for the year 1916, just made public, show that there are 22,696 American millionaires.

U-BOATS CAN'T KEEP SUPPLIES FROM SAMMIES IN FRANCE

American military supply depot in France.

This picture does not bear out the German claim that submarines are keeping supplies from the Liberty boys in France. Car load after car load of supplies, munitions, food and ordnance are unloaded at this station, nestled in the hills of France and transported by mule drawn wagons to the camp. More supplies are being sent to this district than have ever been there before

FRENCH AND SAMMIES NOW DISALLUSIONED

BY ED L. KEEN.
(General European Manager United Press.)

With the French Army in France, (by mail.) Oct. 26—Sammy is still straining at the leash But he is beginning to understand why he hasn't yet been turned loose against the Hun. So are our good friends the French.

At first there was much disappointment on the part of both the American soldiers and the French people, that our first contingents were not hurried along to the firing line as soon as they had comfortably shed their sea legs.

Said Jacques "Monsieur, you are mos' welcome, but you were much time coming We have been fighting ver' hard three years. Perhaps, it is not so, now you—what you call—hustle some, to make the lost time'"

Answered Sammy "Surest thing you know, French; You can't make it too soon for us Only let us at 'em and we'll show 'em quick enough what they're up against."

Both have been disillusioned The Sammies sensed it first It didn't take them very long to learn that they were densely ignorant of this new style European fighting game When the French chasseurs and the British non coms from Aldershot started to instruct them in the uptodate tricks of the war trade, even the veteran doughboy began to suspect that he was only raw material after all.

And so Sammy buckled down to hard work Although he still grouses, he appreciates now the reason for it all

And the French people, too, are today viewing the situation in its larger aspects. As they have watched the comparatively small first contingents of the American army evolve with remarkable rapidity into modern fighting form they have become impressed with the idea that perhaps after all it would be better for these men to be used as the leaven of the great force now steadily assembling on French soil than to employ them on the front at once Also, that America can perform greater service for France by sending to the front, when all is ready, a big, complete, fully trained, adequately equipped, self contained, self reliant fighting unit, than to dissipate her strength and imperil her efforts by utilizing here and there smaller and less effective organizations.

The French know that the Germans will know the minute American troops reach the front, and that the meeting will be anything but a frolic for our boys. A single division, or even an army corps, might conceivably be cut to pieces if the Germans should determinedly concentrate against it, and then—we would have to start all over again

Hence, both Sammy and Jacques have been curbing their impatience. So far as the "higher commands" are concerned—American, British, French, and Italian—a thorough understanding exists. One may not say when, where, or how America's first real blow will fall; but it is permissible to predict that it will not happen until we are so thoroughly prepared as to insure the most effective work possible for the allies' and America's cause.

Meantime the pioneer American soldier in France is becoming a better soldier every day. Potentially he was a mighty fine soldier when he first landed—even the rookie. You folks who knew him at home would scarcely recognize him now, such has been the miracle wrought by the combination of British and French methods of intensive training—with Pershing improvements.

I saw him in London, marching past Buckingham palace, letting King George and his faithful subjects give him the once-over. Of sturdy framework but sallow skin and flabby muscles; much heftier than Tommy, but with slouching shoulders; sloping his rifle according to his individual fancy; couldn't keep step even when the king was looking—especially to the bagpipe music, which perhaps shouldn't be charged against him.

Today he is the best looking soldier in Europe—erect, well tanned and splendidly muscled. If he doesn't prove to be the best in all respects it won't be for lack of self assurance. That is a big asset in this war, but it has its possible dangers. Just as Tommy and Poilu had to learn respect for Fritz's ability as a soldier—although despising his methods—so Sammy will have to learn it, by experience.

But proud as you would be to see how Sammy has progressed in the profession of arms, you would be prouder still to know how exemplary has been his conduct. He had the admiration of the French people from the start. Now he has their love and confidence. With very rare exceptions—which by reason of the severity of the punishmen inflicted are not likely to be repeated—his behavior toward his hosts has been exactly what you expected it would be.

Even a few days' visit in these American camps—if it were possible to tell you just where they are located you would see how nicely we have responded to French sentiment and tradition while at the same time securing a site most suitable to our training requirements—furnishes sufficient proof that your trust has been worthily placed.

From now on it is up to you—to see that the spirit back of the lines in maintained at as high a pitch as that of the men who are to do your fighting.

BELGIAN ARMY STRONG SINCE REORGANIZATION

Havre, (by mail).—The Belgian army was composed of 117,000 men at the beginning of the war, increased by 20,000 volunteers in August, 1914, and was reduced to 60,000 men after the battle of the Yser. By measures applied to Belgian refugees and by the enlistment of volunteers who braved the live wire barriers raised on the Holland frontier, it now has been brought up to 10 divisions of well trained forces ready to take their part in the offensive in Flanders whenever the word is given by the commander in chief The associated Press is formed by the Belgian minister of war.

"If our army has not undertaken operations of a wider scope up to this time," said the minister, "it is because it does not devolve on it to decide the moment when these operations should begin"

Summarizing the work of the Belgian army during the war and referring to its difficulties and lack of equipment, the minister recalled that in August, 1914, the army had only one machine gun for each 1,060 men was short of three-inch guns and had ammunition for only about 800 shots for each apiece It had no light mortars, no heavy artillery, no grenades, no trench equipment no ambulances no pontoon crews, and not a single motor cycle. It had only 1,000 bicycles, two captive balloons a few superannuated airplanes and a few posts of wireless telegraphy

"The Belgian army prepared more than 250 miles of trenches and rebuilt more than 200 miles of road Eighty different lines of normal gauge railroads were built Battery emplacements were constructed by hundreds, and 13,000 miles of telephone wires were put up, or laid underground

"In August, 1917, the army had 12 times as many machine guns as in 1914, seven times as many field guns and heavy pieces with five times as much ammunition as was on hand at the outset of hostilities. It has 10 times as many airplanes

What Germany Is Eating.

Adele N Phillips in the Atlantic

Chunks of dried sea lion meat were shipped into the country in the manner of jerked beef. Soaked for a number of hours, and cut into small pieces, it was made into a stew with onions. Some people thickened the gravy and served it with spetzel, a south German dumpling made of flour, but, alas, no eggs as in the past. After one or two attacks of nausea people came to like the concoction. It filled a vacuum, and that is everything when one's head is light from a still lighter diet.

The same meat corned and called Robbin's fleisch was sold and served in slices at four marks a pound. It was a very good imitation of corned beef, better than stewed, and could be eaten cold on bread.

As the potatoes became scarce, the bread which had been doled out on allowance began to deteriorate in quality As long as it was composed of 20 per cent of potato flour it was not bad and served to satisfy the children when spread with malt extract, in place of sugar or syrup or the famous kriegsmarmalade, a malt malade made of saccharine, beets, tomatoes and turnips, colored red.

With the reduction of the potato flour in the bread, coarser grains were added, but now 5 per cent sawdust and 5 per cent flour ground from straw are used In consequence people are suffering greatly from anemia, stomach troubles are on the increase, especially ulcers of the stomach and thread worms.

Names No Jokes.

People are telling of a western co-educational establishment which has summoned six of its young women students to appear before a notary, on the campus and make affidavit as to their real names. This comes about by reason of the tendency, among young women, in and out of college, to spell Edith, "Edyth," Grace, "Grayce," Ethel, "Ethyl," Elizabeth, "Elyzabeth," and so on. One reason, presumably, why the managers of the school referred to desire to check this tendency is because they do not wish the young men in the institution to begin writing their names, "Wyllyam," "Arthyr," "Thomys," "Edwyrd," and "Josyph," as some of them have begun doing, but, of course, only for the joke of the thing, thus far. Names, however, are not things to be trifled with.

FRANCE SAVED SOUL OF WORLD.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt.

France embodies all of loveliness and all of valor. Beauty is her handmaiden, and strength her shield bearer, and the shining courage of her daughters has matched the courage of her dauntless sons. For three and a half terrible years she has walked, high of heart, through the valley of the shadow. Her body is in torture, but her forehead is alight with the beauty of the morning. Never in all history has there been such steadfast loyalty in the doing of dangerous duty, such devotion to country, such splendor of service and of sacrifice, and great shall be her reward—for she has saved the soul of the world.

SAVING COAL.

The temperature of the atmosphere in an office or schoolroom or living room should not go above 68 degrees Fahrenheit. It may range with advantage between 65 and 69 degrees. The temperature of workshops should not go above 65 degrees. It may range with advantage between 55 and 65 degrees.

Any number of experiments have shown that low temperatures, 60 to 68 degrees, as compared with the high temperatures which so often prevail in office buildings, schoolrooms, and living places (70 to 85), are favorable to health For instance, a person staying for an hour or more in a warm room is certain to develop about a degree of fever. This leads to colds, infections generally, anemia, fatigue and general rundown conditions.

Several researches have shown that persons working in warm rooms will feel colder than persons in cooler ones. For instance, the Chicago commission on ventilation conducted an inquiry on a large number of high school pupils working in schoolrooms in which the temperature was made to vary for the purposes of the experiment Some pupils were most comfortable at temperatures as low as 55 degrees. A large number were most comfortable at 60 degrees. The temperature of greatest comfort was 68 degrees. None was comfortable at a temperature higher than 74, and yet I have seen hundreds of temperature records of school rooms and offices showing ranges from 75 to 85.

One reason for discomfort in a room where the temperature is high is that the cold air settles to the floor—the heads of the occupants being in air at 85 and their feet in air at, say, 55.

Several researches have shown that men will do more and do it more accurately if the room temperature is reasonably low. As Winslow of Yale puts it, "the effect of warm air is exercised rather upon the will than on the power to work"

He found that stenographers and typists did 6.3 per cent more work when the temperature was 68 degrees than when it was 75 degrees. Men doing moderate manual labor did 15 per cent more work at the lower temperature.

The New York labor commission, in a study of 215 workrooms, printing shops, clothing shops, button factories, cigar shops, and others, found that 73 per cent had an air temperature of 73 degrees or over and 29 per cent had one of over 80 degrees. This meant less work from and poorer health for the employes.

The New York commission on ventilation found that men working in both office and manual labor at temperatures of 68 degrees were described as "playful," "energetic," "inclined to rough house," "good work," "hard to control," "less drowsiness than usual."

The terms employed by the superintendents and the men themselves when speaking of the personnel or the work when the room temperature was 73 were "sleepy," "eyes smarted," "less inclination to work," "lifeless," "drowsy," "more conversation than usual," "work tiresome."

All health authorities agree that a room temperature of 68 degrees Fahrenheit is best for health, as a general rule, that a temperature of more than 70 degrees should not be allowed, and that for certain people and under certain circumstances the temperature may be between 60 and 68. At the same time, they hold that there must be fresh air. The saving of coal must not be effected by stopping ventilation.

St. Louis Sells Coal.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Sixteen cents a bushel is the price charged by the city for coal it sells to poor families.

Thirty cents a bushel is being charged by retail dealers in the poorer residence districts for the same grade of coal, an investigation showed.

The price charged to retail buyers is meant to cover the cost of coal, freight and hauling, but not the clerical work at the stations. Not more than five bushels are sold to one persons. Terms are cash.

Buyers have to take their coal home. The city provides sacks and baskets for those who have not other means of carrying their coal. In cases where it is found that the coal is being resold, the coal buying privilege will be cut off. Park department employes will investigate cases where there is doubt as to the need of the applicant.

Apple Jam.

Pare, cut in quarters and core apples of a tart flavor. To each pound of fruit allow three-quarters of a pound of sugar. Put parings and cores in a saucepan, covering with water and boil one-half hour. Drain and pour the liquid over the apples, cooking until the apples are soft. Strain through a sieve, add the sugar and cook until thick and clear. The addition of lemon adds a good flavor. Boil the grated rind and juice of two lemons to each quart of apple juice.

Fame at Last.

From the Washington Star.

"I jes' knew we'd be famous one day or another," remarked Farmer Corntossel to his wife.

"How do you mean famous?"

"Why, since our boy went into the army everybody is pointin' us out an' talkin' about Josh Corntossel's father and mother."—Washington Star.

AGRICULTURE THE MAINSTAY OF THE NATION

The United States and Canada Have a Great Responsibility.

This is the day when the farmer has his innings. The time was when he was dubbed the "farmer" the "mossback" and in a tone that could never have been called derisive, but still there was in it the inflection that he was occupying an inferior position. The stiff upper lip that the farmer carried, warded off any reproach that his occupation was a degrading one. His hour arrived, though, and for some years past he has been looked up to as occupying a high position.

Agriculture, by a natural trend of economic conditions, stands out today in strong relief, as the leader in the world's pursuits. Never in the nation's history have the eyes of the world been so universally focused on the farm The farmer is the man of importance, the manufacturer of its most necessary product, and he now enjoys the dual satisfaction of reaping a maximum of profit, as a result of his operations, while he also becomes a strong factor in molding the world's destinies.

Manufacturers, business men professional men and bankers realize the importance of agriculture, and gladly acknowledge it as the twin sister to commerce. In commercial, financial and political crises, the tiller of the soil takes the most important place. Maximum prices, the highest in many decades, show the world's recognition of the necessary requirement for more farm stuffs. The time was coming when this would have been brought about automatically, but war time conditions urged it forward, while the farmer was able to secure land at reasonable prices Throughout several of the Western states this condition exists, as also in Western Canada.

Never has such a condition been known in commercial life It is truly an opportunity of a lifetime Large and small manufacturing concerns and practically every other line of business have been limited in their profits to the point of almost heroic sacrifice, while it is possible today to reap dividends in farming unequaled in any other line.

Thirty, and as high as fifty bushels of wheat per acre at $2.20 per bushel and all other farm produce on a similar basis, grown and produced on land available at from $15 to $40 per acre, represents a return of profit despite higher cost of labor and machinery, that, in many cases runs even higher than 100% of an annual return on the amount invested. Such is the present day condition in Western Canada. How long it will last, no one can foretell. Prices for farm produce will likely remain high for many years. Certainly, the low prices of past years will not come again in this generation. The lands referred to, are low in price at present, but they will certainly increase to their naturally productive value as soon as the demand for them necessitates this increase, and this day is not far distant. This demand is growing daily; the farmer now on the ground is adding to his holdings while prices are low; the agriculturist on high priced lands is realizing that he is not getting all the profit that his neighbor in Western Canada is securing; the tenant farmer is seeking a home of his own, which he can buy on what he was paying out for rent, and many are forsaking the crowded cities to grasp these unprecedented opportunities.

The tenant farmer, and the owner of high priced land, is now awakening to the realization that he is not getting the return for his labor and investment that it is possible to secure in Western Canada. Thousands are making trips of inspection to personally investigate conditions and to acquaint themselves with the broadening benefits derived by visiting Western Canada. Such trips awaken in a progressive man that natural desire to do bigger things, to accomplish as much as his neighbor, and frequently result in convincing and satisfying him that God's most fertile outdoors, with a big supply of nature's best climatic and health-giving conditions lies in Western Canada.

The days of pioneering are over; the seeker after a new home travels through all parts of the country on the same good railway trains as he has been accustomed to at home, but on which he has been accorded a special railway rate of about one cent a mile. He finds good roads for automobiling and other traffic; rural telephone lines owned by the provincial governments; rural schools and churches situated conveniently to all; well appointed and homelike buildings, and everywhere an indication of general prosperity; cities and towns with all modern improvements, and what is the most convincing factor in his decision, a satisfied and prosperous people, with a whole hearted welcome to that country of a larger life and greater opportunities.

To Western Canada belongs the distinguished honor of being the holder of all world's championships in wheat and oats for both quality and quantity. For many years in succession Western Canada has proven her claim for supremacy in the most keenly contested National exhibitions and to her is credited the largest wheat and oat yields America has known The natural conditions peculiar to Western Canada and so adaptable to grain growing, has been an insurmountable barrier for her competitors to overcome In the last few years the yields of wheat and oats per acre have surprised the agricultural world As much as sixty bushels of wheat per acre has been grown on some farms, while others have furnished affidavits showing over fifty bushels of wheat per acre, and oats as high as one hundred and twenty bushels per acre. One reputable farmer makes affidavit to a crop return of over fifty four thousand bushels of wheat from a thousand acres While this is rather the exception than the rule these yields serve to illustrate the fertility of the soil and the possibilities of the country, when good farming methods are adopted. Western Canada can surely lay undisputed claim to being "The World's natural bread basket" Advertisement.

A captain engaged on British admiralty service discussing the fate of the men of the Belgian Prince—left to drown when the submarine submerged—told me, writes George Harding in Harper's Magazine, that the same week the Belgian Prince outrage occurred he was in an English naval base, where a German submarine was towed in, after being caught out at sea in a net On opening it they found not only the German crew dead, but also six English captains, captured when their vessels were torpedoed.

"I wonder," he said, "if there is any new way left an allied seaman can meet his fate."

BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP

Why use ordinary cough remedies, when Boschee's German Syrup has been used so successfully for fifty-one years in all parts of the United States for coughs, bronchitis, colds settled in the throat, especially lung troubles. Sold in all civilized countries, 30 and 90 cent bottles.—Adv.

A Costly Joke.

I was the new manager of a small hotel which was "bidding" to obtain as guests twenty railroad men who were to be in town for some time, writes T. W. K., in the Chicago Herald. As the water in the town was not of the best I thought I would "put one over" on my rival and get some water by a private pumping system from a small stream near by. The dinner—the first meal, which was to decide whether they would stay at my hotel—was done to a turn just as the men came trooping in. They were served. As the girls went to pour out the extra fine mountain stream-water they found three or four minnows in each water bottle. Afterward I found out it was the work of a practical joker, but it was too late to save my reputation.

Building Language.

"Language is a city to the building of which every human being brought a stone."—Emerson.

Doesn't Worry Them.

Shortage of paper does not worry the persons who visit the hostelries only to write letters on hotel stationery.

Both Legs Guilty.

Charles had formed the habit of runaing off to the neighbors and even to the nearby stores. As a punishment for this his mother one day tied him to the library table, tying one end of the rope to his leg, the other to the table. Watching the proceeding with interest, he remarked: "Tie the nover leg, too, mamma, they bof runned away."

Longfellow's Inspiration.

Hawthorne told Longfellow the story of Evangeline, adding that he had been urged to write a romance based on it, but thought it better suited for verse. The story of Hiawatha, related to Schoolcraft by Abraham Le Fort, an Onondaga chieftain, furnished the poet with the outline of his embellished verse. The "Tales of a Wayside Inn" were suggested by an old colonial hostelry at Sudbury, Mass., which still is in existence.

Ordinary Common Sense—Sensible Thrift—and Maxwell Motor Cars

Common sense says to you, "Buy a Maxwell Car and use it."

The American people are going forward—not backward.

That is the purpose of the great war in which we are now engaged.

The success of the Nation depends on healthy business activity over the country—and sensible thrift.

Healthy business depends on the utilization of every possible labor-saving, time-saving, money-saving device known.

The light-weight, economical Maxwell—in passenger service—taking you where you have to go on business, helping you relieve delivery congestion—is one of the greatest known labor-saving, time-saving, money-saving devices.
